The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

NEW SENATOR

INTRODUCTION

The Hon. the Speaker having informed the Senate that there was a senator without, waiting to be introduced—

The following honourable senator was introduced; presented Her Majesty's writ of summons; took the oath prescribed by law, which was administered by the Clerk; and was seated:

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc, P.C., of Cap de Cocagne, New Brunswick, introduced between Hon. Allan J. MacEachen, P.C. and Hon. Jean Le Moyné.

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the honourable senator named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the Constitution Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY GOVERNOR GENERAL

The Honourable Jean Beetz, Deputy of Her Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne—

The Hon. the Speaker commanded the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to proceed to the House of Commons and acquaint that House that:

It is the desire of the Honourable the Deputy Governor General that they attend him immediately in the Senate Chamber.

The House of Commons being come.

The Hon. the Speaker said:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that Her Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under Her Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable Jean Beetz, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, her Deputy, to do in Her Excellency's name all acts on her part necessary to be done during Her Excellency's pleasure.

The said Commission was then read by the Clerk.

The Hon. the Speaker said:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have it in command to let you know that Her Excellency the Governor General does not see fit to declare the causes of her summoning the present Parliament of Canada until a Speaker of the House of Commons shall have been chosen, according to law; but this afternoon at the hour of three o'clock, Her Excellency will declare the causes of her calling Parliament.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

COMMUNICATION FROM GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a communication had been received from the Secretary to the Governor General, as follows:

RIDEAU HALL

OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

5 November 1984

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that Her Excellency the Governor General will arrive at the Main Entrance of the Parliament Buildings at 2.45 p.m. on this day, Monday, the 5th day of November, 1984.

When it has been signified that all is in readiness, Her Excellency will proceed to the Chamber of the Senate to open formally the First Session of the Thirty-Third Parliament of Canada.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Esmond Butler
Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

The Senate adjourned until 2.30 p.m.

SECOND SITTING

The Senate met at 2.30 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

The Hon. the Speaker: As there is no business before the Senate, is it your pleasure, honourable senators, that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure to await the arrival of Her Excellency the Governor General?

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 2.45 p.m., Her Excellency the Governor General having come and being seated upon the Throne—

The Hon. the Speaker said:

Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod,

You will proceed to the House of Commons and acquaint that House that it is the pleasure of Her Excellency the Governor General that they attend her immediately in the Senate Chamber.

The House of Commons being come,

Their Speaker, the Hon. John Bosley, said:

May it please Your Excellency,

The House of Commons has elected me their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfil the important duties thus assigned to me.

If, in the performance of those duties, I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me, and not to the Commons, whose servant I am, and who, through me, the better to enable them to discharge their duty to their Queen and Country, humbly claim all their undoubted rights and privileges, especially that they may have freedom of speech in their debates, access to Your Excellency's person at all seasonable times, and that their proceedings may receive from Your Excellency the most favourable construction.

The Hon. the Speaker of the Senate answered:

Mr. Speaker, I am commanded by Her Excellency the Governor General to declare to you that she freely confides in the duty and attachment of the House of Commons to Her Majesty's Person and Government, and not doubting that their proceedings will be conducted with wisdom, temper and prudence, she grants, and upon all occasions will recognize and allow, their constitutional privileges. I am commanded also to assure you that the Commons shall have ready access to Her Excellency upon all seasonable occasions and that their proceedings, as well as your words and actions, will constantly receive from her the most favourable construction.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Her Excellency the Governor General was then pleased to open the First Session of the Thirty-third Parliament with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate,

Members of the House of Commons:

It is with great pride and pleasure that I welcome you, in my capacity as the Canadian representative of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, to this, the First Session of the thirty-third Parliament of Canada.

Canadians rejoiced this year in the visit of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip to the bicentennial celebrations in New Brunswick and Ontario, and to several communities in Manitoba. For Canadians the Monarchy is a precious link to the centuries of history and tradition that form our parliamentary democracy. The Crown symbolizes our democratic values, and helps safeguard the freedom and liberty that are the foundation of our system. The Queen as Head of the Commonwealth personifies the common bond of that association of nations and its ideals. An example to all who would serve, hers is a life consecrated to service.

Earlier this fall Canadians from coast to coast had the unique privilege of greeting His Holiness Pope John Paul II. The welcome accorded His Holiness expressed our respect and esteem. It also reflected the spirit of fraternity and generosity that exists in a Canadian society of diverse races and creeds. Pope John Paul's visit has helped Canadians to see anew that the enhancement of justice and peace can be a reality at home, and must be our vocation in the world. For this, and for his moral and spiritual leadership, Canadians express their heartfelt appreciation.

In these first months of my tenure as Governor General, I, too, have been afforded the wonderful opportunity to travel to the various regions of this beautiful land. The warmth and enthusiasm of the reception I have received from Canadians in Quebec, New Brunswick, and most recently in my home province of Saskatchewan, has touched me deeply, and I look forward with great anticipation to completing my tour of the provinces and territories. It becomes increasingly clear with each passing day that the confidence I hold in the strength, character and goodness of Canadians is well-founded and that we are indeed a rich and privileged nation.

Canadians take pride in the participation of the first Canadian astronaut, Commander Marc Garneau, in the Challenger space shuttle program. His voyage is the latest, and most exciting, of recent Canadian contributions to the conquest of space. We welcome the opportunity to cooperate with the United States in their space program. As a result, Canadians are playing a part in achieving the great benefits to humanity that space exploration can make possible.

In July, all Canadians rejoiced in the brilliant performance of our athletes at the Summer Olympic Games in Los Angeles. My government salutes the hard work and dedication of our athletes, coaches and officials. Their excellence serves as a model of national achievement for all Canadians.

Reconciliation and National Unity

This is the inauguration of a new Parliament. Let it be also the beginning of a new era of national reconciliation, economic renewal and social justice. In this spirit, my Ministers will honour the mandate entrusted to them by the people of Canada.

While there are no easy solutions to the great problems facing our country, there is a new will among Canadians to make a fresh start in the search for answers. For the first time in many years all regions of the country are represented in a national government. The mandate received by my Ministers is a magnificent opportunity to build a renewed national consensus.

First, you must critically examine the relationship of Parliament with the people of Canada. Members of the House of Commons will be asked to approve the appointment of a parliamentary task force on reform of that House. The central focus of this task force will be the enhancement of the role of the private member. From that perspective the task force will examine and make recommendations concerning the powers, practices, organisation and resources of the Commons.

Second, the massive undertaking that is the government of Canada must be made to respond to the individual citizen, wherever and however it touches him or her. A committee of Ministers headed by the Deputy Prime Minister has begun a review of all government programs. The objective is to reform and simplify the operations of government. From the citizen's standpoint, government will be made more understandable, more accessible, and more sensitive.

The taxation system will be made simpler and fairer and more accountable to the people's representatives in Parliament. The rights of taxpayers must be protected. In particular, legislation will be presented to ensure that no taxpayer has to pay taxes in dispute before an impartial hearing has been concluded.

Thirdly, a priority goal of my Ministers will be to breathe a new spirit into federalism and restore the faith and trust of all Canadians in the effectiveness of our system of government.

A constant process of consultation and cooperation must be restored. My Ministers are regularly meeting their provincial colleagues to eliminate irritants and to improve services to people where the federal and provincial governments have joint responsibilities.

My government's management of federal-provincial relations will pursue three basic objectives: to harmonize policies of our two orders of government, to ensure respect for their jurisdictions, and to end unnecessary and costly duplication.

National unity also demands that the two levels of government cooperate in supporting official language minorities and in fostering the rich multicultural character of Canada. My government is committed to ensuring that the equality of the two official languages—so vital to our national character and identity—is respected in fact as it is in law. My Ministers acknowledge the need for ongoing improvements and for vigilance in this indispensable area of our national life.

The reality of Canada is one of distinct regional identities, each rooted in many generations of history; of diverse cultures; of regional economic strengths: a country of many parts whose people share a profound attachment to one Canada.

My Ministers are determined to achieve a national consensus which will reflect that reality. A national consensus is also needed to reduce the persistent isolation of Canada's regions, to meet the challenges of economic and social disparity, to revitalize the strength of our traditional resource industries, such as agriculture, forestry, mining, the fishery and tourism, and to ensure that our critical transportation and communication links better serve the national purpose.

Ultimately such a new consensus must be reflected in the fundamental law of our land, for it is obvious that the constitutional agreement is incomplete so long as Québec is not part of an accord. While their principal obligations are to achieve economic renewal, my Ministers will work to create the conditions that will make possible the achievement of this essential accord. In this work, the cooperation of all partners in Confederation will be necessary.

Their generous cooperation is also needed to honour the commitment to Canada's aboriginal peoples contained in the Constitution Act of 1982. For these peoples, as for all Canadians, the high expectations that attended the act of patriation must not be disappointed.

Reconciliation and Economic Consensus Building

Nowhere is the need for national reconciliation more urgent than in Canada's economic life. Our repeated failure in recent years to achieve our economic potential cries out for correction by a truly sustained, co-operative and national effort. First Ministers will meet next week to discuss the agenda for a First Ministers' Conference on the Economy. My government will soon announce the date of a national Economic Summit to bring together important groups in our economy.

Thus are my Ministers embarked on the long, complex and painstaking road of building a national economic consensus. The national Economic Summit will not be the culmination of this process, but its beginning. At the table will be representatives of groups such as consumers, women, native peoples, business, labour and government. Their goal is to establish a new and productive climate and context for economic decision-making in Canada.

In this regard, there can be no doubt of the importance or legitimacy of the trade union movement in Canada, or of the desirability of both management and labour playing a critical role in the consultative process through which the new national agenda is established.

Discussion of certain economic priorities, an understanding of the respective roles of the principal economic partners, a commitment to some immediate courses of action: such an outcome would make the Economic Summit a success.

Future summits could address in more detail issues such as the enhancement of productivity, and the responsibilities of industry, labour and government in training and technology. Over time, mutual confidence and a sense of shared responsibility for our national economy must lead to consensus on even more basic issues: how to share the benefits of economic growth, how to share the burdens of economic adjustment, how to preserve the integrity of our unique natural environment, and how to ensure that the ideal of social justice is pursued through programs that meet contemporary needs and circumstances.

In the absence of a national consensus, economic underachievement would be Canada's misfortune for many years to come. The process of consensus-building will engage the private sector partners in consultation and cooperation on economic goals. In such a context, government would act as guide, mediator and catalyst, becoming less intrusive in the private sector but vigilant over the integrity of the national economy and of national standards.

Economic Renewal: A Three Part Strategy

The process of consensus building will take time. Meanwhile there are some important initial steps that the federal government can take to help generate economic renewal. The three-part strategy of my Ministers is to restore fiscal responsibility, remove obstacles to growth, and encourage new investment.

Later this week the Minister of Finance will describe in detail the state of the economy and of federal public finances.

He will announce a plan designed to reduce the deficit in an orderly, balanced and fair manner, and to control the growing burden of the public debt.

That we must deal urgently with the deficit is beyond dispute. If allowed to continue to grow out of control, it will consume our available financial resources, undermine our capacity to respond to new opportunities, put increased pressure on interest rates, and inhibit investment and growth in our economy.

Second, my government will pursue approaches to improve the efficiency and flexibility of our capital markets; to improve job opportunities for Canadians through responsive market-oriented training programs; and to increase investments in research and development to improve our productivity. Proposals will be placed before you to improve the market environment by changes in competition laws and the regulatory framework of the financial services industry.

Third, my government will introduce for consideration during this session proposals to enhance risk taking, innovation and reward among entrepreneurs, especially in the small and medium-sized business sector.

Initiative will be taken to stimulate both domestic and foreign investment. My government is determined to regain Canada's reputation as a reliable and profitable place to do business.

This three-part strategy is aimed at renewing economic growth in order to provide the jobs our people need and to address the continuing tragedy of youth unemployment. My government views unemployment as Canada's most debilitating problem and most critical national challenge. For this reason the need to stimulate job-creating investment is urgent. My Ministers will be taking action to address these compelling issues.

My government recognizes that measures to improve and expand skill training and retraining are essential elements of a sound approach to providing job opportunities. During this session, you will be asked to consider an innovative employment strategy that will be cost effective and oriented to the private sector. It will be introduced following intensive consultations with the provinces, labour and business.

Social Justice

My government is determined to ensure that social justice in Canada keeps pace with the changing needs and circumstances of our people. In this respect the most significant development of recent years is the greater participation of the women of Canada and their rightful claim to equality with men everywhere in our society.

As the women of Canada know, there is some distance between the principle of equality, widely accepted, and its reality, still far short of achievement. It is the duty of Parliament and government to help ensure that Canadian society travels that distance as quickly as possible. This will sometimes require the exercise of your power, and it will always need the power of your example.

Economic equality is the vehicle through which women will come to full partnership and participation with men in our society. Parliament has committed the federal jurisdiction to equal pay for work of equal value. My government agrees that this concept is one of the keys to the achievement of economic equality for women. My Ministers will enlist the cooperation of women and men in the private and public sectors in seeking to define further and to implement this concept. My government will also accelerate efforts to increase employment opportunities for women in the federal government and its agencies, boards and corporations.

You will be asked to consider a number of important legislative initiatives, including removal of the discriminatory clauses in the Indian Act, amendments to the Divorce Act, and measures to control pornography and sexually abusive broadcasting. My Ministers will shortly be initiating discussions with the provinces to establish a national system for the enforcement of maintenance orders. In consultation with the provinces, my government will take action to provide additional assistance to the victims of family violence.

My government has as a high priority measures to support and strengthen the Canadian family, which is the cornerstone of our society. The need for accessible and affordable child care has in recent years come to the forefront of the social agenda facing Canada. In an effort to reach a national consensus on options in this area, you will be asked to establish a parliamentary task force on the future of child care in Canada.

Canadians value and support the comprehensive social security system that has been put in place over many years by the federal and provincial governments. Many areas of this system must be strengthened to respond to the changing nature and needs of our society. It is time to recognize also the responsibility we all share to bring those amongst us who suffer from physical and mental disabilities into the productive mainstream of Canadian life.

My government will enter discussions with the provinces aimed at a comprehensive overhaul of the Canadian pension system, including such matters as portability, vesting, survivors' benefits, and pension coverage of women. An important element of this approach will be the consideration of measures designed to encourage Canadians to save for their retirement.

Consultations will also begin with the provinces to consider the most effective means of providing increased federal support for the improvement of community-based health care.

During the coming session, you will be asked to consider legislation to extend the income tested spouse's allowance to widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 regardless of the age of their spouse at death. My Ministers will introduce measures to improve the financial situation of Canada's war veterans.

As a country rich in human resources, Canada owes much to those who have dedicated themselves to cultural, artistic and athletic endeavour. In a variety of areas, my government will be addressing itself to the challenge of encouraging those individuals who inspire Canadians to new levels of excellence.

Law and Public Safety

Canadians are deeply troubled by the incidence of crime, especially crimes of violence, in our society. Most abhorrent to a nation respectful of the law are acts of violence against guardians of the law whom we have appointed to protect us. The recent murders of several policemen in Canada have shocked our people. Parliament shares the sense of sadness and loss felt by the families and colleagues of those policemen who died on duty.

There have been many studies of the corrections system in recent years and there have been numerous successful reforms. But it is obvious that there are grave defects in the system and my government accepts its responsibility to rectify these quickly. Legislation will therefore be placed before you to eliminate certain problems and abuses in the corrections system. Meanwhile administrative measures are being taken to protect better the public and the public's peace officers.

During this session, Parliament will be asked to consider amendments to the Criminal Code to deal more effectively with impaired driving, soliciting, computer crime, and sentencing. We will work closely with the provinces in the areas of family law, crime prevention and assistance to victims of crime.

In the longer term, my government will address, in cooperation with the provinces, other anomalies in the fields of criminal and corrections law that are causing much public concern.

Renewed Canadian Internationalism

In Canada's past there is a luminous tradition of internationalism. Canadians have fought in two World Wars and in the United Nations action in Korea. Our armed forces have served in peacekeeping roles in distant lands. Our statesmen have been at the forefront in the founding of NATO and in the quest for arms control. Our country has successfully championed racial equality at critical moments in the life of the Commonwealth, and through private and public agencies contributed to international development.

It is the purpose of my government to renew this tradition of constructive Canadian internationalism.

Our relationship with the United States affects virtually every aspect of our national life. It is essential to our security and prosperity. It expresses values shared by the free peoples of our two nations. Beneath the myriad of issues to be discussed and conflicts to be resolved, beyond the hundreds of points of contact that take place daily between two governments and two economies, there are wellsprings of trust between two peoples.

My government has taken the initiative to restore a spirit of goodwill and true partnership between Canada and the United States. My government is pleased by the positive response it has received in both the government and private sectors of the United States.

There are many areas where the national interests or the national policies of the two countries diverge or compete. There are, as well, numerous and as of yet untapped possibilities for fruitful cooperation between our two countries. Restoring a climate of goodwill between our governments was an essential step towards the resolution of our conflicts and the realization of our opportunities. My government views this initiative as a confirmation of our national strength and maturity.

Vital as our relationship with the United States is, my Ministers are determined that Canadian internationalism will again be active and constructive in the wider world. The main objectives of my government are clear: to defend freedom and preserve peace; to prevent nuclear confrontation; to improve trading relations; to build a healthier world economy. For Canada, the way to these objectives lies in concerted action with other nations in every part of the world—allies, economic partners, competitors, friends and adversaries. There is surely none with whom a measure of common ground cannot be sought and found in the pursuit of these humane objectives.

My government is determined that Canada will again play its full part in the defence systems of NATO. Only in this way do we earn the right to full consultation and participation in the policies of that alliance. From this prudent and responsible position, Canada will work unceasingly with other nations, in every available forum, to halt the spread of nuclear weapons and prevent their development and use. Patience and perseverance we will need, for in this endeavour even the smallest progress is worthy of the greatest effort.

Canada's opportunity to influence the course of world events lies primarily in sound multilateral institutions. This is as true of economics as it is of defence, of development, and of disarmament.

Canada cannot prosper without international trade. The dominant part played by trade with the United States is obvious, and my government is exploring with our neighbour new approaches to a better and mutually advantageous trading relationship. But geography has also endowed Canada with an oceanic link to the promising new horizons of the Pacific Rim and to our traditional trading partners in Western Europe. My government will pursue with vigour and imagination new opportunities in these areas.

Canada also has a vital stake in the elimination of barriers to trade, commerce and investment on a global basis. In this connection, there is an urgent need for a concerted attack on non-tariff barriers which have become increasingly insidious and more prevalent. Acknowledging that no country, including Canada, is blameless, my government declares its willingness to do its part in a renewed multilateral effort to remove these obstructions in the international marketplace.

Canada's record in official development assistance has on the whole been constructive. My government recognizes the continuing need for these programs, including support for the cost-effective and valuable humanitarian work done internationally by our voluntary and non-governmental organizations. But it is striking to observe how much hardship has occurred, how much debt burden has increased, how much economic activity has been held back in developing countries because of world recession, unstable markets and trade barriers. A successful attack on these problems will accelerate economic development and social progress in many of these countries. The alleviation of unconscionable human misery will result.

During this session, you will be asked to address this and other commitments and responsibilities of Canada in the world. A special parliamentary committee will conduct a full review of the main components and objectives of our international relations.

My government is convinced that Canada's defence forces urgently require a new definition of their role in keeping with present day conditions. The strategic context in which we defend our own territory and that of our allies has changed considerably since the early 1970s, when the government last carefully considered this matter. My Ministers are undertaking a comprehensive examination of these matters. The purpose is to clarify the mandate of our military and to give them the resources they need to do their job.

A Time For Renewal

This new Parliament is an historic opportunity to overcome past divisions in our country, and to purge the spirit of confrontation from the conduct of the nation's affairs.

The purpose of my government is to renew the confidence of Canadians that Parliament is truly the voice of the people, that government is their servant, and that federalism is the means to harmonize and preserve the splendid diversity of this land.

Above all, my government will enlist the active support and participation of Canadians themselves as we search for a new way of addressing our national responsibilities: a consensus in our economic life, tolerance in our national life, and a deep commitment to social justice and peace, at home and in the rest of world.

Members of the House of Commons:

You will be asked to appropriate the funds required for the services and payments authorized by Parliament.

Honourable members of the Senate,

Members of the House of Commons:

In the great tasks of national reconciliation, economic renewal, and social justice to which you are called in this Parliament, may Divine Providence guide your every effort.

THE SENATE

EXPRESSIONS OF WELCOME AND APPRECIATION

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, now that we have had the benefit of the new prayers as uttered by the Speaker, and the lights have been turned down and a decent gloom has returned to the chamber, I would like to have the permission of the house to make reference to domestic interests before we proceed to the business that has caused this Parliament to be assembled, because it will give me an opportunity to say something about some of the personalities in this chamber.

I am sure that members who have been sitting here for some time would like me to make a welcoming reference to those ten new senators who took the oath of office yesterday. I must say that I watched with some interest as the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition, Senator MacEachen, introduced nine new men and women to the Senate and conducted them to their seats. As I see them now seated in the ranks of Tuscany, I confess to some rueful emotions. It would have suited me a little better had I been able to bring in one or two or maybe three new members to make those of us who sit in this small enclave of government supporters feel a little less like Horatio on the bridge.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You can go as high as five.

Senator Roblin: However that may be, it does not prevent me from extending to the new senators a very cordial greeting and welcome to this house, and I do so to Senator Marchand, Senator Hays, Senator Fairbairn, Senator Kenny, Senator De Bané, Senator LeBlanc, Senator Corbin, Senator Lefebvre and Senator Turner. These recruits will soon become familiar with the special atmosphere of our unique legislative chamber.

Here is a body that operates in its own quiet, unspectacular way, perhaps more nonpartisan than other bodies we can think of. Senate politics is a little less strident, party feeling a little less intense but, at the same time, with ample room to make a contribution to good general government and to regional interests.

I am sure that none of the new members will take umbrage if I make special reference to the presence here today of the new Leader of the Opposition, the Honourable Senator MacEachen. He has had a career in the House of Commons that few can match. I think he has held every senior portfolio at the disposal of that house with one exception. I am not sure that he ever aspired to that position, but I am sure that if he had he would have filled it with the same degree of expertise and ability that he filled the rest. His has been an unparalleled career. His most considerable talents as a parliamentarian and as a public man will contribute to the formation of sound laws and good legislation in this house.

Apart altogether from the changes that the election has caused with respect to where people sit in this chamber, senators will be aware that there has been some change in the responsibilities allotted to some of us. That change affects my colleague, Senator Flynn, who has a new place in the front row of the government benches. I think there is very little in federal politics that Jacques Flynn has not done. He has been a member of the House of Commons and a cabinet minister in two administrations. He has been a Senate leader, both in opposition and in government and, in my opinion, had he so wished he would still be in the cabinet today.

For 17 years Senator Jacques Flynn was the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party in the Senate. He conducted himself in that office with grace, wit and wisdom—a delightful mix of those explosive qualities we sometimes see in the descendants of French and Irish ancestry.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: These combined qualities have made him a good leader with a warm personality—a friend to all, and to none more than myself.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Senator Roblin: I have been told that one of the major points on Senator Flynn's secret agenda is to improve the French language, and if that is the case, with such an illustrious and benevolent professor, one cannot fail to be a diligent student.

Senator Flynn is a francophone and a Quebecker. Throughout his remarkable career, in the Senate and elsewhere, he has always been a most eloquent spokesman for Quebec and an ardent defender of the rights of that province within the Canadian Confederation.

The Senator's voice has always been strong and clear on the subject of a Canadian Constitution in which Quebec would have the place to which it is entitled. I predict, and in fact I hope very earnestly, that we shall continue to receive Senator Flynn's advice on issues of vital importance to the future of our country. We shall always listen to what he has to say with the respect due a renowned Parliamentarian and statesman.

[English]

I am certainly glad I am still sitting beside him.

I wish to pay my respects, and I know the respects of all members of the Senate, to another distinguished colleague of ours. He is another former Leader of the Government in the Senate and cabinet minister. I am referring to Senator Bud Olson, who I think would like to be described as a "member of Parliament". I have not forgotten that, Senator Olson.

He has been, and is, one of the leading personalities of the Trudeau administration, both in the House of Commons and in the Senate. Senator Olson brings a calm and judicious approach to public affairs. It is impossible to fault the careful consideration which he has brought to his official duties. I know, because many of us have tried more than once to fluster him or to get behind him during Question Period in this house, all to no avail. He stood us all off with no trouble whatsoever. I just hope that I am as successful as he was in discharging that function.

However, there is a deep fund of goodwill in this house for Senator Olson. We continue to expect that he will show that same dedication to his duty and to service that we have come to see in such an excellent colleague.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: I wish to say something now about a public man from Nova Scotia—or, to be more precise, a public man from Cape Breton. I do not know whether he will appreciate this comment; I will try it anyway. I look upon him as somewhat of a father figure in this house. I am not quite sure that he would altogether approve of that description. I know that he has been a teacher—in fact, he has been a teacher all his life. He has been a lawyer, a soldier and a cabinet minister. However, he is best known to many of us for the 22 years during which he was the chief whip—I might even say the only whip—of the Progressive Conservative Party in this house. He has now been transferred to another front bench seat; and this time, Senator Macdonald, you can keep it even when Joe Sullivan comes into this house. There will be no problems in that respect.

Senator Roblin: Under Senator Macdonald's benign hands the Conservative caucus, which is occasionally fractious, has consented to be advised over the years. He exemplifies the art of party management brought to its best degree. At the same time, I noted that he was always able to maintain cordial relations with his opposite number, the whip of the other party. However, Senator Petten is an easy man to be cordial with, so I do not know who should get the credit for that situation.

John M. Macdonald's record is hard to match, but he is here to see that we continue to try to match it. He is one of those men blessed with the gift of succinct expression, and I am sure we will be hearing a good deal more from him in his role on the front bench. With all due deference to three other senators in this house—and perhaps more—I would describe Senator Macdonald as the sage of Cape Breton. We look forward to hearing his voice being raised in this house on many suitable occasions.

[Senator Roblin.]

This concludes the remarks that I had intended to make in reference to the changes that we see in the chamber. I shall reserve my expression of appreciation of our new Speaker for a more traditional occasion, namely when I participate in the debate on the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I think that would be the proper time to make my comments with respect to our new Speaker.

Also, I shall seek another occasion in this house—perhaps next Tuesday—to offer tributes to Senator Riley, and to bring to the notice of the Senate the contributions of former Senator Cook and former Senator Donahoe.

I thank the house for affording me this opportunity.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Roblin has referred to the special atmosphere that prevails in this chamber, an atmosphere of gentility. I am not sure that, after my experience in the other place, I shall be able immediately to emulate the genteel habits of my colleagues in the Senate. Quite apart from that, I am touched by the very warm welcome that has been extended to me by the Leader of the Government in the Senate and to the other new senators whom I had the honour to introduce yesterday.

I must say that I was quite pleased to be a member of the class of November 5, 1984, because each of those introduced has the potential of making a continued contribution to the public life of Canada. Senator Roblin, no doubt, with the efflux of time, will feel the special thrill that is associated with introducing colleagues to this chamber, and of course, we shall applaud him on that day.

I should like to mention that all of the new senators have been associated with the political process in Canada, either as members of the government, or as Members of Parliament, or as members of the staff of the Prime Minister, or in other ways. Senators Marchand, De Bané and LeBlanc have been colleagues of mine in the Government of Canada. Senators Lefebvre, Turner and Corbin have, each in his own way, held important positions in the House of Commons. At one time or another, Senator Lefebvre and Senator Turner were chief government whip, and I certainly had the opportunity to work closely with each of them. Senator Corbin was chairman of our national caucus and Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons. Senator Fairbairn and Senator Kenny acquired a great amount of experience from working with the former Prime Minister. Of course, Senator Hays is the son of a former Minister of Agriculture and former senator.

I am sure that each of us is looking forward to the future and will attempt to make a contribution to the political and legislative life of our country.

I congratulate Senator Roblin on his appointment as Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am sure his tenure in that post will be considerably longer than mine. Perhaps I have achieved a record in that regard. I certainly know about Senator Roblin's career before he was summoned to the Senate, and know from my colleagues what a formidable debater and skilled parliamentarian he is. I look forward to working constructively with him during the sittings of the Thirty-third Parliament of Canada.

Senator Flynn is an old friend and former member of the House of Commons with whom I have been able to maintain an association over the years. I believe that every word uttered by Senator Roblin was fully deserved.

Honourable senators, I do not wish to prolong my comments except to say that I share in the remarks made by the Leader of the Government about Senator Olson and Senator Macdonald. We know what Bud Olson has contributed, and those of us from Cape Breton have had an appreciation, over many years, of the contribution Senator Macdonald has made.

I am reminded by my colleague, Senator Frith, that I have not mentioned my colleague, the Honourable Roméo LeBlanc, who was sworn in after we other new senators were. I include him in the group I mentioned earlier as my having been involved with in the Government of Canada.

With those words, may I join Senator Roblin in adding to that special atmosphere that prevails in this place.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I rise actually to speak on another subject, not to respond to the kind remarks that have been made, although I appreciate them. It is gratifying to hear such pleasant remarks made about me while I am still here. Normally, such remarks are made after a fellow has gone. I do appreciate hearing them and thank my own leader and the Leader of the Opposition, the Honourable Senator MacEachen.

I am especially pleased that reference has been made to the fact that we have another senator from Cape Breton, because I am sure that the whole tone of this place will change now that there are five senators from Cape Breton.

While Senator Roblin was speaking, one thing occurred to me. It was that I just did not like the reference he made to me as a father figure. I did not understand that!

On behalf of Senator Flynn and myself, I thank you for your kind remarks.

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to take a few minutes to express my appreciation to Senators Roblin and MacEachen for the very kind and generous words they have said about me and my activities.

I sincerely appreciate the kindness shown in words and deeds in this place during the years and months when I had the responsibility of being Leader of the Government in this chamber. There are a number of people in this chamber, and I cannot mention them all by name, to whom I also owe a great deal of appreciation for the co-operation that they gave during that period.

I should also say to Senator Roblin that certain practices were adopted—and, I suppose, practices can very quickly become new rules and traditions in this chamber—that I hope he will not forget now that we have switched positions. I also ought to say that I appreciate his mentioning that certain activities for which I had some responsibility I carried on in a certain way. He expresses the hope that he may be able to do as well. I hope that I, in turn, can perform as well and perhaps carry into practice some of the rules which he was instrumental in making, in attempting to change some of the practices in the Senate. I have always been one who believed in the evolution of rules—not in revolution. Certainly, some advantages were gained in terms of the opposition carrying out its function. I hope he will not forget that because we intend to pursue them with some vigour.

In conclusion, I would like to say a special thank you in expressing my appreciation to Senator Flynn. He, at all times, carried out his responsibility as Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Olson: He carried out that responsibility in the best interests of his party and his colleagues, but also recognizing the responsibility that he had towards the service to the public rendered by this chamber. He carried that out in a very responsible and reasonable manner all through the time when he and I held our respective offices.

I believe it should be acknowledged that there are certain actions we have to take in carrying out those responsibilities and, in my view, his attitude and his actions were great examples of how that should be done.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I should like to make reference to the fact that Sunday next, November 11, is Remembrance Day. It is on that day that we pause from our usual activities to honour and pay tribute to our war dead. We honour them on that day in a very formal way. We honour those who died in two World Wars and in the Korean Conflict while serving in Canada's armed forces. Canadians believe that it is right, proper and just that we pay this tribute to our war dead, because they died for a great cause. While we pay our formal tributes on Remembrance Day, I believe it is equally important that we also remember in a more private and personal way those who died. I believe we should try to remember them as individuals—as young men who went to war to fight for a great cause. None of them wanted to die but they knew that was the chance that they had to take.

Honourable senators, as the years pass memories grow dim. Therefore, it is important to designate one day as a very special day on which to remember the sacrifices which were made. I believe it is also appropriate that that special day be called Remembrance Day.

We should also remember not only those who died but those who served and suffered physical or mental injury because there are many such, and we know of many pathetic cases among them. The glamour, the excitement and the glory of war is over. It has been said that Canada has treated its veterans as well as if not, perhaps, better than has any other nation. I believe this to be true. Certainly, the so-called veterans' charter was excellent legislation. Those who suffered physical and mental injury have been well cared for as a result of the hospital care, pensions and other benefits that have been provided. We have now established the principle of giving a veteran the benefit of the doubt if the benefit he is seeking is regarded as a borderline case or even if a significant doubt exists. Although much has been done we must strive for more. We must remember that times change as well as circumstances and that new problems arise. A veteran may now be applying for compensation for a war injury which occurred 40 years ago. The reason for this is not difficult to understand. A young man in his early 20s thought little of a minor wound or injury; yet time has an ugly habit of magnifying what were originally minor injuries resulting in more serious consequences as the years go by. The benefit of the doubt principle has helped many who applied for pensions many years later, but I believe it does not go far enough. I believe that a veteran is entitled to special consideration by virtue of the fact that he or she is a veteran. I should like to see the principle adopted which would shift the burden of proof in pension applications from the veteran to the Pension Commission. This would mean that any veteran applying for a pension would automatically be entitled to favourable consideration unless and until it was proven that he or she was not so entitled. I do not criticize the people administering the pension legislation because they must abide by the present legislation even while they are, as we know they are, sympathetic to the veterans.

Canada has done much for its veterans, but we must recognize that new circumstances have arisen and will continue to arise, and that there are gaps in our present benefits and in the manner of their application. I mention this today because I believe that those of us who served in the Canadian forces in wartime and suffered no ill effects, as well as all other Canadians, have an obligation and a responsibility towards those who were not so fortunate. This is especially true in what might be called hard cases, and by that I mean cases where it is difficult if not impossible for the applicant to prove that his condition is the result of war service.

Recently Donald M. Smith, the Agent General of Nova Scotia in London, brought to my attention what appears to be an injustice towards Canadian veterans living in England. In that country there is an association known as the Canadian Veterans Association of the United Kingdom. Mr. Smith, a veteran himself, is president of that association. This association believes—and I think rightly—that Canadian veterans living in England should be entitled to the same benefits as veterans residing in Canada. Yet, this is not the case. Apparently, before a Canadian veteran can draw War Veterans Allowance, he or she must reside in Canada for one year. Why there is such a regulation I do not know. To me, if a Canadian veteran is entitled to any benefit, he should receive it regardless of where he may reside, even if he has never resided in Canada. This is a matter which I hope will soon be corrected so that all Canadian veterans will be treated equally.

Honourable senators, I have digressed from speaking strictly about Remembrance Day. May I conclude by saying that, on this coming Remembrance Day, we will remember, and we will remember with pride as well as with sorrow, those who suffered and those who died while serving in the armed forces of Canada. They made a heroic contribution to making Canada a nation—a nation strong and free. Let us never forget them.

● (1430)

[Translation]

Hon. Léopold Langlois: It is very important for me to associate with Senator Macdonald to remind our colleagues that November 11 will be Remembrance Day.

I was myself reminded of this date a few weeks ago when I had the opportunity to accompany Senator Murray and a group of veterans who had been invited to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the liberation of Belgium. We went with a group of some 44 Canadian veterans. We visited all the cemeteries where our soldiers have been buried in that country.

I was deeply touched by the gratitude of our Belgian friends. It did increase the pride I myself and all of us already take as Canadians in the heroic actions of our fellow citizens, not only during the Second World War, but also in the one before that and the conflicts in other parts of the world, such as Korea where Canadians also bravely fought and even gave their lives.

I would like to join Senator Macdonald and all honourable senators in reasserting that, on Remembrance Day, we must honour the debt our nation owes to its veterans, not only those who fell on the battlefield, but those who came back with injuries from which they will never recover.

We must not forget also the families of our glorious dead and wounded, which themselves have trouble surviving after losing a father or a brother.

I have oftentimes had the opportunity to visit Quebec area hospitals where veterans have been cared for since World War II. All these families who visit their loved ones in their sickrooms must carry the double burden of living apart and assuming increased financial costs and our hearts go out to them.

A few months after being elected for the first time as a member of the House of Commons, I had the honour of sitting on the committee who drafted the so-called Veterans' Charter. That non partisan committee, made up exclusively of veterans, was chaired by the Hon. Ian Mackenzie, the former member from Vancouver who was Minister of Veterans Affairs at the time.

I remember how strongly united that committee was. Its proceedings were entirely free of partisan considerations. Its only concern was for the families of all those who suffered more than we did during the last world conflict. I am aware that, in spite of all its efforts and dedication, the legislation it drafted was not perfect. It must be updated to reflect the new circumstances of today.

In addition, the other day in Belgium, I met Mr. Smith whom Senator Macdonald referred to earlier. He made the same representations to me concerning the extension of benefits to veterans living outside the country. In support of that request, I pointed out to him—and indeed he was aware of it more than I—that Great Britain after World War II had amended her veterans' legislation to cover Southern Ireland veterans who had fought with the English army during the war, to the extent of amending the law concerning the re-establishment of veterans on the land so that it would apply to them. I fail to see why Canada would not do as much and not follow that outstanding example given to us by England after the 1939-45 armed conflict.

I therefore strongly and warmly endorse the words of my colleague. I know that all my colleagues in this House are in full agreement with what has been said this afternoon, that next November 11 we will have to recall this remembrance prayer for our veterans:

"They shall grow not old, as we that are left grow old:
Age shall not weary them, nor the years condemn.
At the going down of the sun and in the morning
We will remember them."

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY—TERMINATION OF DEBATE ON EIGHTH SITTING DAY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(i), I move:

That the proceedings on the Order of the Day for resuming the debate on the motion for an Address in Reply to Her Excellency the Governor General's Speech from the Throne addressed to both Houses of Parliament be concluded on the eighth sitting day on which the Order is debated.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, November 13, 1984, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Maurice Riel: Why are we sitting in the afternoon instead of the evening?

Senator Doody: The afternoon is a more reasonable time at which to sit. It seems to me that eight o'clock in the evening is a strange time to be starting the day's work. However, if the workload is such as to cause us to sit during the evening we shall be happy to do so. If the Senate agrees, we think it would be more appropriate to sit on Tuesday afternoon rather than on Tuesday evening. We shall see what develops.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

STATEMENT BY LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it is not our intention to ask any questions today. This will not be the characteristic rule every day, but today we are eager to move to the Orders of the Day to hear Senator Macquarrie. I want to know whether he is still in good form.

PRAYER AT COMMENCEMENT OF SITTINGS

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, before asking my question I would like to express my discontent.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Remember, you're on their side now.

Senator Bélisle: I know. However, I am concerned about the form of the new prayer. I would like to know, from either the Leader of the Government, or, perhaps, His Honour the Speaker, who is responsible for dropping the Lord's Prayer. I do not think the Senate should become complacent because there is a majority in the other house. Rather than dropping the Lord's Prayer, I think, because we on this side are in the minority, we should say it twice.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think my honourable friend is expecting me to reply to his question, which I am happy to do. If he thinks that we need to be prayed over twice, I must agree that it is a splendid idea. The fact is that I only heard the new prayer uttered for the first time yesterday, so it must have been arranged by the previous incumbents in office. However, I shall try to get to the bottom of the matter and find out the history and origin of this change. I must confess that I am ignorant about it at the present time.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of Her Excellency the Governor General's Speech at the opening of the session.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie, seconded by the Honourable Arthur Tremblay, moved:

That the following Address be presented to Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To Her Excellency the Right Honourable Jeanne Sauv , a Member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, Chancellor and Principal Companion of the Order of Canada, Chancellor and Commander of the Order of Military Merit upon whom has been conferred the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.

May it please your Excellency:

We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the Senate of Canada in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious Speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

He said: Honourable senators, I appreciate that one of my colleagues from across the way has said that I have made a good start, and I shall try not to lose too much momentum from now on. I appreciate the come-on suggestion made by the new leader across the way. I thought that he and his troops would be questioning our gallant crew here for an hour and a half, and I was going to add subtle nuances to my speech and bewilder both my friends and my opponents here.

I suppose someone like myself, who has spent long years inflicting his views upon university students and about one-third of the century being a politician, needs nothing less than another invitation to make yet another speech, and that is the way I have long felt. But I was honoured to be asked to make this particular speech—honoured and flattered—and I think that I said "yes" to my new leader here, Senator Roblin, just about as quickly as I said "yes" to the Prime Minister five years ago when I was asked if I would be summoned to this place. I think it took me about one quarter of a second to say "Thanks." And, as all my colleagues from an earlier parliament know, I have never regretted for a moment my first fond response to that long-sought request.

I am honoured in that I am the one to make, shall we say, the first speech on the first Order of the Day in this wonderful new Parliament, which, I believe, ushers in a new era in this country. There is something else unique about it. When you are in the ranks of the senior citizens you look, strive and yearn for any kind of experience which feels even remotely unique. But here I am, standing up in the only legislative assembly in this vast country which has a Liberal majority.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): One step at a time.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: You should be so lucky.

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I must begin by expressing what I am sure is the nation's rejoicing, and to use an old-fashioned theological word, thankfulness, for the obvious good health of our Governor General and wish her—and in this at least, I am sure, I command the support of all my colleagues and, indeed, all Canadians—the most abundant blessings and satisfaction as she continues her dedicated efforts to serve our Queen and our people.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Macquarrie: The latest visit of our Queen to this country was greatly appreciated. We are happy that those wearying cross-country royal tours have long since been abandoned—wisely so. This year the people of Prince Edward Island did not have the pleasure of a visit by Her Majesty. However, in recent years the people of our beautiful province have enjoyed generous and enormously popular visits from the sovereign. She was with us to celebrate the centenary of the 1864 Charlottetown meetings from which the Dominion of Canada was born.

She was with us again in 1967 to celebrate the one hundredth birthday of the dominion to whose founders we gave shelter and at whose birth we provided the cradle 100 years earlier.

She came to our province in 1973 to celebrate our quite reluctant entry into Confederation as a province in 1873. At that time she made what I thought to be a witty remark, which I am sure Senators Inman, Bonnell and Phillips will remember. She said, "You in the Island seem very fond of centennials."

It is perhaps appropriate in this welcome and worthy age of ecumenism that the first tribute in this chamber to the visit of Pope John Paul II should come from a Presbyterian—perhaps not a very saintly one but a very stubborn one. It would be a most insensitive member of any religious group who would not be moved by having His Holiness in our midst. While I personally have some difficulty with some of his doctrines and doctrinal interpretations, I could not be other than profoundly impressed, deeply moved and intellectually and spiritually thrilled by the majesty and power of his ministry in our country. To see this strong, good man literally collect the multitudes, seek out the maimed, the afflicted and the weak, bless the children and preach with authority evokes powerful recollections. As a humble Protestant, it seems to ennoble, fortify and buttress the expression "Vicar of Christ".

To quit the Mount of Transfiguration as we are told we should, I must say a word, sincere if not sublime, about some of the earthly people who populate this honourable place. In the last few months I have happily grown accustomed to receiving good news about the land and, more particularly, about this Hill. Not least among the items was word of the appointment of our new Speaker.

We expect great things of you, sir, as you preside over our deliberations and take on the other important duties of your prestigious office—duties important and significant beyond the knowledge and appreciation of most people not in this chamber.

In a recent press story the new presiding officer of the House of Commons was described as an elegant Mr. Speaker—which that excellent gentleman truly is and much more. However, in my opinion as a careful watcher of both chambers, I must say that in elegance and as well in eloquence our Speaker need take second place to none.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Macquarrie: As has been said by my leader, there have been changes in our party. We have physically moved in this chamber. I like it over here because two of the pictures that face us show the Highlanders in the forefront of activity, which is exactly what one would expect. In one of them they are depicted in a bar, which is also what some would expect!

Without any digression, I like it over here. I hope my personal physical constitution will allow me to stay on this side of the chamber as long as the nation's Constitution allows. That, of course, remains in the lap of the gods.

The welcome journey having been taken, we note changes on the quarterdeck. Senator Roblin, our new captain, has spoken of them. It is more years than I would like to enumerate since I met a certain young Manitoba MLA, not very long in that legislature, impressive immediately to one of my perception and almost as soon thereafter to others. It was not long before he became the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party in that province and then the Premier. I can say without any historical equivocation or fear of contradiction that he was the most efficient and progressive Premier that province has had in my time—and my time is quite a long time.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Macquarrie: To show honourable senators that I watch TV once in a while, I would say that Senator Roblin has shone as a jewel in the Senate crown and has now reached a new culmination of achievement as a great representative of the Senate in the cabinet. In the process, he has strengthened immeasurably a cabinet which has a great many things to do in the years ahead.

Senator Doody's diligence, wisdom and wit make him a natural House Leader.

My fellow Islander, Senator Phillips, like myself a denizen of the Hill since 1957, has the difficult job of whip. I think he has the qualities to discharge his duties well.

I wish all of these people the very best in their onerous duties and responsibilities. As long as they do not make some of us in the middle ranks of age work too hard and as long as they do not take themselves too seriously, then they will have our utmost co-operation in any endeavour they call upon us to take on. They will not have an easy task. Even a poor mathematician like myself knows that a small minority in one legislative chamber taking the lead for a strong, active and doing government with enormous strength presiding over the other chamber does not have, a priori or even pragmatically, an easy position. I count on them to carry out their tasks well.

I do not dare talk too long since I got a late start, shall we say. However, I would like to say a word about Senator Flynn who has served as my guide, my mentor and my friend here for many years, and indeed has done so for others long before I came here. Senator Flynn has provided grace and knowledge far beyond the usual in his long and oft-times difficult tenure.

I also salute and declare my appreciation and join my remarks with those of Senator Roblin for our former whip, Senator John M. Macdonald. "Faithful and true", to use the old hymn expression, might be appropriate words to sum up our stalwart friend. Senator Roblin, with his fine scholarship, used the word "concise" or "incisive". More explicitly, we might say that John M. Macdonald was always blunt. If you wanted to know where you stood and what the situation was, you would get a darn good reading from Senator John M. Macdonald, a quality which I always appreciated down through the years. Senator Roblin has now called him the sage of Cape Breton. I leave it to Senators Muir and MacEachen to decide between themselves who is the rosemary and who is the thyme in the Cape Breton trio.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): It is a quintet, not a trio.

Senator Macquarrie: The great joy of all of this is that we can say these things about these people and still have them with us. That is having your cake and eating it, too.

We began yesterday's sitting with the swearing in of ten new senators. At that time, there was one missing and I would like Senator LeBlanc to know that, as soon as that fact was detected, all my literary colleagues were saying: "Wherefore art thou?" I am glad that, today, there are two or three Shakespearians here, since yesterday when I tried that comment out in the lobby, there was not much response.

It was a very appealing and interesting situation—and perhaps a little ironic—that one of the first acts of a new Parliament which put into office the most strongly entrenched government ever in the lower house, should be to proceed to entrench the opposition in the upper house. However, since I am not an advocate of an elected Senate, I will not dwell on that. I will simply say that, since I know most of the new senators, I am delighted to have them here. I know that they will enhance not only the dignity but the volubility and accomplishment of this place.

Senator Turner and I were mentioned a few years ago in an article in a magazine which has since gone out of production—but not for that reason, I assure you. The article in question concerned the House of Commons and ten people were listed as being "ten of the best". I trust that Senator Turner's experience was different from my own in that, when I showed one of my colleagues the article—which I carried in my pocket at all times—he said: "The best what?" I must say that I was momentarily nonplussed.

Senator De Bané and Senator LeBlanc have long been friends of mine, as have Senator Lefebvre and other colleagues from the House of Commons. It has always been my judgment that a member with experience in the House of Commons does not do any harm when he comes to the Senate of Canada. I am sure that the whip of our party would say, "Hear, hear" if he weren't such a quiet fellow.

With respect to Senator MacEachen, I am sure he will not like my saying this but it is slightly over 30 years since we met on Parliament Hill. During those years, I have not lost touch with him. I watched him carefully; he is a great Scot and a great scholar and I will be expecting great things of him. At his best, he was one of the greatest debaters in the House of Commons. It took much to arouse him at certain times but, once engaged, he was formidable and I regard him so highly that, when I talk about him, as I will, I intend to gloss right over the period when he was the Minister of Finance. That was not his best period, if I may say so.

I admire our new Leader of the Opposition here in the Senate for many things. I have mentioned his eloquence; I have mentioned his sense of history, but he has shown in recent months a sense of survival even sharper than that of the party which he served for so long. That is very important. We need people like that in the Senate and I hope that he will give us his best or his near best from time to time, although he knows, as a student of poetry, that his eloquent best will likely be wasted in the desert air and certainly not reported by the media. However, those of us who are here will appreciate it and there may be some people out there who will read the Debates of the Senate and know that, here, a man has spoken and spoken well.

I do not think that Senator MacEachen will exert his every muscle to support Senator Roblin and company in their duties in carrying out the legislative program of the new and vigorous government. He will not guarantee smoothness and harmony, but I count on him, on the other hand, not to confuse the mathematical strength which he has here with any tendency to assert the full legal and constitutional powers which the Senate still has. In these interesting times, with an overwhelming predominance in one house and the positions reversed in the other—a situation which has not been so extreme, I think, since Confederation—it is important that we have a man of his wisdom and experience. I mention this not only because of my love of the new government, which I wish well, but more because I have long believed that this chamber, perhaps altered in some ways, is an integral and valuable part of our Canadian structure. In these tense and delicate times, I believe that there is an enormous responsibility on the Senate, as a non-elected body, not to be seen as being insensitive, or attempting to frustrate the actions of the place in which the people have put their confidence. I therefore do not think that Senator MacEachen will be a party to any action which, in the long run, might end up bringing a very heavy public assault upon the Senate itself. In other words, I know he will not become a Samson pulling down the temple while he and I are both in it.

Honourable senators, in my careful preparation for this speech I went back over the years to see what other senators had said to their colleagues in other times of dramatic political change. As always, when you read, you learn a great deal. Some things I would like to emulate; some things I cannot or would not try.

In 1930, Senator Bell of Nova Scotia made an interesting speech but a very poor prediction. He said that Canada could escape from the depression which then threatened other parts of the world. To say that, in the fall of 1930, indicated that your crystal ball was not very clear.

Going back a little earlier, to a time before I and almost everybody in this chamber was born, in 1911 the Borden government took over and Senator Taylor said something which I would love to be able to say. A change of government had taken place; Mr. Borden and his government had been installed, and Senator Taylor addressed his colleagues and said, "Our treasury is overflowing." How wonderful it would be to be able to say that.

Senator Perrault: That must have been the party treasury.

Senator Macquarrie: Believe it or not, he said this:

The difficulty will be, honourable senators, to know how to dispose of the surplus. No matter how great the expenditures the country may be disposed to make, the government will have ample funds to meet them.

If we only lived in a situation such as that, the Minister of Finance could go to Toronto on Thursday night instead of staying to tell the people of Canada what is what. Those were happy days, and it would seem that the great Sir Wilfrid Laurier was a far better and more prudent administrator than most of his successors.

But what the Throne Speech said at that time is important and significantly germane to the present day. The government announced an aid to highways bill. Up to that time, the federal government was responsible for the railways, with the provincial and municipal governments being responsible for the highways. The Borden government had decided that Canada had reached the age when it was important to find a means by which to move primarily agricultural goods to the railheads. As a result of that, an offer was made by the federal government—they called it the Dominion government then, and they were right, by the way—that it would pay half of those costs and the provinces would pay the other half.

Throughout the sittings of that Parliament, which began in the fall of 1911, the Senate, with a Liberal majority, kept introducing amendments to the bill which had been defeated in the House of Commons. The Senate, in effect, eliminated that aid to the provinces.

It was not until 1957 and 1958, under the aegis of Alvin Hamilton, that that measure was recovered. I know, and I am sure that Senator Bonnell knows, that in Prince Edward Island that resulted in one of the greatest boons that we ever had, because during those intervening years the Conservatives had become brighter—there is always hope for us—and instead of putting it on a population basis, the Diefenbaker Conservatives said that they would give the same to each province, irrespective of size. So, little Prince Edward Island received $7.5 million, as did Ontario. We thought that that was great. I do not know what Ontario thought, but we in P.E.I. were thinking of ourselves in this connection. Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were happy with that too. I remember Senator Muir dancing in the streets when that went through.

That is an example of the Senate interposing itself against the will of the government, as a Conservative-dominated Senate did later on the old age pension issue. When the Senate does that, it is not usually acting in the interest of the public. I mentioned the Conservatives in an intermediate period to indicate that that is not a circumstance peculiar to any particular party. That naturally happened more under the Liberals because, there were more instances when the Liberals had a majority here, as they had in the other place.

I remember other dramatic changes, as do many other senators in this chamber. I refer to that of 1957 when the government changed, and that of 1958 when we had an enormous majority. As Senator Walker will remember, it was then the greatest in the nation's history.

I have been casting my mind back to find the earliest and most applicable example of a comparable situation, and I found that the most apropos for comparison is 1854. John A. Macdonald we regard as the chief father of Confederation—there is a biological problem there—but let us say the leading father or leading architect, if that is what we savour. He always said that his greatest work was done before Confederation. Since no country as diverse as Canada could exist and hold together without a broadly-based party, he considered his biggest achievement to have been the forming in 1854 of the party of which I have been a member for a long, long time.

He reflected on a situation similar to that which Prime Minister Mulroney finds himself in today. He said:

There would be a new House and new people to choose from, and our aim should be to enlarge the bounds of our party so as to embrace every person desirous of being counted as a progressive Conservative—and that is where the name of the party came from; not John Bracken.

He went on to state:

—and who will join in a series of measures to put an end to the corruption which has ruined the government and debauched its followers.

That is the kind of thing that might be going through the Prime Minister's mind; I do not know whether it is or not, but in that idea of a broadly-based party, of an ecumenical movement that would pull the country together and hold it together, it seems to me is the subtle essence of our party.

I believe that the great victory of the Progressive Conservative Party in September was underwritten largely by the tremendous victory in Quebec which, for years, was not very kind territory to us. I used to say that I knew every prominent Conservative in Quebec, and then I would say it did not take much recall to remember them all.

I also think that Mr. Mulroney won his Quebec victory in Manitoba. That may sound like a strange thing, but he went to Manitoba and said that which was not perceived to be very popular.

It is always said that John A. Macdonald was a great boozier, which he was, a great equivocater, which he could be, and a great conciliator, but in the man's life there were certain things in which he believed. Fundamental was his belief that there must be nothing but amity and comity between the people whose language was French and those whose language was English. He never tolerated any nonsense of bigotry on an ethnic or religious basis. Perhaps that is why it is sometimes good to have someone in power who is not too self-righteous about those things. He never tolerated that.

When Prime Minister Mulroney went to Manitoba and enunciated the very principle that he won his leadership on—co-operation between the two groups—naturally the people of Quebec were capable of perceiving what he was saying. In consequence, and this indicates, that there is justice in politics, he won both Quebec and Manitoba, which is encouraging, because winning office is a wonderful thing, and we who were denied it most of the time cherish it. To win office on something which is valid, eternal and fundamental makes it something less than just a transient popularity in a scatter of ballots.

That is why I said a few minutes ago that this is an epochal situation. I like the way in which—so far and I hope it will continue—the whole thing has been handled.

The Globe and Mail this morning said that the Speech from the Throne set a civil tone. Mr. L. Ian MacDonald in the Gazette used the very same word. It strikes me that the Speech from the Throne is another illustration of the decent reasonableness which prevails and which I hope will continue to prevail. In the face of such a large majority, and after so many lean and arid years, there might have been a temptation for a little gloating or a little heavy arrogance, but I have not seen that. It strikes me that someone has taken to heart the maxim of Winston Churchill, which was "In Victory—Magnanimity." If you follow that, you never lose.

Heaven knows what the situation will be in six months, in two years or in three years. But I believe that—if I understand the vagaries of public opinion—it is that attitude which has brought about the situation whereby the current government has enhanced its popularity rather than diminished it, a result which might be regarded as natural, which follows frequently and is almost always universal.

I liked the Speech from the Throne because in itself and in its tone it was positive, and it was well written, something I have not seen too often. Most of them, alas, are far from that. I cannot remember a Speech from the Throne getting such good reviews. They were almost rave reviews. I hear that the representatives of big business raved; the representatives of little business thought it was great; the representatives of labour thought it was fine. Everybody but the opposition thought it was good and no one would expect them to say it is good. Of course, that is never done.

If I were to be the typical mover I would give the Speech a benign overview. I am going to try to be benign, but I am not going to give an overview because I expect my stalwart colleagues to deal with it more specifically in its various parts.

I was moved by a number of things. I have in mind the specific references to the spouses allowance for widows and widowers aged 60 to 64—thank God I am not in that category but I am thinking of the country—the betterment of the financial situation of our veterans, the references to community-based health care and very appealing to me was the encouragement of those dedicated to cultural, artistic and athletic endeavour. These are worthy entries in the category called social justice, a fine political expression which I first heard used by a great Canadian, a former premier of Ontario, the late Honourable Leslie Frost.

I am confident that Canadians will welcome the new tone in federal-provincial relations. It bodes well for the future of a united, harmonious and prosperous Canada.

I read with particular appreciation the statement: "The constitutional agreement is incomplete so long as Quebec is not part of an accord." When the constitutional measure was before this house, I found it emotionally and intellectually impossible to support it, believing as I did and believing as I said that any agreement including all of Canada but Quebec was insufficient, and perhaps worse. I hope to see new, brighter and better developments in this important field. The Speech from the Throne leads me to believe that I shall.

Honourable senators, I was impressed that in the Speech from the Throne, short as those speeches go, three and a half pages were devoted to foreign affairs under the section designated "Renewed Canadian Internationalism."

Prime Minister Mulroney has already been impressive in the field of external affairs. His appointment of a former prime minister, Joe Clark, to this portfolio was most fitting. I cannot think of anyone who could represent us more appropriately on the international scene than the former prime minister. He is acquainted with and is respected by all sorts of world leaders. It demonstrated the Prime Minister's ability, which I applaud, to place the right person in the right job. Then came the appointment of Douglas Roche as Ambassador for Disarmament. I know of no one in Canada who is more suited by emotion, training, temperament and knowledge to take on that job. No better person could be found. The appointments of Ambassador Lewis to the United Nations and Ambassador Francis to Portugal are indications of Prime Minister Mulroney's wisdom and sensitivity.

The Speech from the Throne declares that "Canada's opportunity to influence the course of world events lies primarily in sound multilateral institutions." I think that that is a sound precept. We cannot be a loner on the world stage and be a great achiever at the same time.

Useful contacts have already been made at the highest level with leaders in the United States. It does not require a genius I.Q. or weeks of research to find grounds for criticism of United States policy. I can do it at the drop of a hat. No problem. But I have not yet found anyone who can argue away the simplistic truth uttered by Senator Olson's one-time leader in the House of Commons, Robert Thompson, who said: "Mr. Speaker, the Americans are our best friends whether we like it or not." Get around that if you can.

In yesterday's Ottawa Citizen I read a welcome item entitled "Days of Squabbling with France Over: P.M.". Why in Heaven's name should we be squabbling with France? It seems to me that if we build upon consensus at home and goodwill abroad we are sensibly starting to go down a road to worthy achievements, and I think that all Canadians will wish the new government well in that regard.

I note with pleasure that a special parliamentary committee will conduct a full review of the main components and objectives of our international relations. Such a review is overdue.

I now come with some trepidation to another subject. I do not claim to be an expert on national defence, but I welcome the section on that subject. As an unregenerate peace-nik and/or dove—I do not mind which I am called—I have no difficulty supporting Defence Minister Coates in his efforts. We simply cannot have our service men and women assigned to important world roles or important domestic ones and dare do anything less than provide them with the resources and equipment to do their job. I believe also that we have given them tasks which have outrun their existing numbers. So, a dove like myself believes that we have to make some realistic enlargement of our military establishment. We are in NATO because an earlier government recognized that it was the place to be and because in the following years the Canadian people had demonstrated that they want us there. I could never see that there was an enormous particularistic interest in foreign policy matters on the part of the Canadian people. I looked for that for many years. But there are certain things in a general way that are meaningful. One is that they want us to be in the United Nations. Secondly, they are proud of our peacekeeping forces. I have not run across any Canadian who is not. The third factor is that we properly belong in NATO and being there we should pull our weight. I believe that the Senate Subcommittee on National Defence said that most eloquently. I have always sensed that feeling among Canadian people. Even a peace-nik or a neutralist must face it. I applaud the Speech from the Throne in that regard.

I end as I began by underlining the importance of this era and the importance of this chamber in this era. We are overlooked; we are neglected; we are criticized. I interpret from the Speech from the Throne that it is only the House of Commons that they are going to investigate in terms of reform. When the joint committee was formed in the last Parliament to consider the reform of the Senate I resented the fact that we were setting up a joint committee to look into and examine only one house. I did not agree with that.

Senator Macquarrie: As Senator Doody says "With the majority from the Commons!"

But behind all of this there is the feeling that we should watch it and that there is someone out there concerned about this body. Someone out there thinks it is important. With all due respect to my western colleagues, people out there think it is more important than it really is. From reading these documents emanating from the west, it would appear that a reform of the Senate would end all ills, economic, political, social and perhaps even moral—they are asking a lot in a couple of those areas.

I shake my head in sadness—and, when you get old, you should not get sad too often—when I think of the three Es, one of which is equality. If you make the two chambers equal, you are in trouble right there.

I will close by bestowing my blessings upon my friend, Senator MacEachen, and his party. I will advise him any time he wants consolation as to how you buttress yourself in opposition and how you endure it. I have spent most of my life losing elections and taking from the entrails the next morning the very best—we may have gained half a per cent here and two-and-a-half per cent there.

Honourable senators, I was going to quote Churchill again, but I had forgotten what Churchill said about defeat, although it is odd that a Conservative would do that. I remembered what he said about victory, but not defeat. Having looked it up today, I see that he said, "Defiance in defeat." We do not want the honourable senator opposite to be too defiant. Also, we do not want him to be disconsolate.

I have been to functions with members of the House of Commons and heard my friends in the NDP say that they are going to run the Liberals off the lot and that they will close in on them this time. In Prince Edward Island we do not have much to fear from the NDP, but I wonder if the Liberal Party will allow that to happen. I say that it won't happen, but my NDP friends say that I should not be too sure. They recall what happened in Britain when the Labour Party ran the Liberals off the lot. I remind them that there were special reasons for that happening, and they agree that there were, one of those reasons being that two people thought they should be leader. The other reason was that they were accused of being too casual with the national treasury on behalf of their friends. But I say that is only Britain.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Macquarrie: It is a great pleasure to be here among old and new friends. I thank all honourable senators for their tolerance in this the second heavy working day of this new Parliament.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, I am pleased with this opportunity to second the motion of Senator Macquarrie, namely that this House offers its thanks to Her Excellency the Governor General for the inaugural speech she pronounced in the Senate yesterday afternoon. It is an opportunity for which I offer my sincere thanks.

Before discussing my motives, as it were, for seconding Senator Macquarrie's motion, you will understand—and you indicated as much by your applause—that I first wish to express to Senator Macquarrie my admiration for the brilliance and sometimes sarcastic humour—his last remarks were a good example—which pervaded his truly excellent speech. In the Senate, these qualities seem to come so naturally and so spontaneously, and I must say we have enjoyed their expression over the years. Whenever Senator Macquarrie speaks in this Chamber it has always been a pleasure and a privilege to be among those listening, and I am sure we could listen to him indefinitely. I wish to thank him for his speech.

I would like to join Senator Macquarrie in congratulating Senator Charbonneau on his appointment to the high office of Speaker of the Senate. Mr. Speaker, we have the profound conviction that you will bring to the exercise of your new and illustrious duties the same competence and skill you have demonstrated previously in the Senate and in your professional career.

Senator Roblin, in offering you my congratulations, I also have the feeling that in the present circumstances your task will be particularly difficult and complex. However, having watched you proceed during the past five years, I have not the slightest doubt that you will be able to perform your new duties with all the requisite dexterity. In any case, as Leader of the Government, you can count on the full co-operation of all your colleagues. The kind of co-operation, in fact, which you yourself gave your predecessor, Senator Flynn, of whom you spoke earlier in such moving and indeed very accurate terms. I have only one thing to add to what you have already said, on a personal note. I want to express my deep appreciation for the cordial and thoughtful manner in which the Senator welcomed me in this Chamber five years ago, when he guided the neophyte I was at the time, explaining the complexities of political affiliation within the parliamentary framework.

I also wish to offer my congratulations to the Leader of the Opposition. I trust that he will not find it too difficult to adapt to a situation that must be doubly unusual for him, namely, that of being in another parliamentary institution and moreover, sitting to the left instead of to the right of the Speaker.

Finally, I wish to extend a cordial welcome to the new senators who joined us yesterday. They have not only come to add to the already considerable numbers of their particular group in this Chamber but will also, through their varied experience and talents, enhance the quality of our work.

Honourable senators, change is obviously the motto of this First Session of the Thirty-third Parliament of Canada.

A change of government, of course, and a change in the political party responsible for forming that government, but although the situation is not unique, it has not been a frequent one at the federal level in this country, during the last fifty years.

What is unusual about the results of the elections on September 4, 1984, is the extent and the nature of the changes brought about in the composition of the House of Commons.

First, the Mulroney Government will have an unprecedented majority, at least in absolute numbers, proportionately to the total number of seats, the Diefenbaker Government in 1958 had a relatively greater majority.

Second, during the last 25 years at least, the party forming the Official Opposition had won at least twice as many seats as the other opposition parties. This time, the opposition parties are numerically much closer to each other than ever before. There are only two of them, while in similar circumstances in the past, the opposition was clearly more varied. What new dynamics of relationships between the majority and the minority, as well as between the two minority parties, will come out of this situation? There is no doubt in my mind that this places the parliamentary reform mentioned in the Speech from the Throne under a much different light than was previously the case.

There is a third factor, which is also mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, namely, that for the first time in quite a while, all the regions including Quebec are well represented in the government and the political party to which it belongs. However, no region has such a hold on that party as to threaten the existence of the government because even without the seats it has won in any one of them, even without the seats of its Ontario or Quebec membership, the government would still have an absolute majority in the Commons. This situation seems to me unprecedented. This extraordinary situation will give the government greater freedom of movement while imposing upon it more constraints as the Canadian mosaic now has all the required spokesmen within the government party.

As a fourth and last comment, I will say that there is nothing new in the fact that the Progressive Conservative Party has won a majority of seats outside Quebec. On the contrary, this has been the case in all elections held between 1957 and 1980 with the exception of 1968. In spite of this, the majority it won outside Quebec allowed this party to come to power only four times in the last ten general elections, including three times as a minority government.

In Quebec, the Progressive Conservative Party had not won a majority of seats since the 1958 election. Even then, this happened in very special circumstances which had nothing in common with those of the last election. When viewed on the backdrop of the last 25 years, what happened on September 4, particularly in Quebec, takes on a very special significance. However, we must take care not to interpret this fact prematurely or wrongly. Thus, the fact that the people of Quebec then voted as most other Canadians did ought not to lead anyone to conclude that henceforth they consider themselves as everybody else and renounce their collective identity as a distinct society.

All things considered, how can one explain changes of such magnitude which have occurred and been witnessed to the same extent throughout the country? What is their meaning and impact?

[Senator Tremblay.]

Political pundits and analysts of electorate behaviour will find there choice material for their work and will make sure that they study it in depth to highlight all essential elements.

It would indeed be foolhardy of me to entertain more or less fanciful guesses about such recent events. I shall therefore limit myself to pointing out what everybody has seen as an obvious fact: the conscience and conviction that a lot of things had to change in this country have been expressed altogether clearly through the behaviour of Canadian voters on September 4.

Quite obviously, that deep-felt desire for change which was so strongly voiced throughout the country was not aimed simply at substituting a political formation for another so as to achieve a majority in the Commons, nor at replacing a government team by another to take over at the federal level.

By making those changes which were a prior condition, Canadians wanted above all that at the same time there would be new directions as well as fresh policies and programs, and they also wanted a change in the style of government.

How and in what way? That has been highlighted in the Speech from the Throne read yesterday by Her Excellency the Governor General.

By their significance and diversity, the measures announced in the Speech from the Throne leaves no doubt whatsoever that the government wants and is determined to steer the country towards national reconciliation, economic renewal and social justice; no doubt whatsoever that the government wants and is determined to achieve that purpose through consultations between the two levels of government, between the federal government and the provinces while respecting their respective jurisdictions, with a view to harmonizing their actions and reducing if not eliminating duplications.

The government is convinced beyond any doubt, as Senator Macquarrie just said, that the 1982 constitutional agreement will remain incomplete as long as Quebec is not part of it. The government will strive to create the conditions required to achieve such an important objective.

The government is clearly determined to consult in a systematic and orderly fashion with the various groups and decision-makers concerned with economic development: businesses, management, employees, and different associations of employers and employees that are part of the structures in a democratic society such as ours, so that they will be fully involved in the complex, lengthy and difficult task of shaping an economic consensus.

Finally, there is no doubt that the government is ready to take into consideration the changing needs of the underprivileged groups and to improve many features of the social security system.

All those principles which so clearly appear in the Speech from the Throne were already included in the commitments made during the election campaign. They were foreshadowed by these steps taken by the new government since it was sworn in on September 17.

Whether it is abolishing for instance the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation, a rash program that not only was a poor gamble but also reneged on an agreement reached with the provinces by the Clark Government in 1979.

Whether it is disbanding the Canadian Unity Information Office, about which an editorial in La Presse very aptly said that one of its accomplishments has been to antagonize Quebecers of all leanings.

Whether it is the Petromont issue, where caution and realism dictated that the governments involved should allow for the short-term survival of the firm, in order to open the door to more permanent and comprehensive solutions.

Whether it is the announcement that some Crown corporations were put on the auction block, a process under which the role of the Government as an entrepreneur will be progressively revised in areas more in line with private entrepreneurship.

Whether it is the agreement reached in recent days between the Secretary of State, the Hon. Walter McLean, and the Quebec Minister of Education, Mr. Yves Bérubé, on grants to Quebec universities under the specialization center program, which had been jeopardized by the Secretary of State in the previous government for reasons at the time very obscure to me, unless it were too clear an illustration of the "Big Brother knows best" approach.

Whether it is the numerous meetings held with their provincial counterparts by the new cabinet ministers following their appointments, to wit the Minister of Communications, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Minister of Communications and several others. All the examples which I have just mentioned of decisions made and action taken by ministers in order to re-establish the necessary dialogue between the two levels of government bear the imprint of the style and manner of Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, something he stressed on many occasions both during and after the election campaign would be one of the major traits of his government.

This consistency and continuity both in intention and action are the cornerstone on which rests the trust which Canadians have clearly expressed on September 4 to him and his party.

Honourable senators, during this session which is just beginning, we shall be called upon to work together and implement the extensive legislative program which the government has developed.

I trust that we will fully assume our responsibilities with due respect to our Parliamentary duties and taking into account the current circumstances.

On motion of Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 13, 1984, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 13, 1984

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE ERIC COOK THE HONOURABLE RICHARD A. DONAHOE THE LATE HONOURABLE DANIEL A. RILEY

TRIBUTES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if I could have the indulgence of the Senate to pay a few words of tribute to some of our former colleagues here, before we enter into the business of the day, I would be very happy to do so.

First, I wish to make reference to two of our colleagues who have completed their terms of service in the Senate since we last met. I am referring to Senator Eric Cook, from Newfoundland, and Senator Dick Donahoe, from Nova Scotia. It is an honour for me to offer a word of appreciation to them for their services in this chamber and, to express for myself, and I know for everyone else in this place, our best wishes for many happy days.

Senator Eric Cook, Q.C., was summoned to the Senate 20 years ago, in 1964. He graced the Senate during his term of office. I speak with particular knowledge of the years of service which he devoted to one of our important committees, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. Anyone who attended meetings of that committee over the years will remember well the pithy questions Senator Cook posed to witnesses who appeared before the committee and the astute observations he would offer on the impact and meaning of the legislation being discussed. He displayed an extensive legal knowledge and, indeed, an extensive knowledge of finance which made his committee work particularly useful to the Senate. He displayed a capacity for analysis which I thought was quite remarkable and useful when difficult technical bills came before the committee. He was able to go right to the heart of the matter in a way not all of us are able to do. Thus, he was most helpful in enabling the Senate to offer constructive advice and recommendations with respect to many important bills.

Senator Cook impressed me as a quiet but forceful personality. He engaged the respect of all who knew him, even though what he had to say was sometimes filtered through a genuine Newfoundland accent. His place in this house will be hard to fill and we shall certainly miss his wise counsel.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: I wish to speak now about Senator Richard Donahoe of Nova Scotia. He was cast in quite a different mould from that of Senator Cook. He possesses, to a degree, that Celtic exuberance which we have learned to associate with those members of this house who can claim Wales, Scotland or Ireland as their point of origin.

Senator Donahoe is an experienced politician, particularly in the Nova Scotia field, where he was at one time mayor of Halifax. He held a number of important portfolios in governments of that province. In fact, he was someone who could be described as a "real" Nova Scotian.

He came to this house in 1979, which means that his service here was relatively short, although he soon indicated he was able to put his wide experience to good use. Senator Donahoe was extremely active in dealing with representations and interests of his region. When provincial issues came before us he proved himself to be particularly well informed and knowledgeable.

Dick Donahoe was a natural orator. He had the gift of the well turned phrase. He had a fund of apt references and was capable of effective argument in defending the positions he took. He had all these attributes, and I am bound to say that he was not afraid to express his mind.

Senator Donahoe is a Knight of the Order of St. Gregory and the distinguished father of a distinguished family, having two of his sons in the Nova Scotia legislature at this time.

Senator Cook and Senator Donahoe will be much missed in our deliberations. I am glad to offer these words of thanks for the services they rendered to the Senate and their country and to express warm good wishes in all they have to do in the days to come.

Finally, I want to pay tribute to one of our colleagues who is no longer with us, the late Senator Daniel A. Riley, from New Brunswick.

Dan Riley was an excellent lawyer, but I think most of us will remember him better as a very colourful political veteran. He made his mark in the Parliament of Canada in the House of Commons in the 1950s. He was in the legislature and, indeed, in the cabinet of his native province in the 1960s. He came to the Senate in 1973 and served here for 11 years.

In temperament, I think it is fair to say that Dan Riley was just as Irish as his name, and he leaves the most warm and pleasant memories with all who knew him. I, in particular, appreciated the wry humour with which he observed the passing scene on the floor of the Senate. He was faithful in his attendance in this house. He was careful of the interests of his region and he was forthright in his comments on public affairs. He was a good senator and we shall miss him. I hope that I may be allowed, in your name, to extend to his family and friends, and particularly to his wife and children, a sincere tribute of respect and our sincere condolences on his passing.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am glad to join Senator Roblin in his comments on all three of our former colleagues, to underline some of the things that he has said and to support them all.

With reference to Senator Cook, several of his colleagues are here with us in the Senate and I know that they will have something to say about him. I can only say that I found Senator Cook an inspiration; I found him to be a model senator in his deportment, in his intellect and in the prestige he brought to this chamber. I believe that Senator Petten and Senator Rowe will wish to add some detail to our tributes to Senator Cook.

With respect to Senator Donahoe, honourable senators who were here at the time might remember that, rightly or wrongly, Senator Donahoe and some of the rest of us anticipated that he might not be here with us at the opening of this Parliament and so we were invited to comment—as he himself had commented in his speech—about that. While I seemed to disagree with just about everything that Senator Donahoe said, particularly in terms of political positions, I mentioned that I did respect the extent to which he was a firm supporter of his party. Also at that time I made reference to the fact that the French word for a partisan or a supporter of a party is “militant” and that the word “militant” could always be accurately and honourably ascribed to Senator Donahoe and the positions he took on behalf of the Conservative Party.

As I said then, I enjoyed the opportunity to share this chamber with Senator Donahoe. He had a distinguished career in politics and in law, coming to us as a former attorney general of his province, which, as we know, is the highest law office in any province. He founded a dynasty of which, as Senator Roblin said, he was the patriarch. We are glad that he crowned such a successful life with service in the Senate.

At this time we would reaffirm our wish to Senator Donahoe that he enjoys a long, happy, fruitful and, I am sure, continuing militant life.

With respect to Senator Riley, I think it is appropriate that his long-time colleague, Senator Robichaud, speak on our behalf.

I, like many others, learned to admire, and indeed to love, Senator Riley for his puckish sense of humour. He could always be relied upon, when things seemed to be riding along too well, to act as the burr under the saddle, awakening us to the not so obvious issues and dimensions of questions that were before us.

We extend our sympathies to his family. Senator Riley was a very popular and effective senator. I leave it to Senator Robichaud to add his comments to those that I have made.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, a great deal has been said about Senators Cook and Donahoe, both of whom I have had the privilege of being associated with over a number of years, and particularly Senator Donahoe in his capacity as Attorney General of Nova Scotia when I was the Attorney General of my home province of New Brunswick. Both were very competent and effective senators. We will miss both of them very much.

Senator Donahoe was a member of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs and always made a very able contribution to the discussions that took place during meetings of that committee.

In rising today I wish to make special reference to the late Senator Dan Riley. All of us, at one time or another, have had to attend a funeral service to pay our respects to a departed relative or friend, and that is always a sad occasion. On September 15 of this year I attended a funeral service in Saint John, and for me and others present that was a sad occasion indeed. Dan Riley was no longer with us.

Dan Riley was known in student circles, in legal circles, in political circles, in business circles and in Senate circles since the 1940s. Those circles were represented at his funeral service.

I saw members of his family and many friends at his funeral, but I did not see one enemy, because Dan Riley had no enemies. If a rumour were to reach the ears of Dan Riley that a certain person did not like the way he operated, Dan Riley would be the first to approach that person with his conquering smile and would immediately eliminate any possibility of a rift between him and the other person in question. Dan was that sort of man, with his Irish wit, his sense of humour and his willingness to look for the straight road toward justice.

He could have conquered the universe had he wanted to. He was fabulous, in my estimation.

I had known him since the late 1940s, first as an acquaintance, then as a friend, then as a member of the House of Commons, then as a lawyer, then as a cabinet minister in the cabinet I had the honour to lead in the 1960s, then as the chairman of the Public Utilities Commission of New Brunswick, and then as a senator. As a matter of fact, he and I were sworn in in this chamber approximately two minutes apart in January 1974.

Dan was a born orator. He was probably the best speaker I ever heard in my life. When I was premier of New Brunswick and had to delegate somebody to give a speech that would inform as well as entertain a particular audience, I would call upon Dan Riley first, knowing that he would respond to the challenge. He did so in such a “super” way, as they would say in Great Britain, that he was one of those who was called upon to speak on every occasion as a master of ceremonies or as a public speaker regardless of the solemnity of the occasion.

As a senator, he was particularly interested in the Transport Committee because he had developed an expertise when he was chairman of the Public Utilities Board in New Brunswick. Members of the Transport Committee agreed with him although at times those in charge of transportation in Canada did not. He would challenge their judgment, and rightly so, because his Irish mind was already made up. But in most cases, if not all, he made fair judgments.

I have expressed my condolences to his wife, Mary, and to his children. He had four boys and three girls. I miss Dan Riley and I know that his relatives and friends share that feeling.

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, I have had the privilege of knowing Senator Cook for most of my life. Honourable senators may or may not know that we both come from St. John's, Newfoundland. I thought I should mention that in passing because I am sure you would not be able to tell from our accent!

Senator Eric Cook was a leader in the civic, legal and political life of our province. He was a leading member of the legal profession. He served as deputy mayor of the city of St. John's. He was president of the Liberal Party of Newfoundland and Labrador and a long-time chancellor of the Anglican Diocese of Newfoundland and Labrador. Despite his very busy schedule he always had time to counsel and guide those of us who were a little younger. I will long remember his patience and understanding.

We all knew Senator Cook to be a hard-working senator and a booster for his province of Newfoundland. As most of you will recall, he was a faithful member of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee. As has already been said, he will be missed by all of us in this chamber. Eric, may you be blessed with good health to enjoy a well earned retirement with your charming wife, Mary, your children and grandchildren.

● (1420)

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to detain the Senate for any length of time, but I feel I should add a word to what my colleagues have already said with regard to three of our former colleagues.

I should first like to say a word about our departed friend, Dan Riley. Dan and I were not only colleagues, we were also friends. In particular, I should like to pay tribute to the tremendous contribution he made—and I think I can say this in all fairness—as the most active member of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications. I served on that committee, as did half a dozen others, and we all agree that Dan Riley did make a remarkable contribution to the Senate and, of course, through the Senate, to Canada.

I hope you will pardon the personal reference, but again, rather coincidentally, Senator Dick Donahoe and I were colleagues and also friends dating back to the 1950s when we were Minister of Public Welfare of our respective provinces. Although he and I, of course, did not see eye to eye on many things philosophically—we often disagreed—nevertheless, we respected each other, and I certainly respected his judgment. Although he left us to enjoy a well-earned rest, I was sorry to see him depart from the Senate.

[Senator Robichaud.]

Now, honourable senators, I should like to add a word about my fellow Newfoundlander, Eric Cook. Much has already been said about him. I hope I do not sound snobbish when I say that he comes from a distinguished Newfoundland family. His father, Sir Tasker Cook, was the mayor of St. John's for many years—a good and active mayor at that. He was a prominent businessman and had been knighted by King George V. Eric was a worthy successor. He built up what was probably the largest legal firm in Newfoundland, perhaps one of the largest Newfoundland has ever known. Senator Petten has already recited a number of contributions that Senator Cook made to his native land and, after becoming a senator, to Canada as a whole.

I need say nothing more except that we all share a sense of loss as we look around and no longer see those three former colleagues.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I should like briefly to join with other honourable senators in the felicitations to retired Senators Eric Cook and Richard Donahoe and in wishing them a long, happy and fruitful retirement.

I should like to speak as well of the late senator, the Honourable Daniel Aloysius Riley, B.A., B.C.L., Q.C. It is probably not widely known that Dan was born in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island—he was very proud of that fact—to Thomas Riley and Ann Elizabeth O'Toole. He was as Irish as Irish could be.

He was orphaned at a very young age and came, as an orphan, to New Brunswick where he received his education, going through law school at the University of New Brunswick. Saint John, New Brunswick became Dan's adopted city. He served that community well and in many capacities: as a practising lawyer; as a member of Parliament from 1949 to 1953; as a member of the provincial legislature; as a cabinet minister in the administration of the Honourable Louis Robichaud; as chairman of the Electric Power Commission of New Brunswick and as Minister of Lands and Mines. He was an efficient minister, an able, amiable and entertaining debater and a serious legislator. He served the people of New Brunswick well under both the Robichaud and Hatfield administrations.

Senator Riley was a happy warrior and he left behind him a great host of friends and no enemies. He gloried in his Irish ancestry. The very names of the seven children of whom he and his wife, Mary, were so proud—Daniel, Patrick, Maura, Kevin, Karen, Kathleen and Sean—attest to the pride he took in his Irish heritage.

I join with other honourable senators in paying tribute to the late Senator Dan Riley and in expressing our sincere condolences to his wife, Mary, and to their family. We shall miss Senator Riley. Perhaps, when VIA Rail service has been returned to Saint John, we will hold a special wake for him.

[Translation]

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, is it not now the appropriate time to get a photostat copy of the appointment of various senators to standing committees so that we might know without delay the membership of those committees. It would really be greatly appreciated if we could now get a photostat copy of the second report of the committee of selection.

[English]

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, it is my understanding that the Clerk Assistant has extra copies of the report, which are available to honourable senators, or I am sure the Clerk Assistant will be happy to provide a photostat copy as requested by the honourable senator.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Phillips moved that the report be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE

OFFICE OF SPEAKER—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Maurice Riel: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Wednesday, November 21, 1984, I will call the attention of the Senate to my tenure as Speaker of the Senate, my experiences and recommendations to the Senate.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday, November 15, 1984, I will move:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to hear evidence on and to consider matters relating to national defence;

That 12 Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the special committee;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada, and to such places abroad where members of the Canadian Armed Forces may be stationed;

That the Committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate;

That the Committee be empowered to retain the services of professional and clerical staff as deemed advisable by the Committee; and

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject before the Committee during the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the Committee.

QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

PRAYER AT COMMENCEMENT OF SITTINGS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, last Tuesday, after expressing discontent about the form of the new prayer, Senator Bélisle wanted to know who was responsible for dropping the Lord's Prayer.

Honourable senators, I took that responsibility, but only after the customary precautions. I found out through appropriate research that the prayer in the House, that is in England, dates back to the 16th century. The Speaker's chaplain would read a noble prayer acceptable to all denominations. According to the words then in use, the Speaker was expected to read a prayer "such as he shall think fittest for this time to be begun every day". The custom was carried on, so much so that at the end of the Elizabethan reign the Speaker had to read a prayer of his own composition.

In keeping with the earliest tradition, I thought I would draft our common prayer, keeping in mind the diversity of beliefs.

Thank you, honourable senators.

HUMAN RIGHTS

JAPANESE-CANADIANS—GOVERNMENT APOLOGY AND COMPENSATION

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

In the other place, on June 29, 1984—the final day of the last Parliament—the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney, then the Leader of the Opposition, asked the Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Pierre Trudeau, for a formal apology by the Government of Canada for actions taken by the government during the Second World War and thereafter respecting Canadians of Japanese descent, wherein he stated that their rights had been trampled upon.

Earlier, on May 16, 1984, in an interview published in the Globe and Mail, Mr. Mulroney was quoted as saying that he was in favour of compensation to those Canadians of Japanese descent who were unfairly interned during the Second World War. In that interview he was also quoted as saying that these Canadians were arbitrarily deprived of their rights.

The very first announcement of the government made by the Honourable Jack Murta, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism, the day the cabinet was sworn in, appeared in a Canadian Press story published in the Ottawa Citizen on September 18 last. The minister stated that Canadians of Japanese origin would receive an apology and compensation for their internment and that a committee would be established to—and I quote his words—"take a look and find out what we are talking about in terms of compensation."

Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate now inform the Senate when the government intends to fulfil this commitment for a full apology? At the same time can he also inform the Senate what form of compensation the government is considering and when an announcement with respect to the compensation might be made so that this stain on the Canadian conscience might be finally eradicated? Finally, can he table in the Senate the names of the people who had property taken from them, the description of that property and the quantum of those claims which were never settled and are still open by the Custodian of Alien Property or his successors in title?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend is aware that the subject matter of his question does not come within my particular responsibilities in the cabinet. Therefore, I will take his question as notice and obtain an answer as quickly as I can.

I do not necessarily subscribe to every word in the honourable senator's introduction, since there may be some debatable points contained therein. However, he is right to say that the Minister of State for Multiculturalism has this matter under active consideration. With respect to the information he asks for about unsettled claims, that is a matter which may take more time in order to provide an answer.

TRANSPORT

RAIL TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS—REGULATIONS

Hon. Andrew Thompson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, of which he might want to take notice. It concerns the Mississauga train derailment which took place approximately five years ago.

My question concerns whether the government, and particularly the Minister of Transport, is satisfied that the Railway Transport Committee, the railway regulating arm of the Canadian Transport Commission, has initiated adequate regulations based on the Grange report which made recommendations concerning safety measures to be taken in cases of hazardous chemical materials being transported through populated areas. Specifically, the Railway Transport Committee implemented regulations flowing from the dangerous goods legislation of 1980. It considered the speed of trains carrying dangerous chemicals, the length of those trains and the implementation of heat resistant roller bearings which are now required on 75 per cent of all trains.

I should also like to know whether the chemical manufacturers' self-regulation with respect to packaging and transportation appears to be satisfactory to the minister; and, if not, what kind of regulations would he want to see imposed.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my colleague has raised a matter of considerable public interest. As I recall, it was the present Minister of Transport, the Honourable Donald Mazankowski, who some five years ago initiated the Grange inquiry, or summoned it into existence, in order to look into this matter. I hope my memory serves me correctly on this point.

Senator Thompson is quite right in that his question does not fall within my particular area of responsibility. It covers a number of technical matters which I am unable to answer, in any case. Thus, I certainly will have to take his question as notice and get back to him as quickly as I can.

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEES

FREQUENCY OF MEETINGS AND COMPOSITION

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I am inspired to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee of Selection, having looked at the report of that committee. I do not think he will be able to answer my question immediately.

My first point is with respect to the Joint Committee on the Printing of Parliament. I would be interested to know when that committee met last and how many times it has met in the last 10 years. I suspect it has not met once over the last 20 years. Why do we continue to appoint senators to sit on that committee?

I wish to ask a similar question with respect to the Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament. Can senators be provided with some statistics with respect to when that committee last met and how many times it has met in the last 10 years? Why do we go through this rigmarole every year?

My final question is with respect to the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, in which I have a particular interest. I notice that only six senators have been appointed to that committee, when there is provision for eight. Was it not possible to dig up another couple of senators to fill the vacancies on that committee?

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I will make every effort to obtain the dates of the committee meetings for Senator Godfrey. I suppose the reason senators are appointed to the committees mentioned by Senator Godfrey is because the rules of this place require it. As long as the rules exist we will attempt to appoint senators to sit on those committees.

With respect to the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, there was some confusion. I will not say that confusion emanated from the majority side of the house; but I will say there was some confusion. I believe it can be cleared up within the next three or four days.

THE CABINET

RESPONSIBILITIES OF LEADER OF GOVERNMENT IN THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate concerning the questions posed by Senators Grafstein and Thompson. Twice, the Leader of the Government in the Senate stated that the question did not relate to his particular area of responsibility in the government. Does that mean that he has some areas of responsibility in the government other than that of Leader of the Government in the Senate?

● (1450)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I often wonder why my honourable friend did not address that question to some of my predecessors in this post. However, I think he will be able to corroborate my testimony, which is that it is considered that the management of the Senate is a sufficient job for any one individual to try and tackle.

Senator Frith: I would have thought so and therefore can we assume that, apart from the responsibility for accepting all questions that are posed in the Senate to the government, there is no other special area of responsibility that the government leader has?

Senator Roblin: I am not quite sure to what end my friend's question is leading, but I can tell him that I shall do my best to answer any question addressed to me, drawing on whatever knowledge I have at my disposal.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: I gather from the answer to that question that the Leader of the Government in the Senate is not a member of any cabinet committees that have special responsibilities in certain areas.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I must advise my honourable friend that I am a member of a number of cabinet committees, but I am not vested with an executive portfolio in the sense that other ministers are. My portfolio might be termed a parliamentary one, in much the same fashion as that of the house leader in the other place. Therefore, I do not have departmental responsibilities as such but, as a cabinet member, I share collective responsibility.

Hon. Hazen Argue: You are, therefore, a member of the cabinet?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): And an excellent choice.

OFFICE OF LEADER OF THE GOVERNMENT

Hon. Andrew Thompson: I would like to ask the Leader of the Government a question. I recall when he spoke on the subject of an elected Senate, that he spoke, as he always does, with verve, eloquence, great conviction and commitment. I am sure all of us take considerable pride in his appointment to his present position as Leader of the Government. At the time of his speech on Senate reform, I recall that his concern about not having an elected Senate was because he felt an appointed Senate did not provide proper legitimacy. With respect to his present appointment, I would ask whether he feels there would be greater legitimacy if he had a consensus following from election by his colleagues in his own caucus and, if so, whether he has considered doing that.

[Senator Roblin.]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend raises a fascinating point. I must say that when anyone starts off a question with very kind remarks of the type he addressed to me, I immediately become a little suspicious that something will follow which will cause me a little difficulty.

I have to admit that I have been and am still of the mind with respect to the constitutional position of the Senate that I espoused some time ago. However, I must also admit that that happens to be my opinion, formed as a private member of the Senate and therefore one which, in the present circumstances, has to be adjusted to the policy of the government, and so I accept that limitation on my own freedom of expression.

I am not sure whether I would dare to offer myself as a candidate for the franchise of my colleagues on the government side for this post.

Senator Thompson: My question merely referred to your caucus. I did not extend it to the whole Senate, although that is a challenging issue.

Senator Roblin: That would be even more fun, if I had to appeal for the support of senators regardless of where they sit, but the fact is that I am constrained to operate under the Constitution as it now exists, and that accounts for my being in this present position.

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, seconded by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to Her Speech at the opening of the session.—(Honourable Senator MacEachen P.C.)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this is the first opportunity I have had to congratulate Senator Charbonneau on becoming the presiding officer of the Senate. In looking through the Debates of the Senate I note that when a predecessor of mine in this particular post spoke in a similar debate on October 11, 1979, he took occasion to welcome a new senator and to congratulate him on his appointment. Of course, that was Senator Perrault extending a welcome to Senator Charbonneau. At that time, my colleague pointed out the very great qualifications of Senator Charbonneau and the contribution that he would inevitably make to the work of the Senate. That, of course, must have been fully justified by his work since then, for we see the recognition given to that work by his selection as the presiding officer. I certainly want to congratulate him and assure him of my full co-operation in carrying out his responsibilities.

I wish also, honourable senators, to congratulate the mover and seconder on their speeches of last Tuesday. They launched our debates very well indeed. I thank them for the good wishes which they extended to me as I begin my tenure as a senator and as Leader of the Opposition. There is much I have to learn about the ways of this legislative body. In fact, the learning process is well begun.

It is evident that the environment in which the Thirty-third Parliament will operate is drastically different from that of its predecessor. The election gave us a new Prime Minister and a government with a huge majority in the House of Commons—possibly an unmanageable majority. Nevertheless, the win was decisive and impressive in every region and province, and certainly I would not deny for a moment the evident joy on the faces of Senators Macquarrie and Tremblay as they dwelt upon the significance of that victory.

Indeed, Senator Macquarrie volunteered some friendly advice. He warned us against becoming disconsolate in our role as opposition members, and he offered to provide whatever counsel had carried him through all those years which he spent in opposition. Let me assure honourable senators that we on this side will not become disconsolate. We understand the reluctance which our friends opposite have shown in the past in remaining in office for any significant length of time.

I want to refer also to comments which Senator Macquarrie made about the Senate. He told us that the Senate was an integral part of our structure. One wonders whether the role of the Senate has been altered by the current political context. As far as I am concerned, the constitutional position and political stature of the Senate remains unchanged. No member of this chamber would suggest that the Senate should usurp the leading role of the House of Commons, or systematically obstruct the will of the majority in the elected body of Parliament. Certainly I do not approach my role as Leader of the Opposition from that vantage point.

However, as Senator Macquarrie also pointed out, there is an important question of mathematical strength. We do have numbers on this side; we have a strong Liberal majority. That Liberal majority has an enormous responsibility to exercise its role without disregarding the will of the people as reflected in the membership of the House of Commons, but the government minority in this chamber has an equal responsibility to take account of the realities of its minority position.

Every legislative assembly in our system operates on the majority principle, and the Senate is no exception. The majority will decide; the majority will prevail. That, of course, is not a calamity; it is not a danger. I certainly have had a great deal of experience operating as a member of governments which survived for years in a minority situation in the House of Commons. However, the management of such a situation requires a firm grasp and awareness of the realities. In 1979, as honourable senators will recall, the government decided to behave as if it had a majority in the House of Commons. Of course, that was an unhappy experience. I am sure that the Leader of the Government in the Senate will show a more subtle approach to the majority in this chamber.

Of course, the difference between us is not just in numbers. We differ in political philosophy. We are Liberals on this side of the chamber, and we have a distinctive approach to public questions. We cannot behave as if that did not matter. We cannot become Tories just to make life easy for ourselves and our colleagues on the other side. That is a reality that has to be taken into account.

There are, in my view, two extremes to be avoided; on the one hand, confrontation, and on the other, automatic acquiescence to every wish of the government. There is a broad area of constructive possibilities in between which can permit us to make an effective contribution to the legislative process.

Honourable senators, on Monday last the Speech from the Throne was read in this chamber, and on Thursday the Minister of Finance delivered an economic statement in the House of Commons. It is difficult to deal with one without dealing with both of them together. Those two statements spoke of change: "a new era of national reconciliation, economic renewal, and social justice", "a fresh start", "a magnificent opportunity to build a renewed national consensus", and "a strategy for growth and jobs".

We certainly applaud the nobility of the sentiments contained in certain passages of both documents. In fact, I can find certain features, certain proposals in the Speech from the Throne, which would certainly command my support and the support, I am sure, of my colleagues, particularly those measures which are forecast to improve the social support enjoyed by citizens of Canada, especially the additional support that will be available to certain categories of citizens between the ages of 60 and 64. That is all to the good. One cannot fail to mention some of these loftier objectives and some specific measures before going on to a more analytical treatment of both of those documents.

I should add that those two statements, the Speech from the Throne and the economic statement, do strive to rewrite the history of Canada for the greater glory of the Conservative party. I should like to return to that theme later.

Many of the themes in the Speech from the Throne are familiar; we heard them during the election campaign. At that time we also heard talk of action. The favourite trilogy of the current prime minister was jobs, jobs, jobs. The Canadian public, day after day, was led to expect action on jobs. Canadians were told that the mere election of a Conservative government would result in the immediate creation of tens of thousands of jobs, that massive investment would flow into the country, and that entrepreneurs would be unleashed from the restraints of doubt and indecision.

That surge did not happen on September 5, and it certainly did not happen on November 9 in the wake of the statement by the Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: The economic statement delivered by the minister deserves some scrutiny. The argument is carefully constructed to conceal a deep flaw. The Minister of Finance has presented an economic picture which glosses over certain basic assumptions about economic performance in the months and years ahead. That attempt must be exposed, and to do so we need only refer to the minister's statement and the supporting budget documents, or economic documents. One should not fall into the bad practice of calling a budget a budget!

The Minister of Finance included a set of projections for growth, inflation, unemployment and the deficit. Are those projections designed to forecast the future under the recently-announced policies of the Conservative government? No, not at all. There is no forecast for growth or unemployment under a Conservative government. The figures are what the Minister of Finance describes as a status quo projection. He paints the picture not of what will happen under the current government and the policies which it announced, but of what would happen if the policies of the government were frozen out to the year 1990; what would have happened if the former Liberal government's policies remained untouched and the economic environment unfolded under certain assumptions.

That means, honourable senators, that we cannot look to any of these documents to find any forecast, even any attempt to forecast, what would happen to growth and employment under the policies of this government. In fact, the Minister of Finance has given us numbers on only one aspect of the future; he has projected a figure for the federal deficit in 1985-86. He states that the deficit would have been $37.1 billion and that with his announced changes it will be $34.9 billion.

I must say that there is still a good deal of explaining to be done on how these figures were established, but at least we have a prediction of what the Conservative government means; it means cuts. It means, to quote the Minister of Finance, "controlling the deficit must be (the) priority for this year and for each year of the mandate."

So, we have the projection for the deficit. What about the missing elements? How can the public—how can Parliament—be content with a statement which specifically overlooks any attempt to forecast economic performance, especially unemployment, under the new policies of the Conservative government? The Minister of Finance is ready to project with apparent ease what the continuation of the status quo would mean, not just tomorrow, next week, next year or the following year, but out to 1990, but he is totally unwilling to say what the consequences of his cuts will be for jobs and unemployment six weeks or six months hence. He is totally unwilling to tell us the impact on these economic parameters as a result of the policies announced in the Speech from the Throne and in the economic statement of last week.

On Friday, of course, he let the cat out of the bag. He said in the House of Commons that he had run the data through the economic model of the Department of Finance. That means that he was given the numbers to show the influence of his announced cuts and other policy changes on jobs and economic performance. He has those numbers, but so far he has refused to disclose them. On the other hand, he is prepared to disclose numbers up to 1990 under a status quo projection related to Liberal policies. Why not add to the picture by giving us the full numbers at his disposal? He says that the influence on confidence cannot be measured on economic models. He has no problem producing figures for Liberal policies to 1990, but he wants to keep the economic consequences of his own policies in total secrecy. If he were ready to live up to the rhetoric of open government, he would make public those numbers. Having made those numbers public, if he felt that they did not take sufficient account of the confidence factor, he should then say how many jobs are going to be created by this subjective process.

I submit that there is a more profound reason why the Minister of Finance does not wish to give anything more than a useless, and in many respects questionable, forecast of what a frozen set of economic policies would have meant. He is far more fearful about the future and more helpless in the face of it than the government is ready to admit. The Minister of Finance has failed to make any prediction for unemployment under his government because he fears that even his forecast of the frozen status quo is too optimistic. Why is he waiting until spring to bring in his first budget? There are important time and process factors in the preparation of a budget. That is not disputed. But I think there is a very important additional reason. The Minister of Finance realizes that the forecast for the Canadian economy in terms of jobs and employment under a Conservative government depends very heavily upon what happens to interest rates in the United States. That in turn depends to an important degree on the budget deficits of the United States. All of this is stated, and rightly so, in the minister's documents. In essence, the delay of a full budget until spring and the withholding of any economic forecast until then is related to the belief that the budgetary decisions had better await a clearer economic signal from the United States.

A close reading of his economic documents reveals that there is a good deal of anguish involved in this wait.

The minister was careful to point out the potential consequences if U.S. interest rates do not come down sharply in the period ahead. He said in his statement that he would be the first to acknowledge that there can be no guarantee that this would be the case, namely, that interest rates will come down. Mind you, the projection of the frozen scenario, if one might call it that, assumes that interest rates will average 6.5 per cent from 1986 to 1990. Any one of us can ask himself or herself whether it is realistic to expect interest rates to average that level by 1986, but those projections given in the economic statement depend upon that coming about. In his statement the minister said:

—that there can be no guarantee that this will be the case. And if interest rates do not fall, our economic and fiscal situation would be even worse.

There is no guarantee that they will not fall. His statement continues:

Growth would be lower and the unemployment rate could remain above 10 per cent for the balance of this decade. The federal deficit would continue to increase and could reach $50 billion per year by the early 1990s.

Those are the words of the Minister of Finance in his statement to the House of Commons.

In the economic documents we have this spelled out in greater detail. The following is stated:

If, for example, interest rates were to remain at about current levels through 1985 and then decline slightly to about 10 per cent over the medium term, conventional analysis would suggest that real growth in 1985 would likely be under 2 per cent and could average about 1 per cent per year less over the remainder of the decade than is currently projected. The unemployment rate would not likely drop below 10 per cent at any time.

That paragraph ends by stating:

A severe recession would be a distinct possibility.

That is all in the documents that we have received from the government.

This frankness is laudable because economic policy must take account of the potential hazards of the future. But now we can see emerging from behind all the rhetoric of jobs, jobs and jobs a deep-seated doubt in the mind of the Minister of Finance that the Conservative government will be able to deal with unemployment in any significant way. For the moment he has engaged in a first round of cuts but these, we have been told, are just a prelude—a starting point—while he awaits economic signals, mainly from the United States.

If I may summarize this effort to penetrate the shroud covering the minister's statement, I think that this is where we are in terms of economic policy at the present time under the new minister and under the new government.

We have an economic statement which fails totally to forecast economic performance under Conservative policies. There is no effort at all.

We have a Minister of Finance who will not reveal the data which show the job losses that will result from his announced economic measures. There has been speculation as to the impact of the cuts on jobs. Is 20,000 the figure? I do not know, but the minister knows and he will not tell us.

We have an explicit warning from the Minister of Finance that the economic picture might fail to improve in the years ahead. The warning is very clearly there.

We have a policy of waiting until spring for the unveiling of the next phase in the hidden Tory agenda.

Finally, and most importantly, when you strip away the rhetoric about confidence and consultation, and when you get down to the guts, the minister cannot disguise an aching doubt about whether Conservative economic policies will ever be able to provide the jobs, jobs and jobs promised to the Canadian people in the election. That doubt is very much there.

● (1520)

Honourable senators, I have already referred to what I consider to be the re-writing of history in the Speech from the Throne. In its large section on foreign policy, the new government, the Mulroney government, has attempted to show that it will restore the tradition of constructive Canadian internationalism; that it will "restore a spirit of goodwill and true partnership between Canada and the United States;" and that under the new government "Canadian internationalism will again be active and constructive in the wider world."

If I may say so, honourable senators, the historical description that supports this fulsome rhetoric is simply nonsense. To assert that Canadian internationalism ceased sometime shortly after the founding of NATO, the early U.N. peacekeeping missions, and the booting of South Africa out of the Commonwealth, is blatantly wrong and will be seen to be wrong by any high school student or observer of world events.

Does the new government expect Canadians to obliterate from memory the major contribution that Canada has made in the past decade and more? As examples, I refer to Mr. Trudeau's central role in maintaining the cohesion and vigour of the Commonwealth especially at difficult moments in the early 1970s; Canada's leading role in the organizations of francophone states, most recently in the promotion of a francophone summit; the economic co-operation agreements with the European Economic Community, Japan and other states; Canada's membership in the Summit Seven; full Canadian participation in trade and economic discussions in the framework of GATT, UNCTAD and the International Monetary Fund; the major contribution to discussions of North-South issues at the CEIC conference at Montebello and at Cancun; and, of course, the most exacting and comprehensive peace initiative ever undertaken by a Canadian prime minister.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: All of that is wiped off the slate. The turning to China is obliterated. All I want to say to honourable senators opposite is that in these and in many other areas, Canadian internationalism was alive and well on September 17, 1984.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: Let us hear no more about the necessity of reviving it when, in reality, the current government, since taking office, has taken action to weaken rather than strengthen Canada's international position. I probably would not have dealt with this if it had not become such a prominent part of the Speech from the Throne, that is, restoration, revival, renewal. But what has happened in international affairs under this government?

I regret very much—and maybe we can hear an explanation—that the cabinet committee on foreign affairs and defence was abolished. That committee has operated within government for a long time. It was swept away.

The international trade portion of the Department of External Affairs now reports to the Economic and Regional Development Committee, chaired by Mr. Stevens, clearly diminishing the international thrust of the department's mandate and clearly diminishing, as does the abolition of the committee itself, the standing, the authority and the role of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In addition to all of this, we have the document from the President of the Treasury Board announcing that missions are to be closed abroad. Despite all the protestations about a new era of co-operation with the United States, we have decided to defer the construction of the new Canadian embassy in Washington. These are not signs of reviving internationalism; they are signs of withdrawal.

Probably, of all the examples I could mention, the most dramatic is what the government has done in the field of official development assistance. The new government has reneged on Canada's commitment to provide an expenditure of .7 per cent of gross national product in official development assistance by 1990. Here the gap between rhetoric and action is so large that it undermines the whole credibility of the government.

On September 25, 1984, a few days after the new government was sworn in, the new Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Clark, made a major statement of Canadian policy to the United Nations General Assembly. It was a good speech, and I looked at it carefully because I wanted to find out whether the new government would maintain that Canadian commitment which is so important to Canadian internationalism. I found that Mr. Clark came through. He said:

There are urgent questions of human suffering that must be addressed. Our new government intends to maintain Canada's commitment to reaching .7 per cent of the GNP by 1990 in official development assistance. Despite serious economic difficulties, we shall not turn our backs on the world's disadvantaged peoples.

I said, "Hear, hear." But that was the rhetoric.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Now the facts.

Senator MacEachen: The Speech from the Throne contains a full paragraph about the importance of Canada's development assistance and the seriousness of economic problems in developing countries, all of this in apparent support for the so-called restoration of Canadian internationalism. The Minister of Finance also spoke about development assistance in his statement. He said that the government remained committed "to making steady progress towards attaining our target of .7 per cent of gross national product devoted to official development assistance." He apparently did not dare to be forthright with the Canadian people and the countries who look to Canada as a progressive nation. Perhaps he wished to spare his colleague, Mr. Clark, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who had confirmed the commitment of .7 per cent by 1990. Tucked away in the economic document offered by the President of the Treasury Board was the full statement of the Conservative government's policy. The target of .7 per cent by 1990 has been abandoned.

Senator Frith: Shame.

Senator MacEachen: In its place is a target of .7 per cent by 1995—a full five-year delay. The new target for 1990 is .6 per cent.

What does this mean in aid dollars? If we take the GNP projection in the budget—the projection which the Conservative government says it will exceed—the change means $600 million in one year alone, 1989-90. Depending on the pattern in financial development assistance between now and that year, the total cut in Canada's commitment comes to more than $2 billion. This drastic curtailment, I must say, honourable senators, I find unforgivable in itself.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: But, more than the act itself, it repudiates the word of the Secretary of State, given before the General Assembly on September 25. Before the world, he stated that we would maintain our commitment; that we would not turn our backs upon the poor people of the world. Last week the President of the Treasury Board cast all that aside when he said that what Mr. Clark stated at the U. N. is no longer valid. Will Canada continue to have very much credibility at the United Nations?

A week or so ago at the United Nations, the new ambassador, Mr. Lewis, made an impassioned plea for the poor people of the world. After he had finished speaking, there were gathered around him all of the African ambassadors, saying, "Canada, we are proud of you." I wonder how Ambassador Lewis will feel now about talking to his colleagues from the Third World. Whatever benefits will flow to Canada from his appointment, they will not take the form of increased Canadian help to the Third World. So much for Canadian internationalism.

I find matters even more incredible when I turn to the defence field. The Department of National Defence has been given a reduced budget for next year, despite the Prime Minister's repeated and scornful references to the inability of the Canadian armed forces, because of inadequate financial resources, to fulfill Canada's commitments. We heard that sort of statement frequently during the election campaign. Yet for the year 1985-86, the budget of the Department of National Defence has been reduced by $150 million. We are told in the same economic document that, even with the reduced budget—even with $150 million less—and even with the Prime Minister's constant references to our inability to meet our commitments—we are still able to fulfill all of our NATO commitments. That is contained in the economic documents under the aegis of the President of the Treasury Board. Furthermore, this happens after the Minister of National Defence—obviously not aware of the intentions of his colleagues, the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board—went to Washington, went to NATO and told his colleagues that Canada intended to increase its defence spending. For the first full year of this government, despite these statements, there is a cut.

An Hon. Senator: More shame.

Senator MacEachen: So much for credibility and so much for Canadian internationalism.

I liked the emphasis in the Speech from the Throne on Canada-United States relations. Management of that relationship will require in the future, as it has always received in the past, the full attention of the government and especially that of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

But I do find it inaccurate and, I must say, offensive to have the assertion made that it was necessary for the new government to restore a climate of goodwill between our two governments. It is not surprising that I should find that assertion offensive because, in this particular case, I can speak from some personal knowledge and experience acquired through handling our relations with the United States up until June 30, 1984, just a few months ago.

I want to say a few words about that. The first meeting between Secretary Shultz and myself took place in Ottawa in October, 1982, shortly after I had resumed the leadership of the department and, indeed, not long after Mr. Shultz had become Secretary of State. In fact, it was Mr. Shultz's first visit abroad to a foreign minister. He came to Canada because he wanted to attest to his interest in Canada and in the health of our relationship. It was an important meeting because at that time we agreed to meet quarterly in order to ensure that all ongoing bilateral issues were kept under review and to accelerate the resolution of disagreements and disputes.

At each of our subsequent meetings, we ticked off areas of progress and devised new ways by which to make progress when issues were stalled. More than once, both privately and publicly, each of us underlined the usefulness of these meetings and how they had served the quality of our discussions and helped the Canada-U.S. relationship.

It was under the framework of this institution of the quarterly meetings that Mr. Chrétien met Mr. Shultz in Bangkok, and Mr. Clark met Mr. Shultz in Toronto. I was delighted that that procedure had been followed because I believe that these meetings on a quarterly basis should be continued as a most important institution in Canada-United States relations.

I am afraid that the new government—and, particularly, the Prime Minister—seems to think that amiability is the chief element of diplomacy. Good personal relations have their place; there is no doubt about that, and I would not dispute it. When Mr. Shultz visited Ottawa in 1982, I received him as an old friend dating back to university days together in the fifties. However, it was clear that, while friendship created a helpful tone, neither one of us would or could "give" on important national interests simply to accommodate a mood of amiability. It cannot be done. Mr. Shultz, for example, never softened his opposition to certain aspects of the National Energy Program just to be nice or just to set a tone of friendship, and I certainly did not cease pressing for action on acid rain or on the Garrison diversion, just to be nice.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: Sometimes it may be that, if national interests are to be protected or advanced, you cannot always be nice.

In his speech in the House of Commons, the Prime Minister described the attitude of the Liberal government towards the United States as being churlish and vexatious. Well, that is invention; that is fiction. Neither word could be applied to the discussions which I held with Secretary Shultz over a period of almost two years, nor could they be applied to the discussions which took place between the President and Prime Minister Trudeau, many of which I personally attended. It is not to Canada's advantage to try to rewrite history in this way.

Of course we have difficulties with the United States; we always shall. We sought—and I am sure that the government today will seek—to maintain a sound, frank and friendly relationship with the United States; one in which we attempted to serve Canadian interests and, together with the United States and other countries, to advance peace and justice in the world. We never felt that effusive expressions of friendship or subservience were likely to impress the American administration any more than they would other countries in the world.

When we look at the substance of Canada-U. S. relations, there is as yet no sign that the present government is making progress in the defence of Canadian interests. I know that Mr. Shultz gave precisely the same answer on acid rain to Mr. Clark in Toronto as he had given previously. There are important American interests involved and when they are ready they will move. They certainly were not going to move before the American election, because it was in their interests not to move. They may move now. We hope they will. But I do not think we will make them move by effusively declaring what might be viewed as our subservience to them.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: Let me give another illustration, if I may. I refer to the Gulf of Maine boundary dispute. I could say a lot about that. I believe that we in the Senate should pay some attention to the finding of the World Court. It is a major issue for Canada. The decision of the World Court was announced and there has been hardly any public discussion. It has sunk out of sight as an issue, and I want to revive it.

Immediately after the decision by the World Court, the Minister of Fisheries told the media that Canada should not make a fuss as a result of the decision of the World Court because the United States might be unpleasant with us. To begin with, that attitude seems to indicate a naive departure from the cardinal principle of our bilateral diplomacy; that each item should be dealt with on its own merits. To trade one item against another is to invoke the combined weight of the United States against Canada on all issues. That is bad enough. It is probably very damaging. But it has also the certainty of inviting distrust in Canada that particular interests are being sacrificed. The fishermen of Nova Scotia will certainly be angry if they discern a tendency to sacrifice their interests for the benefit of our general relationships with the United States.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: I have been wondering, ever since the decision of the World Court, why ministers of the government were so eager to express satisfaction with the decision when the result fell short of the strong claim that Canada had so laboriously prepared and so confidently presented to the World Court. I have wondered, why the immediate expression of general satisfaction with the decision of the World Court?

[Senator MacEachen.]

Why such satisfaction with the result, when the scallop fishermen, for example, got less from the World Court than Canadian negotiators had won for them in earlier negotiations and which was set out in the 1979 treaty with the United States? The scallop fishermen got less than we had negotiated in the agreement to which the executive branch of the United States had consented. It was simply the activity of certain senators which prevented the ratification of that treaty. That treaty gave more to our scallop fishermen, and I ask why express satisfaction with a disappointing result when there is to be a further bargaining with the United States on a fisheries arrangement?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: It is a tactical blunder of the first order to expect that professions of contentment will strengthen Canada's hand with the United States negotiators, and particularly with interest groups in the United States which are already active in pursuing their interests against even the decision of the World Court. I can only suggest that this is an illustration of the harm that naive amiability can do to Canadian diplomacy and Canadian interests. What counts is results. The atmospherics of amiability are not a substitute for genuine progress on fisheries issues, acid rain, and so on.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: The Gulf of Maine decision leads to another important blind spot in the government's economic policy statements to date. Just as there was virtually no discussion of the economic implications of the World Court's decision for eastern Canada and for Nova Scotia—except on the part of Nova Scotia fishermen—so there has been virtually no mention of regional economic development in the statement by the Minister of Finance. I repeat, there is no mention of regional economic development. In the economic statement there is no attempt whatsoever to identify or deal with regional development concerns. There is not a single mention of any commitment to reduce regional economic disparities. There is no mention, for example, of the particular economic problems of Atlantic Canada, and what there is takes the form of bad economic news: PIP grant cuts of $250 million; Department of Regional Industrial Expansion cuts of $200 million; CN marine cuts of $37 million; Fisheries and Oceans cuts of $30 million—I repeat, Fisheries and Oceans cuts of $30 million. That is unbelievable. In addition to the cuts there is ominous talk in the economic documents about “consolidation of employment” in the fisheries. We know what that is. That is a code word for fewer jobs.

Senator Frith: Right.

Senator MacEachen: So, honourable senators, this is a preliminary reaction to the rich material for debate that is found in the Speech from the Throne and the economic statement. I have attempted to deal with a number of important issues, and I am sure that my colleagues will deal with others. I have taken time to put my comments together in the belief that an active, vigorous Senate, and vigorous debate in the Senate, can make an important contribution to public policy. The Speech from the Throne and the economic statement by the Minister of Finance provide us with a wealth of material for scrutiny and debate. If we do our work well, as I am confident that we can, this chamber will merit greater public attention, public support and respect.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I admit the challenge that is posed to anyone who attempts to respond adequately to a well-prepared presentation by a very experienced public man, but this afternoon I shall attempt, in response to what I have heard, to offer a few comments which perhaps will shed a somewhat different light on the problems the Leader of the Opposition has exposed to this chamber. Of course, before I begin such an attempt, I want to follow the pleasant tradition of expressing our welcome—certainly, my own welcome—to our new Speaker, and also to the Honourable Senator Asselin, whose name has been proposed, for our consideration tomorrow, as Speaker pro tempore. I am sure that each will fulfil his role with distinction.

I should also like to say, without exaggeration, that I listened to the speeches of the mover and seconder of the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne with real attention and interest. I feel that they provided a very satisfactory introduction to what is an important debate. I want to say to the gentleman who has just spoken that in the field of foreign affairs, where, I have to admit, he is an expert and I am a neophyte—he presents interesting arguments which may lay the basis for a more profound discussion of this whole area of national concern. I do not think that it is possible for me to equal his breadth of knowledge in this topic, because of my previous experience which has been in other fields. I can say that I do not think our foreign policy is going to fall apart because we will not proceed with the embassy in Washington. I really do not think that we are letting the nation down if we decide to close some of our posts and embassies in other parts of the world. It is quite possible that we would be able to pursue a good foreign policy even if those particular measures were put in hand.

However, I can say to the honourable senator that to me—a neophyte, an amateur, one who is no expert in the field—foreign policy in Canada has one overriding problem, and that is our relations with the United States of America. Connected with that association with that great nation is the question of trade between our countries, which is the lifeblood of my part of the country and, indeed, I suspect, of other parts of this nation. If anyone thinks that there is no possibility of improving our relations with the United States of America, I suggest that he think again. I suggest that if he thinks that having a conversation with the United States Secretary of State, Mr. Shultz, exposes the whole range of American concerns about Canada, he should think again. I have had the opportunity, as a member of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, of meeting annually with members of Congress, senators and representatives, to which a great area of authority in the field of foreign affairs of the United States has been entrusted. I can tell you from that direct and personal experience that, in the minds of members of Congress, the position of the Canadian nation with respect to relations with the United States leaves something to be desired. It is all very well to make a deal with the Secretary of State or not to make a deal with the Secretary of State, as the circumstances may be, but we know from our experience that that is not enough. The relationship is not like that existing in Canada, where you could make a deal with my honourable friend when he was Secretary of State for External Affairs and know that it would hold. In the United States we know that such deals do not hold unless we can carry the minds and the consent of the members of Congress of that nation. That is where relationships between our two countries need to improve.

By no means do I belittle what a former administration has accomplished in this country in terms of foreign affairs. I do not want to denigrate, downgrade or scorn their efforts because they were speaking as best they knew—and it was a pretty good best most of the time—for the Canadian people, and we have not been accustomed to too much argument on foreign affairs. But when somebody says or implies to me that we cannot improve our relations with the United States and that the government is wrong to try, I tell them from my experience that that is a mistake to make such an assertion. There is plenty of room for improvement. There is a crying need for us to make the effort, and I am pleased that the government of this nation under its present Prime Minister has agreed that this should be the case and that it should be an important part of our foreign policy. Relationships with the United States are critical to us in every way. Are they good? I hope so. Can they be made better? Undoubtedly. Is there scope for government policy in this connection? I believe there is. So, when I talk about foreign policy I think, first, of the United States of America.

The second thing I think about is peace. I am not one of those who belittle the efforts of the previous administration in that field. When Prime Minister Trudeau's peace initiative was before this chamber, I gave it my support. When he set up his peace institute, I gave it my support, and I know that members of my party did the same. Nor am I ashamed of the fact that Mr. David Lewis speaks for us in the United Nations.

Senator MacEachen: Stephen Lewis.

Senator Frith: David Lewis may be speaking for you in another place!

Senator Roblin: I am sorry, I got carried away. I am quite happy that Mr. Douglas Roche is heading up our disarmament effort. I think that they will set a very high standard. I think that the honourable senator who has just spoken will find that when all the facts are on the table and when the government's policy is fully announced, he will be reassured on any problem he envisages about Stephen Lewis keeping his word and our word in the United Nations with respect to special assistance to Ethiopia and to other people who need the kind of help we can give. I think you will find that provision will be made and that we will not be backing away from the pledges and undertakings we have given in the United Nations with respect to these matters.

If I were to refer to a third leg on which our foreign policy rests, it certainly has to have something to do with NATO and defence. I admit that the government is reducing the defence budget by $154 million, and the honourable senator was right in bringing it to our attention. However, it is also fair to say that, because of the reduced costs in the operation of that department, in certain important capital expenditures in which they are engaged, we are able to live up to our 3 per cent in real terms, real dollars, in connection with our undertakings to NATO. That is the statement that has been made by the government. I believe it is correct, and I say that to my honourable friend. It does not mean—and he can examine the undertakings of the Conservative Party in the last election—that it ends there or that we do not intend to do more in this respect. The Prime Minister made it perfectly clear on August 28 that there is a time element to all this. So those members of this chamber who feel that we are going to let down our colleagues in NATO can set their minds at rest that it will not happen.

It seems to me that the great flaw or omission of the last several years—and I think our Special Committee on National Defence very appropriately underlined it—is the fact that we do not know where we are going in the area of defence. There has not been a study to establish a Canadian defence policy for years, and our own Senate committee has made it perfectly clear that that is the sine qua non, the thing that must be done before we do anything else in the way of spending money on defence—find out what we should spend the money on and what our defence policies and undertakings ought to be. We know from that committee and its studies that we are floundering in that field. Therefore, it seems to me not unreasonable that the government should ask for a breathing period in order to examine that problem of defence and to learn how we should spend our money, instead of going ahead under the present circumstances. So, in the field of foreign affairs, although I have not covered all the points raised by my honourable friend and I admit that at face value his criticisms certainly have some impact, I think that when one examines the fundamentals of our foreign policy and of what this government is attempting to do, one will find it a little more satisfactory than the analysis which he has just placed before us.

Let me turn now to another topic, that of cuts. Is there one man or woman around here, or any place in the Parliament of Canada, who looks at cuts in government spending with a smile on his or her face? Of course not. Everyone who is affected by a cut complains about it, and that is natural. Why shouldn't they? The thing is that it is up to us not to consider cuts in isolation, as affecting each one of us in particular or our particular interests, but, rather, to consider them in the wider context of the aims and goals that are being attempted and the reasons behind them. It is not good enough to complain about cuts. It is only satisfactory if you examine the reasons behind the cuts, because that is the motive by which these things come to pass.

My honourable friend said that we were cutting the amount of money available for regional development. That is perfectly true. But what are we cutting? Did he take the trouble to look into it? We are cutting the grants that were formerly made to what are called Tier I, which refers to communities in Canada. At the present time the whole country is covered by the regional economic program. To anyone who has any sense of priorities, it is perfectly clear that some parts of the country need assistance more than others. The Tier I classification covers such cities as Winnipeg, Halifax and parts of Toronto. Can anyone seriously complain about that in the present atmosphere of economic difficulty? However, the grants which apply to Tiers 2, 3 and 4—particularly Tiers 3 and 4 which concern disadvantaged areas of the country—are maintained in full force and effect. I do not think anyone can seriously complain about that situation; indeed, it is something we ought to do.

My honourable friend made reference to budget cuts with respect to PIP grants, for heavens' sake. Some one-quarter of a million dollars have been cut from PIP grants and my honourable friend complains. Who receives PIP grants anyway? Most of the recipients of PIP grants are large international oil companies. After they have gone through adjusting for taxes, what does their investment in frontier areas cost them? Nothing—absolutely nothing. Sometimes they even make a profit because of what happens with the tax situation. Of all the billions of dollars being spent on PIP at the present time my honourable friend says that we should restore this one-quarter of a million dollars. I am not convinced that that would be a sound practice.

I wish to come back to what seems to me to be the gravamen of my friend's comments concerning the Speech from the Throne, and, coupled with that, the economic statement. I must confess, probably along with my honourable friend, that I have had some responsibility from time to time in the writing of throne speeches. I have to tell honourable senators that they are the product of fallible human beings. It really is not to be expected that we will be able to agree with everything we see in the Speech from the Throne. I believe that is a reality of political life. However, I think the present Throne Speech and the financial documents presented on Thursday require a different interpretation from the one my honourable friend has placed upon them. I am going to do my best to give that other interpretation.

The first thing we have to consider is why we have the economic statement at all. I find it hard to understand why my honourable friend did not applaud it. After all, in March of 1980 my honourable friend became the Minister of Finance and I believe he made a financial statement of his own in April. Thus, I think he understands what financial statements are all about. I believe he followed up his financial statement with his budget in October. I do not complain about that. That seems like a logical progression. For some reason he now finds it impossible to understand what a financial statement is all about. He complains that we do not have a budget at this time. I simply say that perhaps he has learned something which he has not shared with us. However, that is the way he went about the task. I do not understand why he cannot see the economic statement for what it is.

The economic statement is necessary in order to lay before the public the present financial situation of the Canadian nation. It does no good to talk about budgets or what you are going to do if you do not know the basis upon which you stand and from where you plan to start. The purpose of the economic statement is to make clear where we stand and to clarify problems with which we are faced in this country, because there have been some surprises. I know that the statement of the Prime Minister that the cupboard is bare has not received unanimous approval on opposition benches.

Senator Frith: Because it's flim-flam!

Senator Roblin: I will try it on you and see if you still think it's flim-flam.

Senator Frith: He knew what the situation was.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend says that he knew what the situation was. Let me give him one item to chew on, and after he has digested it I will lead him on to tougher material.

The first area I would like to deal with concerns the Petroleum Compensation Charge. Does anyone here know how that fund was getting along? I did not hear it being talked about during the election campaign. I did not hear any statements made by any Liberal candidates or leaders running in the election that the Petroleum Compensation Charge was running a deficit which is now close to $1 billion. Nor did I hear anyone say that it was growing at a rate of $140 million a month, which amounts to $1.68 billion per year. Who said anything about that?

Senator Frith: It was all in the government documents; you could have seen it.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend says it was in government documents. Let him produce those documents and he can show me where it is. When we got our hands on the books it became clear that this was a program with a deficit of nearly $1 billion.

My honourable friends opposite smile when I make these statements. I suppose they are not much impressed with $1.68 billion. I find that a formidable sum when I consider it has to be raised somewhere and when I realize that it has a bearing on our economic posture. For myself, I find this to be the type of surprise which I find unwelcome.

However, the situation goes further than that. My honourable friend, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, says that they knew. What did they know? According to him they knew that the budget deficit for 1984 would amount to more than $29.6 billion and that it would rise to $34 billion or thereabouts. If I am misinterpreting his view then he can correct me.

Let us suppose that the figures are correct and that they represent an increase of only $4.9 billion. What we did not know was what was to happen after that, since all we had to go on was the budgetary statement made by Mr. Lalonde in February of 1984. What did that statement tell us about the future we have heard so much about this afternoon? It told us that there would be a gradual decrease in deficits and that they would go down to $27.95 billion in 1985. It told us that in 1986 the deficit would decrease to $27.1 billion and that in 1987 it would go down to $26.15 billion. Those figures would lead one to believe that although the situation was not very satisfactory at least it was not getting worse. However, that is not the case. The budgetary deficits in coming years will be much worse than those predicted in the Lalonde budget. If nothing is done in the next year the deficit will be $37.1 billion. How much greater is that amount than the amount we were told we could expect? Only $9.15 billion. I will not burden honourable senators with all the figures, I will just give the increases. In 1986 the increase would be $7.2 billion. In 1987 the increase would be $8.55 billion. Thus, over those four years the budgetary deficit in this country would be over $30 billion more than anyone had been entitled to expect on the basis of the figures we were given in the debates which have taken place with respect to this matter.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Whose figures are those?

Senator Frith: Did you get those figures from some cupboard?

Senator Steuart: Those figures are based on what the situation would be if nothing changed.

Senator Roblin: That is right. Thank God something is going to change. Thank God something has changed. My honourable friend had better get used to it because he will find that he will be a changed man when he sees the things that will take place in this country in the next while.

A general decline is what we were told we were going to get; instead we got a significant increase. These figures are based on what my honourable friend opposite has correctly described as optimistic forecasts that interest rates will decline. Today, in the budget of Canada, interest payments account for 50 per cent of all the money we borrow. We borrow money to pay the interest. If nothing is done by 1990, then 75 per cent of our borrowing will go to pay the interest. Anyone who has any sense of the reality of things knows that that is a dangerous situation, and it is quite unlikely that we will be able to carry on if that sort of thing happens. We are borrowing to pay the interest on the deficit; we are borrowing for operating costs on the deficit, not for productive purposes, which is the way in which private enterprise borrows. We are not borrowing for investment, and it is only investment that creates jobs in the long run. We are transferring the interest money to the holders of government debt, and who are we taking it from? We are taking it from the risk capital sector and we are taking it from labour; make no mistake about that. That is where that money is going, and it is going on a colossal scale. The debt is rising. Right now in 1984 the debt is rising much faster than the economy is growing. Just think about that for a moment. In 1974, the debt was 16.6 per cent of the GNP. In 1984, it is 45.6 per cent of the GNP. Therefore we find ourselves in a position where we have to run faster and work harder simply to stay in the same place.

Nobody was told that the situation was as bad as that. That situation was only discovered when the books were examined. However, that is the purpose of a financial statement—to tell you where you stand. And that, honourable senators, taking into account all of the errors that can find their way into these documents with which I am sure the member across the way is as familiar as I am, is the situation in which we find ourselves.

What is the alternative? Is the alternative a higher deficit? Some call for that. They say there will be a temporary job creation by government spending. I think that was the message that my honourable friend tried to deliver this afternoon when he was talking about certain cuts. However, if we go on borrowing, there will be more unemployment because in the long run, you cannot follow indefinitely the kind of course on which we had embarked. It leads to high interest rates, more taxes, and austerity. Look at Israel. Look at Argentina if you want to see what an uncontrolled debt policy can lead you to. On second thought, you do not need to look at these other countries; just look at Canada. For the last ten years, we have been in a situation of increasing government deficits and if those people who tell us that that is a good thing are right, there should be more people working; there should be less unemployment. The truth of the matter is that, during those ten years of increasing deficits, we have had ten years of increasing unemployment and, in addition to that, we have been afflicted with a style of government intervention which really has not been seen to work.

The plain fact is that the economic policies we have been following have not worked. It is clear that they have not been working since the deficit is rising and unemployment has not been reduced to reasonable levels. Therefore, I think it is the part of good sense and discretion to try a new policy. I am not alone in that belief because, on July 3 of this year, in his campaign for the leadership of his party, the present Leader of the Opposition in the other place, speaking to some students, made the very sensible remark:

Your generation is going to be strangled if Ottawa continues to go into debt at the current pace.

I must say that that was a sound observation. I would like to hear it repeated today. It is one to which I can fully subscribe.

However, my honourable friend says that it is all right to have this statement; it is all right to tell us how bad things are or how good things are or what you think the numbers are. But then, he asks, where is the budget? Where is the solution that you intend to bring in to solve some of these problems? I think I should add a word or two here about the value of consultation, because that element of consultation is one of the reasons why we are not bringing down a budget at the present time.

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Frith: You said before the election that you had consulted everyone and that you were never readier to govern. Your government does not look very ready.

Senator Roblin: I can remember “60 days of decision.” I can remember that.

Senator Frith: Let us talk about this one—

Senator Roblin: I remember that my honourable friend's party knew what they were going to do. “If we are elected we will charge right in there and we will have 60 days of decision.” Let me say that those days have gone forever because we do not intend to indulge ourselves in “60 days of decision.” We intend to consult; and why are we going to consult?—

Senator Frith: Because you are not ready.

Senator Roblin: Because many of the areas which we want to take into consideration are areas in which we share an interest with the provinces. There has been some complaint already that they would have preferred a little more consultation before last Thursday's presentation, and that is understandable. How much more would they have had to complain about if we had attempted a budgetary operation?

The Constitution constrains consultation. That is one of the things that the gentlemen opposite did not learn or, if they learned, they forgot it in the last years in office. Their efforts at consultation, in my opinion, left something to be desired.

Another thing that I think indicates that consultation is a good idea is what I call the unintended consequences of what you do, particularly when you are dealing in the financial field. The unintended consequences of measures which, at first glance, look appropriate and suitable, sometimes become formidable and dangerous. If there is any man in the Parliament of Canada who should understand this principle I am enunciating of the unintended consequences of budgetary measures, it must be the honourable gentleman who has just finished speaking.

Senator MacEachen: I saw that coming.

Senator Roblin: If you saw it coming, why did you expose yourself to it?

Senator Frith: You waited a long time for that one.

Senator Roblin: I quite admit that charge. My honourable friend is right, but I have learned something. I do not know whether my friend has, but I have. I may be a slow learner but sometimes it gets through. One of the things that got through to me is the value of consultation, not only with the provinces but with other people as well. If you are dealing with matters of constitutional impact between the two levels of government, if you want to minimize the unintended consequences of financial measures which affect the wide variety of Canadian citizens, and if you want to keep faith with the labour movement, with women, or with other important constituencies of our community, then consultation is a good idea and I make no apologies for it.

I see that in his speech the other day, the Leader of the Opposition in the other place pointed out that, in the Speech from the Throne, the government said "consultations" seven times, "consensus" eight times and "co-operation" seven times, as if those were bad words. To my mind, this is the essence of the way to go in our country at this particular moment in its history.

Senator Frith: Why not start by consulting us about the number of jobs?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend will have plenty of time to enter this debate when he wishes to do so. I am looking forward to what he has to say. He is always stimulating, always interesting—not always right perhaps, but stimulating—and I appreciate that kind of a speech. When my honourable friend speaks on this debate, I expect to be stimulated. My only regret is that this is my last chance to speak in this debate so I shall have to listen to what he has to say with a smile on my face, whether I like it or not. Be that as it may, I expect to be stimulated and I look forward to having him speak in this debate.

To return to my point, this question of consultation is an important one. It is a fundamental principle of the Throne Speech. It is a fundamental tenet of the present administration. I do not claim that we will discharge it perfectly, human nature being what it is, and at the end of the day, someone will have to decide. When that time comes, we will accept the responsibility for making the decisions. Between now and then, however, I think consultation is mighty fine and co-operation and consensus are goals that we should work towards and that we should speak for. I am not at all upset that there is no budget with this economic statement that was made in the house on Thursday last. I feel it is a wise thing that we are taking the trouble to investigate all of these matters before we commit ourselves to very important financial measures.

I must confess that I did not really "read" my honourable friend who has just spoken as accurately as I would like. I thought he was going to talk about promises, so I gathered lots of information about promises. However, no doubt someone else will—

Senator Steuart: That is all we will be getting for the next four years.

Senator Roblin: God willing, my honourable friend will be around here four years from now and, at that time, he might even find us worth supporting.

Another subject I wanted to talk about was unemployment insurance, but my honourable friend did not mention that, either. Perhaps we will get another chance at that. The question of jobs was another topic that I wished to discuss. Why is it when they come to jobs that they do not add both sides of the balance sheet?

We hear now that there will be fewer jobs in this country because of what the government is doing, and that that is terrible. They have the number of jobs lost up to 100,000 or more! They do not know the figure themselves, and I do not think anybody knows, in spite of what went through the computer.

Why not say "Yes, that is true, but the government is providing $200 million for the Canada Works Program?" There are 70,000 jobs involved in that program. Who mentioned that? Nobody said anything about that.

Senator MacEachen: I support that.

Senator Roblin: You support it. I am glad to hear that, and I hope that you support this, too: There is $1 billion of fresh money in the job creation fund, and over the course of the next days and weeks the ministers in the other place will be saying how that money is to be spent. If anyone says to me that there is going to be a loss of jobs because of the financial statement, I will tell them that they had better read everything.

Senator Frith: But there is.

Senator Roblin: I will tell them that they had better pay attention to what is being said in that statement. My honourable friend did not mention that; he did not mention the Canada Works Program or the addition of $1 billion, but why should he? He is a member of the opposition. If I were in his place I probably would not have mentioned that either, but the fact is that that is contained in the economic statement and must be taken into account if anyone is to make a fair assessment of the situation in which we find ourselves.

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: A larger deficit means more jobs.

Senator Roblin: In that case, why has that not happened?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): In that case, bankruptcy must mean total employment.

Senator Roblin: We have been increasing the deficit in this country by leaps and bounds, and the unemployment figures grow perversely higher or, at best, perhaps, remain on the same level. The logic of my friend's argument is that if one borrows as high as one can, that is a good thing.

Senator Grafstein can make his speech when he is ready and he can tell me then what is wrong with my economics. He may be right; I am not going to say he is not. All I know is that we have turned Keynes on his head. Keynes said to us "borrow when times are bad and take care of the economy and provide jobs," but he also said "have surpluses when times are good and redress the balance."

We have had three years of recovery. I will admit that the recovery has not been that strong, but there has been a recovery, and what has happened to us in our economic affairs? Our budget and our deficit have increased monumentally in each of the three years of that recovery, and what has happened to unemployment—

Senator Grafstein: Will the minister's statement slow down that recovery now?

Senator Roblin: The minister's statement will improve the recovery in due course. My honourable friend is too accustomed to reading the quarterly balance sheet. He wants to read the company's quarterly statement and see a profit every quarter. He wants quick results, but it is far, far better to go steadily and to lay the foundation and create permanent jobs. Government jobs are not permanent jobs; government jobs sometimes are not even productive jobs, but just some way of keeping some poor soul in possession of his faculties. Some government jobs just keep people sane and sober, and I cannot object to that, but I say that the long-term policy has to be one where long-term jobs will be provided, and they will not be provided by policies of a government that increases the deficit. I am convinced that that is not the case.

I am in favour of deficits under certain circumstances; I have always said that. But I feel that there are other circumstances, and I suppose I am a Keynesian on this ground, where I think we should be thinking of reducing the deficit or eliminating it altogether.

I apologize for being so long, but I have one final area to cover relating to the opening remarks of my honourable friend in which he adverted to the role of the opposition in the Senate.

I underline the fact that there are 21 of the good guys over here and 70 of the others; or, depending on where one sits, 70 of the good guys and 21 of the others. However you slice it, I cannot ignore the fact that my honourable friend controls the majority in this chamber. I am interpreting his remarks to mean that he intends to advise his colleagues to act responsibly. By that I mean that he does not intend to thwart the clearly-expressed opinion of the elected chamber, the House of Commons. That is merely common sense; I will go further and say that it is merely self-preservation.

I say to my honourable friend that that does not prevent him from levelling constructive criticism, or, even if it is not constructive, levelling criticism at what we do. That does not prevent honourable senators from asking for changes in or reconsideration of legislation that comes before us. By no means does it mean that. I cannot tell you what will happen to all those recommendations. I have had some experience in the business of this chamber, and I know that while some of them will be accepted, some will not, but that does not prevent senators from expressing their opinions, particularly in the work of the committees.

I tell honourable members on the other side that, speaking for myself—and I think I can also speak for my colleagues—we will welcome that because we have been in their position. You allowed us to make constructive suggestions. Sometimes you even supported them from time to time. That was appreciated. What we did was not done in a spirit of political rancour, but in a spirit of what we call sober second thought to try to improve legislation that came before us. We made constructive suggestions to make things better. Who can object to that? To do so is the role of the Senate in these days, under this Constitution, and in these circumstances. Ours is an advisory role, and an advisory role only.

I want to say to my honourable friends opposite that I expect them to exercise that responsibility in that function as we proceed with our deliberations in this chamber. I tell them that, while it may not be possible to agree, it will certainly be possible to welcome all the constructive advice and suggestions that come from such an experienced and dedicated body of public men and women.

So, for my money, I think we are off to a good start in this Thirty-third Parliament. I am sure that in the days to come there will be a great deal of material for us to get our teeth into. I welcome the co-operation—indeed, I need the co-operation—of all members of this house, wherever they sit. We, for our part, will try to deserve your goodwill and support.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator Rowe, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CABINET

RESPONSIBILITIES OF LEADER OF GOVERNMENT IN THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate arising out of our proceedings yesterday. During Question Period there was a short discussion about the responsibilities of the Leader of the Government for various departments or matters, as a result of his membership in cabinet. He did tell us frankly that he was on certain cabinet committees but that, with reference to some matters, understandably he felt that he would be required to refer questions or at least consult those colleagues who were more specifically responsible for the matters that were the subject of the questions.

I checked, and I want to make sure that I am right in saying, that we can take it that there would be no need to consult colleagues or to not accept responsibility for questions relating to his cabinet committees, given that, in some cases, it would be necessary for notice to be taken. I am now talking about consulting others or referring questions to other members of cabinet.

Am I right in thinking that the Leader of the Government in the Senate is on the following cabinet committees: Government Operations; Legislation and House Planning; and, I believe, the Special Committee of Council?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Yes, that is correct.

Senator Frith: Then can we assume that, if we are asking questions dealing with government operations—for example, some of the cuts that might flow from the financial statement—it will not be necessary for the Leader of the Government in the Senate to refer that type of question to any other minister? In other words, as a member of that cabinet committee and the other committees I have mentioned, he himself will be able to deal with those questions?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I think it is a useful point that my honourable friend has raised because it is quite clear to members who were in the last Parliament that there has been a substantial change in the situation with respect to the representation of the Senate in cabinet.

In the previous Parliament we were fortunate, I think, in that we had four senators in cabinet, three of whom held executive posts, and this chamber was the only one in which parliamentary questions could be addressed to the ministers who held those portfolios. That was an interesting feature of Question Period in the last Parliament.

I suspect the reason we had four senators in cabinet in the last Parliament—although I might get an argument about this—was because there were no members in the House of Commons representing the provinces those senators resided in and, in my opinion, it was a proper and, indeed, a convenient move that those senators should represent their provinces in that respect in cabinet by carrying the portfolios that they did.

Now the situation has changed greatly. The present administration has ample representation in the House of Commons from every province in the country and, therefore, the need for representation in the cabinet by members of the Senate is no longer present. Senate representation in the cabinet has been reduced to your humble servant. I am the whole, you might say, and I have to answer for 38 or 39 portfolios on which questions might be addressed in the chamber. So, it is obvious that Question Period will assume a different character.

The question asked was as to what questions I will be prepared to answer. The short answer is that I will answer any questions that come within my field of knowledge, and if I obtain any information on any of the committees to which my honourable friend has referred and which pertain to questions raised in this house, so that I can speak from personal knowledge, I will be pleased to do so.

If I do not have that personal knowledge, which possibly will be the case from time to time, then I shall beg leave to revert to the principle that ministers may take as notice questions which do not come within their direct portfolio or responsibilities.

Senator Frith: That is a direct answer to my question, but in order to make it useful to the chamber, perhaps the Leader of the Government will take as notice the following question: Will he give us his understanding of the subject matters that fall within the jurisdiction of the Cabinet Committee on Government Operations and that on Legislation and House Planning?

Senator Roblin: Well, I must tell my honourable friend that those committees have not met, so I am not at all sure what information will come my way.

Senator Frith: The question was: In order to help us frame and direct questions, will he tell us what areas of responsibility are assigned to the Cabinet Committee on Government Operations and that on Legislation and House Planning?

I understand that the Special Committee of Council is a committee that deals with Orders in Council, so perhaps we do not need the information on that, but we would like to have—and I think it is reasonable for us to ask for—a list of those matters that fall under Government Operations, and Legislation and House Planning.

Senator Roblin: I am not going to give my honourable friend the satisfaction he seeks; I am going to stick to the rule that makes it quite clear that ministers are responsible for what takes place within their portfolio.

Representation on committees is a feature which applies to many ministers besides myself. You will find that ministers sitting in the House of Commons are on three or four different committees, but only answer for those matters which come within their portfolio, and I think I will have to abide by the same rule here.

On the other hand, I do not intend to be a stickler about that, and if there is occasion when I have information which has come to me in the regular way and which can help to satisfy the curiosity of members and will answer questions, I will do my best to give that answer rather than take refuge in putting the matter off. So, I intend to be as co-operative as I can.

Senator Frith: That is not dealing with the question, as the honourable senator did earlier. I understand that he may often have to take questions as notice even when they deal with the subject matter of those committees.

What I am specifically asking is: Even though he may have to take the question as notice, will he give us the areas of responsibility of the committees on which he serves, namely, Government Operations, Legislation and House Planning, and the Special Committee of Council?

That does not in any way mean that he undertakes to answer all those questions on the spur of the moment, but will he give us that information, or are we to take his position to be the Wilson formula of "No, I won't give you that information."?

Senator Roblin: I will give my honourable friend any information I have. I have no information on that subject now. If I come into possession of it, I will be glad to share it with my honourable friend.

Senator Frith: I will ask that question each week, then.

Senator Roblin: I will give you the answer each week, too.

Hon. Peter Bosa: I have a supplementary question, and it relates to the fact that the Leader of the Government in the Senate is the only member of the Senate in cabinet.

In order to facilitate getting information in this chamber, would the leader consider appointing some of the senators on the government side of the chamber as parliamentary secretaries to some of the key ministers in the other place?

[Senator Roblin.]

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: With pay.!

Senator Roblin: That is a fascinating suggestion. Perhaps something should be done about it, but I have to tell my honourable friend that the matter of parliamentary secretaries is dealt with by a statute of Canada. It is not within my purview to appoint senators as parliamentary secretaries. That is strictly governed by a statute of Canada, and I am afraid that we will have to stick to that.

● (1410)

Senator Bosa: I was not suggesting that the honourable gentleman take unilateral action in violating the statutes of Canada, but I was asking if he would consider having a discussion with the Prime Minister or with members of the cabinet to ascertain whether some arrangement could be made whereby other members of the Senate, of his party, could be in a position to answer questions for those portfolios the honourable gentleman is not familiar with.

Senator Roblin: I think the proposition is unconstitutional unless we have a change in the law, and I am not prepared to propose a change in the law at the present time. I think we have more important matters to get on with.

THE ECONOMY

STATEMENT BY LEADER OF GOVERNMENT IN THE SENATE— REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have another question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It arises out of the speech he gave in the Senate yesterday on the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, in which he echoed an expression that the Canadian people are becoming used to, namely, that the Conservative government is not going to be able to do what it promised because things changed "when we got our hands on the books." At page 37 of Debates of the Senate Senator Roblin used that expression: "When we got our hands on the books it became clear . . ." At page 38 he said: "That situation was only discovered when the books were examined."

I wonder if the honourable senator would, in his usual forthcoming way, tell us exactly what books it was that he or his colleagues got their hands on that changed the available information. Were they the blue books or the estimates books; and, if not, what books specifically were they?

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: The colouring books!

Senator Frith: Senator Phillips says "colouring books," and I would not be surprised. That sounds exactly like what they have been doing—colouring books.

An Hon. Senator: All blue.

Senator Frith: Exactly, all blue. The blue book I was talking about is the better-known blue book on the estimates. What books were not included in the budget and were not available to the public generally that the Conservative government got its hands on that changed everything?

My second question is: What did those books, that they say they did not have a chance to see before, disclose? Did they disclose, for example, spending that had not been disclosed in Mr. Lalonde's budget? Was there something different about the revenues? What were the books that changed the information that was available to all?

We must remember that in his first speech in the House of Commons—I am sorry, that is another question.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Go ahead.

Senator Frith: You want that one, too? Fine, I will go ahead with that one.

An Hon. Senator: Is that one coloured too?

Senator Frith: In his first speech in the House of Commons, Prime Minister Mulroney said, "Give us 20 years and you won't recognize this country." I think we are now starting to get an idea of what he meant. And during the election campaign, Prime Minister Mulroney said that the deficit is "$36 billion and rising hourly". Finance Minister Wilson, in his economic statement, said that the deficit would be $34 billion. Therefore, there is not that much difference between what they knew before and after the election. That is why I should like to know what books are being referred to by my honourable friend and all of his colleagues when they are giving excuses for not performing.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, my honourable friend has had the same opportunity that I have had to read the statements made by the Minister of Finance. If he wishes to refer to them, I believe that he will find all the information he needs to know. However, I notice that he is really not asking a question but he is favouring us with a portion of his contribution to the Throne Speech debate, and I look forward to hearing the rest of it in due course.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I thank Senator Roblin for that reference to the financial statement. I have consulted the financial statement, but it does not answer the question. Will he ask the Minister of Finance, or tell me himself if he knows, what specific books changed everything? It is not in the financial statement.

Senator Roblin: The answer to my honourable friend is that I will not ask that question of the Minister of Finance because I believe there is sufficient information in the public domain to support the statements I have made.

Senator Frith: What books was the honourable gentleman himself referring to? He cannot dodge that question. He said, "When we got our hands on the books . . ." What books was he talking about? Let us forget the Minister of Finance. What books was Senator Roblin talking about?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend, as usual, thinks he is back in the Supreme Court of Ontario. I think he did appear there.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: It is a fair question.

Senator Roblin: I am not going to allow him to conduct a cross-examination at my expense. The Question Period in this chamber is a free-form affair, as we have all learned from previous experience, and I cannot really control the questions my honourable friend asks, but I can control the answers I give.

Senator Frith: Or don't give.

Senator Roblin: The answers I will give will be those that are appropriate in the parliamentary context.

Senator Frith: This has nothing to do with the Supreme Court; it is a very simple question. The honourable senator himself said, "When we got our hands on the books . . ." It is not cross-examination to simply ask, "What were the books?"

I guess I have to take it that, again, on the first two questions I have asked the answer is, "No, I won't give you that information."

Hon. Jacques Flynn: That is it.

Senator Frith: It seems the Wilson formula is going to prevail in the Senate as well as in the House of Commons.

Can you imagine what Mr. Wilson or Senator Roblin would have said if we had given those types of answers and had said, "No, we won't give you the information"?

Senator Perrault: Baffle speech, that's what it is.

Senator Frith: I still ask the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate to reconsider. Surely, if he is able to make a speech based on certain books that he had in his possession, there is no reason why he cannot tell us what those books are.

He will not. It is a stonewall.

Senator Flynn: Repeat it again.

Senator Frith: No. Stonewall.

Senator Flynn: Say it again and again.

Senator Frith: It is quite clear that we will do that. Even though we receive no answers, we will keep asking for them.

The pattern has now been formed. With a straightforward, simple question, the answer will be, "No, we won't get it for you."

Senator Roblin: It is a good answer.

Senator Frith: It certainly is, from the honourable senator's point of view.

IMMIGRATION

ENTRY OF SOVIET REFUGEES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In the Globe and Mail of November 12, 1984, reference is made to two Soviet soldiers, one Igor Rykhov and one Oleg Khlan, who apparently had defected from the Russian army while on active service in Afghanistan and had been granted asylum in Britain in June.

Apparently, these two Soviet soldiers had applied for immigration to Canada and have now been turned down based on a sudden change in government policy decided by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Honourable Flora MacDonald, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Right Honourable Joseph Clark.

According to this story, deeply disappointed, these Soviet soldiers were persuaded, by means we know not of, to return to the Soviet Union.

A similar case, involving six Soviet soldiers who, apparently, were fighting for the Soviet forces in Afghanistan, is referred to in the November 13 issue of the Toronto Sun. Their emigration to Canada had been negotiated by quiet diplomacy between officials of the Department of Employment and Immigration, officials of the Department of External Affairs, the Pakistan government, and the Afghanistan forces. This effort was led by the Canadian Ukrainian Immigrant Aid Society. These negotiations were being carried on by the Liberal government led by the Right Honourable John Turner and were, apparently, progressing very smoothly. However, according to this news report, the new Conservative government had—and I now quote an official from the Canadian Ukrainian Immigrant Aid Society—“double-crossed” these soldiers and had “backed off.”

Could the leader of the Government in the Senate explain the reasoning behind this sudden change in, what I understood to be, bipartisan government policy that had established Canada—certainly under the successive leadership of Pierre Trudeau, Joe Clark and John Turner—as a refuge and a haven for the politically oppressed?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think that Canada still is a refuge and a haven for the politically oppressed. In the course of my lifetime, thousands of people have come to this country. Nevertheless, my honourable friend raises in my mind a real concern about the subject. If one sheep is lost, it does not matter about the 99 that were saved.

Obviously, I do not know the answer to the question, since it is a departmental one. I will, however, provide my friend with whatever information I can obtain.

THE ECONOMY

MANITOBA—CANCELLATION OF CONSTRUCTION OF WINNIPEG RESEARCH CENTRE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question is addressed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. My honourable colleague, as a westerner, knows how important decentralization is to our region. As a member of the government, he is aware of the promises that were made regarding the need for more research and development in Canadian industry. As a former premier of the province of Manitoba, he is only too aware of the needs of that province for decentralization, more industry and so on.

Obviously, he is aware of the seriousness of the government's decision to cancel the National Research Council

[Senator Grafstein.]

Centre in Winnipeg—a centre which was well on its way. The building is now under construction and two floors of a four-storey structure have been completed. The whole project was done in consultation with the Province of Manitoba, with industry and with labour. The decision of the government to cancel the research centre is, from the standpoint of the province of Manitoba—and, I think, from a Canadian standpoint—indeed serious. I am sure that my honourable colleague recognizes that.

Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate be prepared to assist those Manitobans who want to see this government decision changed? Would he be prepared to attend meetings in this regard?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend has expressed the situation fairly and I thank him for it. Naturally, as a citizen of Winnipeg and as one who has taken some interest in the economic development of my province, I share his concern. I am, therefore, pleased to tell him that the Minister of Finance has offered to meet in Winnipeg next Monday, I believe, with a group of local citizens representing labour, the university, the city and all those who might have an interest in the matter in order to discuss it.

I do not know what the outcome will be, but I certainly will be hoping for one that is favourable to my community.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. I noted in yesterday's Hansard of the other place that, in response to a question of Mr. Axworthy, the Minister of Finance did indicate that he would be going to Winnipeg within the next three weeks and would be prepared to attend such a meeting. Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate also be prepared to meet with those groups, with the Government of Manitoba and with those of us who are concerned about this matter?

Senator Roblin: According to the Hansard that I have in front of me, the question in the other place was asked not by Mr. Axworthy but by another gentleman, Mr. Keeper, but that is immaterial. It was asked and it was answered.

My answer is that I will do anything I can to assist in having this problem resolved in a manner that is in accordance with the desires of the citizens of my community. I have to say that I am bound by the principle of cabinet solidarity, but within those rules I shall certainly do my best.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): A reasonable man.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I am referring to the House of Commons Debates of November 9. At page 121, under the heading “Cancellation of Winnipeg Research Centre,” the speaker is the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy and his question concludes with the words:

Is he prepared to come to Winnipeg next week and show us how he is going to replace the loss of all those jobs and, in particular, the loss of those job opportunities?

The reply of the Honourable Michael Wilson, Minister of Finance, reads as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I will be in Winnipeg in about three weeks' time, so I will be happy to do that.

Mr. Axworthy then stated:

We will set up a meeting for you.

The source of the question and that of the response is, I think, clear.

I recognize that the Leader of the Government is bound by cabinet solidarity. On the other hand, he does represent the province of Manitoba. Can we depend upon him to attend that meeting with the minister and to use his good offices to change the decision?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I think I have already answered the question. However, I wish to be as courteous as I can to my honourable friend because he and I have had a long record of exchanging questions and answers on various topics. He knows me well enough to be assured that on November 26, the date on which I believe the minister will be in Winnipeg, I shall be available; and if my services are required, I shall be glad to render them.

FORESTRY AND FISHERIES

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. May I say at the outset that those of us on this side understand the difficulties confronting the Leader of the Government who is placed in the position of attempting to answer for all departments. We cannot reasonably expect all of the information we seek to be available immediately. However, a number of questions have presented themselves since the election and they are causing great concern to the people of Canada. They deserve replies.

Two of Canada's important industries are forestry and fisheries. Certainly in British Columbia they are key industries, as they are in several of the other provinces. During the course of the campaign, spokesmen for the government party spoke in terms of a greater government investment—that is the way they described it—in the forest industry to make it productive—for example, more money to launch a major new reforestation program—and greater investment in the fishing industry to make that industry more productive and to restore the depleted salmon runs.

In a province where unemployment is approaching 14 per cent, that was a message of real hope for the people of British Columbia. I regret to say, however, that after only a few weeks of Conservative government there is a sense of betrayal. Both of those areas of economic activity in Canada—forestry and fisheries—have been savaged by this government. There has been an announced cutback of $30 million in the fishing industry, after all of the promises of investment to be made on the west coast by the present Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Similarly, we have seen the forest industry savaged; yet forestry remains one of the most productive areas of Canadian endeavour, an important earner of export dollars.

This is 1984. Forty years ago the late George Orwell wrote a book of the same title—Nineteen Eighty-Four. In that book, he wrote of "Newspeak"—Newspeak means that Love means Hate and that War means Peace. Now we have Progressive Conservative Newspeak. A government that promised greater productive government investment, and instead is giving us Draconian, drastic and savage cutbacks in key industries.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: We want the Leader of the Government to bring to us the rationale, the reasons why there has been this incredible shift in policy. Thousands of those who are involved in forestry and fisheries in my province and in the other provinces feel a great sense of betrayal after voting confidence so recently in the Progressive Conservative Party, a party which promised so much and which to this point is delivering so little in its "Newspeak" fashion.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I congratulate my honourable friend. If he had ever lost his vigour, he has obviously recovered it and has treated us to an excellent three-minute or five-minute speech. I know that we shall hear more from him in the same vein.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): We never put a clock on you, Duff.

Senator Roblin: I have not complained about it yet. I acknowledge it. It sounds very good. The only thing is, the honourable senator does not appear to have read the document "An Agenda for Economic Renewal", because if he did, he would find out what the government's policy is with respect to fisheries. He did not ask me a question. I presume he had one in mind when he rose in his place. I do not recollect hearing any question from him. Perhaps he will ask me one. However, I suggest that if he looks at the document "An Agenda for Economic Renewal" with respect to fisheries, he will find some comforting words.

Senator Perrault: We want more salmon. We don't want red herrings.

Senator Frith: That's "Oldspeak".

INDUSTRY

COST OF PETRO-CHEMICAL FEEDSTOCKS

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, in directing my question to the Leader of the Government, may I say at the outset that I appreciate his statement that he is willing to answer immediately any question with respect to which he has the information. I appreciate that. I know that the question I propose to ask him concerning the cost of feedstocks for the petro-chemical industry is a subject in which he has taken a great deal of interest in the past. Therefore, he, no doubt, already has the information.

• (1430)

It is a critical question because, in light of the government announcement that there will be opportunity for reduced prices on natural gas going to the United States, unless there is arrangement made for the cost of feedstocks going into our petro-chemical industry, which is based on natural gas, then the industry will lose its competitive position. Has the government obtained any assurances that the cost of feedstocks, particularly to agricultural fertilizer manufacturers, will also be adjusted so that those industries, for example, in Alberta and Manitoba, can maintain their competitive position after these substantial reductions in the cost of Canadian gas going to the United States?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think I can assure my honourable friend that arrangements have been made to reduce the cost of feedstocks for the petro-chemical industry in Canada.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. The Leader of the Government gave a general answer and I know that there have been some cuts in the costs, such as in the ethylene industry. However, I thought I referred particularly to agricultural chemicals, which face acute competition in North America.

Senator Roblin: Unless I am mistaken, that industry is included.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION CANADA COUNCIL

EFFECT OF BUDGET REDUCTIONS

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the knowledgeable Leader of the Government in the Senate to enlighten us this afternoon on what cuts will be made in services, programs or policies in the CBC and Canada Council to the detriment of the development of Canadian culture, which is so essential for the Canadian identity, particularly in view of the $75 million cut in the budget of the CBC?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am afraid I must tell my honourable friend that his question is not the sort that can be answered during Question Period with a short, pithy and informed answer. If he puts a written question on the order paper with respect to those matters, I shall do my best to get the information he seeks.

[Translation]

PRAYERS AT COMMENCEMENT OF SITTINGS

Hon. Azellus Denis: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. On November 6 of this year, Senator Bélisle expressed his dissatisfaction with our new prayer. You answered that you would get us further information. Can you tell us who the author is? Could you perhaps send us a copy so we will know what is what?

Finally, have prayers been changed the same way in the other place as well?

[Senator Olson.]

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am afraid I am not able to answer for the other place, so that part of the question will have to be asked in another quarter, but I can say that His Honour the Speaker made a statement yesterday with respect to the origin of the new prayer. If my honourable friend cares to look in the Debates of the Senate he will find the prayer set out there. I hope all the information he asks for will be found there, and if he needs anything more he can let me know.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

GARRISON DAM PROJECT

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government. It was my intention to give the leader notice, but due to the pressing nature of the question I thought I would ask it today, and it can be taken as notice. I know that the Leader of the Government shares my concern with regard to the Garrison Dam Project.

In today's Citizen at page C-16 there is an article indicating that an American commission studying the project feels that the problems cannot be solved. I have not seen this interim report. The leader may be able to obtain a copy and enlighten me on the matter tomorrow. The article also says that the fish screen which is to be put across the Red River will be of no use. According to this article, once this commission has made its report, the Government of the United States is obliged to accept it.

Knowing the concern of the Leader of the Government in this regard and knowing the support he has given me in the past and since he is now in the cabinet and thus able to be of assistance, I leave him with notice that I will question him further on this matter tomorrow.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I assure my honourable friend that while sitting on this side of the house I am just as interested in this problem as I was when I sat on the other side. I am glad to have his question.

My honourable friend is quite right when he says that the study being conducted by the American government has resulted in an interim report which outlines 25 solutions to this problem. However, it does not state which one will be favoured. They have until the end of the year to come down with a recommendation.

I do not have a copy of the interim report. I believe copies of it can be obtained from the Manitoba Government's Garrison Focus Office. I plan to write that body today to request a copy for myself and one for my honourable friend.

There is another complication about which I should inform the honourable senator. A group of municipalities and associated people in the Souris valley issued a statement yesterday or the day before in which they favour an aspect of the Garrison project which is in controversy. I suppose I had better ask for a copy of that statement, too, when I make my request to Manitoba. When we receive copies of those documents my honourable friend and I can sit down and exchange notes with respect to what should be done about the situation.

Senator Guay: Honourable senators, at the same time can the Leader of the Government look into the possibility of whether or not the Government of Canada is prepared to make representations to the Commission before it finalizes its report?

Senator Roblin: I am afraid that the hearings have been completed, although I am subject to correction on that point. It is now a question of dealing with the American government once the report is in.

My honourable friend shakes his head in the negative. He seems to think hearings are still going on.

Senator Guay: Yes, they are.

Senator Roblin: I will check into that matter and see what I can find out.

TRANSPORT

CN MARINE AND CN RAIL—REDUCTIONS IN SERVICE

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. As usual, I have not sent notice of my question since, no matter what side of the house I sit on, I do not generally do that. However, I hope he will do his utmost to secure a reply for me. I recall that when Senator Olson was Leader of the Government in the Senate he always made the excuse that he was only responsible for certain matters. When Senator Perrault was Leader of the Government in the Senate he made the excuse that he was not responsible for certain matters. When Senator Frith was Deputy Leader of the Government he would oftentimes say that he was not responsible for certain matters I would raise.

I would like the Leader of the Government in the Senate to take it upon himself to answer my question, even though he has not received notice of it. My question concerns why there are to be drastic cutbacks in the operations of CN Marine, a crown corporation operating out of North Sydney to Newfoundland. Apparently, the number of ships to operate has been reduced from six to three. Can the Leader of the Government find out for me, at his convenience, how many men and women will be affected by this cutback? In other words, how many people will be laid off from their place of employment? Has any decision been taken with respect to the commencement of an early retirement program? When will the cutbacks be put into effect?

Because of high unemployment rates in Cape Breton and Newfoundland we can little afford any lost jobs. I would very much appreciate any information the Leader of the Government can obtain from the Honourable Don Mazankowski, or whoever is responsible for these cruel and serious cutbacks.

● (1440)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I learned long ago that when I hear from Senator Muir I had better step to it. I shall do my best to obtain the answers my honourable colleague requires. At the same time, I hope that I shall be able to make an announcement as to what might be done for those who may be displaced by these measures, to make sure that the impact is minimized.

[Translation]

Hon. Norbert L. Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, in connection with a question put by my honourable friend, Senator Muir.

In today's La Presse, it says that the Minister of Transport will ask Canadian National to restrict its role to railway transportation only and to either sell or liquidate all other interests it now controls, including ferries.

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate inform me whether this request includes the sale of ferries plying between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick?

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I shall take my honourable friend's question as notice.

THE ECONOMY

FISCAL OUTLOOK—UPDATED ECONOMIC PROJECTIONS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): I am encouraged to ask this question because the Leader of the Government is in possession of this document tabled by the Minister of Finance entitled An Agenda for Economic Renewal. I draw to his attention that in the annex at page 95 of this document there is set out the fiscal outlook and the changes in the fiscal outlook as given in the February budget. It goes on to say that the projections are based upon updated economic assumptions.

We are all aware that the Department of Finance updates its forecasting from time to time, and I would like to ask the Leader of the Government if he can tell us today, or at a later time, the date of these updated economic forecasts. Specifically, I am asking whether these forecasts were prepared and completed by the Department of Finance in August or September. The date is relevant to assessing a number of factors relating to the minister's statement.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I shall do my best to obtain an answer for my honourable friend.

THE SENATE

CLERKS AT THE TABLE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, before proceeding to Orders of the Day, I wish to draw your attention to the presence at the Table of Madame Monique Grenier-Tomka, Director of Journals, and Mr. Gary O'Brien, Director of Committees.

Madame Tomka and Mr. O'Brien will be sitting at the Table from time to time to assist the Clerk and Clerk Assistant during our deliberations.

[Translation]

We are pleased with this opportunity to recognize their respective merits, and we think this event deserves some special mention since Mrs. Tomka is the first woman to sit at the Table of the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, seconded by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to Her Speech at the opening of the session.—(Honourable Senator Rowe).

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, I would like to begin my comments today by congratulating Your Honour on your appointment to the important post of Speaker of the Upper House of Canada. That appointment is an indication of the confidence that the government, your party and indeed your colleagues here in the Senate have in your ability to discharge the important and sometimes taxing duties that inevitably will come your way.

In expressing my congratulations, while I cannot hope to cover the whole roster, I do want to make particular reference to at least two or three of those amongst us who are beginning or, in some cases, continuing their duties here. I congratulate the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, not only on his appointment but also particularly today on what most people, I think, considered to be the great speech that he gave yesterday.

I would like also to congratulate Senator Roblin on his appointment to one of the most important posts in the Senate. This, too, is an indication of the confidence that the government has in him. When I was in active politics, I had the pleasure and opportunity to attend what were in those days called federal-provincial conferences. Indeed, I attended every one that took place up until 1971. For approximately ten years during that period, Senator Roblin was Premier of Manitoba and, in that capacity, he too attended those conferences. I was always impressed by his ability to articulate ideas and by his ability to extract the essence of any particular matter under discussion. I was also impressed with his fair-mindedness and I am sure that these qualities will serve him well and serve the Senate well in the months to come.

May I also extend my congratulations to my fellow Newfoundlander, Senator Doody. I am sure I speak for all Newfoundland when I say that we are very pleased at this appointment, but not surprised. Senator Doody, as Minister of Finance a few years ago in the Moores administration, distinguished himself not only for his keen wit but for his analytical ability and his dedication to the work for which he was responsible.

In this connection, speaking of Newfoundlanders, I would hasten to include in my congratulatory remarks my further good wishes to Senator Petten who, we are all happy to know, is continuing in the office of whip, but now as opposition whip. I would also extend greetings to all of those new senators who have joined us in recent weeks.

Honourable senators, I would like to preface my remarks by saying that I have no reason to butter up the members of the Senate, but I say with complete sincerity that I believe at this particular time, and have certainly done so in the 13 years I have been in the Senate, that the Senate has never been so fortunate in its composition and has never been the possessor of more human resources than it is at this very moment in its history. This is not meant as an invidious comparison. I am conscious of the contribution that the Senate has made in the past, a contribution not always recognized by the people of Canada, but I am also confident that that contribution will be enhanced in the months and years to come.

The Speech from the Throne, while meant to be an optimistic document that raises people's hopes that a solution to our major problems can be found, is very often a depressing document which creates pessimism and frustration. It usually refers to a number of matters which have been causing trouble and concern to the government, or to governments over the years. It raises in the minds of many people hopes and expectations that solutions can be found to those problems and that, of course, is not always the case.

This speech is really a recognition of the magnitude of the problems confronting the people of Canada.

I will list some of those things that are directly outlined in the Speech from the Throne, or are inferential. They are as follows:

- a call for national consensus and reconciliation. That implies, of course, that we do not have a national consensus or a reconciliation;
- the relationship of Parliament with the people of Canada;
- the relationship between Parliament and the individual citizens;
- the matter of taxation;
- the relationship between Parliament and the provinces;
- the recognition of the need to preserve our cultural diversities and, in particular, the two founding languages of Canada;
- the problems of misuse and overuse of our physical resources, and I will have more to say about that later;
- the economic problems confronting us and the ever-pressing need for us to increase production vis-à-vis the rest of the industrial world;
- the national debt;
- the rights of women and children;

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

- the question of social security;
- our health services, and in particular, our great program of medicare;
- the matter of public safety and the criminal code. Most people in Canada are concerned with that matter and want something done, but not very many know what should be done;
- the question of international responsibilities;
- the special relationship that exists between Canada and the United States;
- and, finally, Canada's role as a peacemaker.

Sometimes we do not recognize just how serious the situation is. This world is almost as war torn now as it was during the two World Wars, and there is the fear of greater conflagrations in the months and years ahead.

To try to deal with all of these items in any detail would mean that I would have to monopolize disproportionately the amount of time available for this debate; therefore, I will confine myself to a few remarks on matters of special interest to me, and, no doubt, of interest to many other senators.

In addition, I shall say a word or two about several matters which, to my regret, are not referred to in the Speech from the Throne.

Since some of the items I will be discussing are not closely related, I apologize in advance if I appear to be disjointed and jumping around.

We have always taken pride in Canada's natural resources; there is, however, a growing need for our pride to give place to concern. Our natural resources, vast as they are, are not inexhaustible, and in fact some are already showing signs of approaching extinction. For example, we need to remind ourselves—we have to remind ourselves—that our mineral resources are not irreplaceable; they are very finite. There is an arithmetical limit to the mineral resources of Canada, and in many instances we have reached that limit. Eventually, of course, we will reach that limit as far as most of our mineral resources are concerned.

That fact has been brought home to us in Newfoundland in recent years. Over the past ten years or so, mine after mine has had to close down because of a shortage of economic ore. We have been mined out; that is what has happened. Bell Island once had the second or third largest mine in the world; today it is an economic ghost town. That, of course, is happening to a greater or lesser degree in other parts of Canada.

Just as serious economically is the rate at which we are using up our forestry resources. This fact might surprise you, but if one were to ask the average Canadian what industry is of the greatest value to Canada, I doubt if one out of ten could tell you that it is our forest industry. If we persist in ignoring the need for reforestation—and that is what we are doing—on a scale that is at least equal to our consumption of forestry resources, then we will be guilty of one of the most stupid acts of neglect ever committed by any nation. We must remember that the ordinary pulpwood tree needs anywhere from 60 to 100 years to mature, and if we are not replanting at a rate at least equal to our consumption, then we can anticipate disaster.

While it is not so immediately obvious as the depletion of our forestry resources, we have some difficulty in recognizing that Canada's agricultural resources are not inexhaustible. Year after year concrete, asphalt and urban sprawl continue to destroy some of the best agricultural land to be found anywhere in the world. During my university days I lived in Toronto. A half an hour's drive from Bloor Street, from the heart of Toronto, one could find thousands of acres of rolling, productive farm land. Last week, my wife and I, while visiting Toronto, looked in vain for those thousands of acres of vegetables and fruits. They are gone; that irreplaceable topsoil has been destroyed. We have to ask ourselves how long we can go on destroying irreplaceable resources. Are we going to reach the point when it is too late to do something about that?

Proper protection of our natural resources—which incidentally is just as important as their proper utilization—is linked up with our economic problems, of which the most serious today is unemployment. Here, again, we have to be on our guard against rationalizing this continuing state of affairs. It is not enough for us to fold our hands in resignation and point out that most of the other countries in the world have similar unemployment problems. On that I make two comments:

There are a number of countries both large and small which have not had and do not have a rate of unemployment anywhere approaching the serious scale that we have in Canada. Surely, the people of Canada who in the space of just over a century were able to create a nation which could hold its own in almost every field of activity can do something more than simply pay out unemployment insurance, valuable and necessary as that activity is. God knows that nobody appreciates that more than we Newfoundlanders do.

I have just one other remark to make about unemployment. I hope you will excuse the personal reference here but it ties in with my remarks. I matriculated in 1929—that infamous year of economic history in the world. Therefore, I am in that group old enough to remember what the great depression was like. I remember what people all across Canada suffered and endured over that frightful decade which continued until the outbreak of World War II. I am not an alarmist, but I want to say with all the conviction that I can muster that our people, particularly our younger people, will not sit in resignation indefinitely because there is nothing for them to do. They will not tolerate that situation indefinitely. The decade of the eighties will be no different from the decade of the thirties if the economic conditions of Canada and, for that matter of other countries, continue to worsen; unrest and social turbulence will become routine unless we can do more than we have done in the past four or five years about unemployment especially as it affects Canada's youth.

During the past 40 years Canada developed and implemented some of the most progressive social welfare measures to be found anywhere on earth. It must be a matter of continuing pride that we were able to devise such instruments as family allowances, universal old age security and medicare, just to name three of the most obvious. When times get rough economically and governments are at their wits end to produce acceptable budgets, that is the time of danger because almost instinctively those same governments will attack those social measures which did so much to make their countries great in the first place. This is one of the great anomalies of our times. I saw that happen repeatedly in the early 1930s when the Government of Newfoundland's first major action, following the onslaught of the great depression, in order to balance the budget was to halve the grant for education and eventually cut the salaries of teachers by two-thirds forcing some of them to give up teaching. As an example, in 1932 one of the measures adopted by the government was to shut down completely the only teacher training college we had in Newfoundland. Then they attacked the civil servants and then the dole rates. I am talking about able-bodied relief. Those rates were slashed and again and again to the unbelievable rate of six cents a day. I saw children go hungry for months on end. Those families had to live on six cents a day and try to survive one way or another. What the government at that time failed to realize was that putting teachers and civil servants out of work was bound to have a domino effect. Perhaps a snowballing effect would be a better term.

A fundamental belief of mine is that when a government, whether provincial or federal, starts to make serious attacks on its social, educational and economic programs developed over the previous decades, then that government is on the skids that lead to disaster. It has never been more important to keep that in mind than now.

To offer one concrete example, it is in time of economic turbulence and distress, such as we are experiencing today, that instead of butchering some of our educational programs we should do what some of the smaller countries of northern Europe did in the last century and, indeed, in this century as well. Instead of slashing educational grants, more help, both quantitatively and qualitatively, should be afforded to education at all levels. I regret that this is one of the items that was omitted from the Speech from the Throne. There is a passing reference to the need for technical training, but the problems of education at the moment are inseparable from the economic programs and, in particular, from the problem of unemployment. The little country of Denmark in the nineteenth century did not become one of the most progressive and prosperous countries in the world—which it still is—by cutting down on education and other social measures. Nor did New Zealand—half-way around the world from Denmark—create in less than 100 years one of the highest standards of living anywhere on earth by cutting social welfare programs.

In recent weeks we have been horrified by televised pictures of starving children in Ethiopia. I think that that situation shows outright hypocrisy, because all the world knew years ago that there were millions of starving children not only in Ethiopia but in other parts of Africa, particularly in the Horn of Africa, who were starving and dying every day. It takes five minutes on a television program for everybody to get exercised. God knows I am not opposed to the help we are giving, but it simply is not enough, nor is it organized well enough. That organization should have been attended to four or five years ago when these crises in other parts of Africa, not only in Ethiopia, came about. That is when the organization should have been set up. The point I want to make, honourable senators, is that it should not have required five minutes of traumatic—and that is what it was—TV coverage to galvanize the more affluent parts of the world into action.

Honourable senators, I realize that what I am about to say is capable of serious distortion and misrepresentation, so I will choose my words as carefully as I can. If we, in the more prosperous countries of the world, which include Canada, are going to deprive Third World countries of the right and the means to practise family planning—and I am not including abortion in the term “family planning”—then we must assume the responsibility for such frightful conditions as exist today in more than half the countries of the world. The conditions I am talking about result in millions of children starving and dying agonizing deaths from deficiencies of one kind or another. Millions of children are abysmally hungry and cold.

Honourable senators, I do not want to be melodramatic about this, but surely we have to be horrified at the conditions which exist in over half the countries of the world right at this moment. If we are going to prevent or discourage those countries from trying to plan their population growth in a proportion equivalent to their economic growth, then we have, morally, no choice but to assume responsibility for the feeding, clothing and education of those children, no matter what country they live in. We cannot escape that responsibility.

In recent years, we have become more concerned about the abuse, especially the sexual abuse, of women and children. Nobody in his right senses would deny the need for action in those matters. This problem is not something that has suddenly emerged during the past two or three years; it is something that has simply become more evident. There is no doubt in my mind that we must do more than we have done to protect our women and especially our children from, for example, the brutality of sexual perverts.

In our legitimate endeavours to curtail the blight in our culture of violent pornography—and nobody would support those endeavours more strongly than I do—we must remind ourselves that there are those who are not so much concerned, no matter what they say, about protecting our children or our battered wives, as they are about taking it on themselves to dictate to you and to me what we should read, what we should say and what we should look at.

The ancestors of perhaps all of us here in this chamber this afternoon fought and, in some cases, were imprisoned or executed because they asserted the right to say and do those things which they felt free men and free women should be entitled to do as long as asserting those rights did not interfere with the rights of others. Honourable senators will remember the old adage that says that I have the right to swing my arm, but that that right ceases before your nose begins.

Honourable senators, let me give you just one example of this. For a number of years in my life, I lectured in English at university. During that time I met many professors of English. I have never polled 1,000 of them, but I am left with the impression that, if we were to poll 1,000 professors of English literature—and I am speaking of those of the English-speaking world—as to what were the greatest three or four novels of this century, my own conviction is that the most votes would go to the following three or four books. One would be Lady Chatterley's Lover by D.H. Lawrence; another would be Ulysses by James Joyce; another would be the more modern novel, Catcher in the Rye by J.D. Salinger—still not made available for some universities on this continent; and the fourth one, a lesser known novel, would be Tales of Hecate County by the greatest literary critic of our century, Edmund Wilson.

What do those four novels have in common? They were all banned for decades. You could not get those books in Canada. I, and hundreds of others lecturing in English to adult students—young men and women in their twenties and in some cases older—could not discuss the effect of James Joyce's tremendous novel, Ulysses—one day in the life of one man—because they had not read it. It was not until 20 years after those books were published, or after they had tried to have them published, that you and I could read them. There are probably parts of Canada and, certainly, parts of the so-called civilized world where you still cannot read those books. They are not allowed to be sold there, and people can be imprisoned for so doing.

What was the objection to these novels? The objection was that they were "pornographic." Honourable senators, that is a word you could use for almost anything. Those books, I say, are not pornographic.

Just before today's sitting commenced, I was looking at yesterday's Ottawa Citizen where I noticed an article which said that Argentines flocked to watch banned films. Which films are those? One is "Last Tango in Paris," which has Marlon Brando starring in the lead role, and the other is "A Clockwork Orange." The latter film centres around one facet of life in London in the 1960s, I believe. Until this week, no one in Argentina—which has a population of what must be 40 or 50 million people—had ever seen those films because someone had decided they were not fit to be seen; they were contaminated; they were corrupt.

Honourable senators, I saw "Last Tango in Paris"—as a matter of fact, my wife and I saw it in Paris. I also saw Kubrick's "A Clockwork Orange"—coincidentally, in London, the very heart of the district wherein the events of the film took place. My wife and I found parts of those films distasteful and, perhaps, a little objectionable, but that does not give us the right to stop anyone else from seeing them. Some people in the world would now like to assume that right. Mr. Gerry Falwell would take it upon himself to decide that I should not see films such as those.

Honourable senators, I say that we have to be on our guard against those who go beyond claiming the right to protect our women and children. We all have that right—indeed, that responsibility—but we must be on our guard against those who are not satisfied with exercising that right alone, but who also wish to tell all of us what we can read, what we can look at and what we can say. Once again, the old but ever valuable cliché is applicable, particularly at a time when we are all concerned about violence, especially perverted sexual violence. It has never been more important for us to remember that the price of freedom is eternal vigilance. Thank you.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the most encouraging thing I can say at the present time is that I will not be too lengthy. I beg your indulgence and your endurance, and I will try to divest myself of a few words in speaking on this motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

I should first like to thank Senator Rowe for his kind comments. Whenever he mentions the fact that I was Minister of Finance for the province of Newfoundland, I feel even more warmly towards the Senate. The atmosphere in this chamber is quite different from that in other chambers, and the responsibilities and problems are not quite as onerous.

I should like to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the Address in this chamber. The two speakers who were selected were admirable choices.

My friend, the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, was in fine form, as usual. He once again regaled the chamber with the wit and wisdom which we have come to expect from him.

I first had the extreme good fortune to hear Senator Macquarrie in action at a St. John's East Progressive Conservative meeting back in the late 1960s. As I listened to him speak, I was in awe of his easy eloquence and envious of his depth of knowledge. In this regard, honourable senators, nothing has changed. I am still in awe of his eloquence and envious of his great knowledge.

The seconder of this motion for an Address in reply, the Honourable Senator Tremblay, is another colleague whom I have known for some years in his previous capacity as Deputy Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs for the Province of Quebec.

In fact, Senator Tremblay's tenure as deputy minister of that department coincides almost exactly with my own length of service in the cabinet of Newfoundland. I think we started in the same year, 1971. Senator Tremblay moved on to another incarnation in 1977. It took me a full two years more—to 1979—to retire from the provincial field. I elected not to seek to be re-elected.

During the years we served our respective governments, we had many occasions to work together. I admired him then, as I do now. I need hardly say, honourable senators, that I was extremely pleased to meet him outside the chamber on the day we were sworn in. It was comforting, indeed, to know that his experience and talents in intergovernmental affairs would still be available to the people of Canada.

I should add, honourable senators, that Senator Macquarrie was also inducted into the Senate on that same day, and, although modesty forbids my saying that that was a great day for Canada, I must admit that at least some members of our respective immediate families seem to think that this was the case.

May I also, honourable senators, take this opportunity to offer my congratulations and best wishes to another old friend who has risen to a well-deserved place of pride and prominence in this upper house of the Parliament of Canada.

I have known Senator Charbonneau for as many years as I have been a member of this party. I will long remember his valued assistance to me and my provincial colleagues in Newfoundland when prospects were dim and aid and encouragement were very scarce, indeed.

Senator Charbonneau was a gentleman then, and he is a gentleman now. I know he will fill his high office with dignity and distinction. I wish him well for many years to come.

I should like to add at this time, as well, a word of thanks and congratulations to Senator Charbonneau's predecessor, Senator Riel.

Senator Riel's tenure of office was overtaken by events over which he had no control. While I cannot say with any sincerity that I am sorry these events took place, I nevertheless do feel a sense of loss at Senator Riel's rather abrupt departure from office.

He showed a great deal of understanding of the role of the Speaker of the Senate, and was well on his way, I think, to raising the profile of the position of Speaker in this chamber. I feel certain that Senator Charbonneau can count on the advice and assistance of his predecessor as we proceed with the business of this place during the coming years.

As I offer my best wishes and support to my new leader in this chamber—who had the uncommon good sense to avoid listening to me; he has departed this place with a flock of his brethren—I am deeply conscious of the huge responsibility he has undertaken in filling the large shoes left vacant by Senator Flynn.

As has been pointed out, Senator Flynn has had and continues to have one of the most distinguished careers in the Parliament of our country—a career spanning both houses, several governments and many important positions.

Senator Roblin, his successor, is one of the few people with the experience and ability to assume Senator Flynn's mantle. After a distinguished career leading to the highest elective office in his province, Senator Roblin continues to serve his country well in the nation's Parliament. In congratulating Senator Roblin, I am fully aware of my own inadequacies as I take up my new job, and I beg the indulgence of my colleagues on both sides of the Senate while I learn the ropes, the intricacies and the parliamentary niceties that are necessarily part of this position.

Honourable senators, I will not refer to Senator John M. as a "father figure." As a fellow-islander, albeit from a far greater island, I know how sensitive these young fellows can be. I simply thank him for his many years of devoted service and look forward to working with him for many years into the future. His successor as whip, yet another distinguished islander from yet a third island off the east coast, has, at last, been given an opportunity to exercise the tact and patience for which he has become so famous during his many years on this Hill.

As I welcome Senator MacEachen to this place, I congratulate him sincerely on his appointment as Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, and hope he retains the good health and patient endurance to serve his party and his country for many long and exciting years in that position. Honourable senators, I can think of no one with the ability and the qualifications to fill the job of Leader of the Opposition as well as Senator MacEachen. We are indebted to him for having taken on the job, and we hope he keeps it well into the indefinite future.

Senator MacEachen has, however, one great advantage which his counterpart on this side does not have—namely, a learned, experienced, competent deputy. We have all grown to admire and respect Senator Frith, and I am sure he will be every bit as successful in his new role as he was in the past. That is just a small vote of thanks for his not using the rule book yet. We have an accord.

Honourable senators, I should also take advantage of this opportunity to welcome the new senators to this chamber. I realize that many of our new colleagues are experienced parliamentarians from the other place. Others have distinguished themselves in other careers. I congratulate them on their appointments and on their timing. It was almost as excellent as my own. But regardless of background, I sincerely hope that each of the new members will come to enjoy and respect the Senate of Canada as I have during my brief five years here.

As I offered my welcome and congratulations, I almost passed over a fellow Newfoundlander and great Canadian who has worked hard and well in this chamber for many years in his position as Whip of the Liberal Party in this place. Except for that short interlude in 1979, Senator Petten has not had an opportunity to sample adequately the vantage point of an opposition senator. I am sure that he will not enjoy it any more than I did. I can only tell him that my respect and admiration for him will in no way be diminished by his change of address. I look forward with great anticipation to the arrival of some further colleagues to fill empty seats on this side of the chamber.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Doody: Some honourable senators are getting restless. It is time to throw the herrings. I believe that the work of the Senate and of Parliament generally would be enhanced by a more even distribution of numbers in this house. The effort it now takes to man committees adequately and to have full and fair representation from the government party on our committees is an extremely difficult one, and I should like to apologize to my colleagues on this side of the house if they find their workload to be both oppressive and excessive at this point. However, I repeat that we hope that some of the empty seats will soon be filled, and we shall then be in a position to spread the load more equitably.

When speaking of the necessity of increasing the numbers on this side of the house, I do so with some misgiving. Although it is necessary to increase the size of the Progressive Conservative representation, it is necessary at the same time to think of preserving this last stronghold of the Liberal Party in our country.

An Hon. Senator: Bless you!

Senator Doody: There is, as has been pointed out, no other legislative chamber in which that once great Liberal Party holds a majority, and while they get on with the difficult if not impossible task of rebuilding the party, it may very well be that the Liberal Party membership will play a crucial role in retaining at least the standing of official opposition by the party both in Ottawa and also perhaps in some of the provinces. It would be unfortunate indeed if the socialist party were to be given any greater role in the affairs of our country than it has at present.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Doody: There are a number of reasons for my feeling that way, not the least of which being their stated desire to abolish the Senate.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Doody: That is one of the major differences between the two socialist parties in Canada. My colleagues opposite believe in retaining the Senate.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: The leader is back. You had better be careful.

Senator Doody: Are you going to participate today, Senator Bonnell?

Senator Bonnell: Just tell him to be careful.

Senator Doody: We have learned the discipline of power already. I am sure honourable senators will understand if I express some joy in the long-awaited establishment of a Progressive Conservative majority government in our country. It was a long time coming, but when it did so, it came with a resounding endorsement from every province and territory in this country. Even in the great Liberal bastion of Newfoundland, the province for which I had the delightful responsibility as campaign chairman, the seat of Burin-St. Georges, for long the personal fief of my good friend, the Honourable Don Jamieson, fell for the first time since Confederation. There was dancing in the streets of St. John's. Bonavista-Trinity Conception is now a Progressive Conservative riding for the first time since 1968. And so it goes all across the country. The mandate for change was delivered loud and clear; and, honourable senators, this government has taken up the challenge, as has been demonstrated by the message in the gracious Throne Speech and, more recently, in the well-reasoned, very necessary financial statement delivered in the other place by the Honourable Michael Wilson, Minister of Finance.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: He has a violin accompaniment.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Do I hear a waltz?

Senator Doody: I can understand the difficulty that honourable senators are having. They are not experienced in having to listen to this type of speech. They have always sat and delivered. Let this be the first of well-intentioned and good humoured opportunities to bring them gracefully into an experience of being an opposition party. It is not a pleasant situation, but they must learn to grin and bear it; and I am being as pleasant about it as I possibly can. If you want to call for a recount—

Senator Frith: Not here we don't.

Senator Doody: Now, which province was I working on—

Senator Perrault: They are all suffering the same.

Senator Frith: They are all at the dance in St. John's.

Senator Doody: Perhaps we should send them pictures of honourable senators opposite, just to show them what they wrought. One of the many delightful messages given to Canadians in the Speech read by Her Excellency was the notice of a new era of national reconciliation, of economic renewal and social justice. The promise of a renewed federalism, of a reborn, co-operative federalism, is a welcome one indeed to all Canadians, but, more importantly, to those who reside in the less developed or have-not provinces. The anticipation of a quick and equitable settlement to the offshore question between the Government of Canada and the Province of Newfoundland is one that is awaited eagerly by the people of my province.

Honourable senators, it has been a long time since the economic fortunes of my province have been at such a low ebb; certainly not in my memory and perhaps not in that of anyone who has lived in Newfoundland since Confederation. I am not suggesting that the lack of resolution of the offshore problem is the sum and substance of the economic ills of Newfoundland and Labrador. I might be bold enough to suggest that a renewed effort to restructure, revitalize and renew the fishing industry may be even more important than the resolution of the offshore question. However, at the present time, the promise of a resolution of that festering sore will ensure my fellow Newfoundlanders that there is at least a place for them in Confederation, that they are Canadians of equal standing and stature, and that they do indeed have a place in Canada's future.

Another important and perhaps vital step toward the continuation of the Confederation of Canada is the commitment to bring Quebec into the constitutional accord and to work with the government of that province, no matter what its political stripe, toward a new place for that province within our country. I am struck by the promptness of this new administration in recognizing problem areas in the structure of our institutions. I note the immediate establishment of a task force on House of Commons reform, structured with a view to making the role of private members of that respected house more meaningful in terms of their responsibilities to their constituents and to the people of Canada as a whole. I dare to hope, honourable senators, as that task force concludes—under, I might add, the capable chairmanship of that prominent parliamentarian, the Honourable James McGrath of St. John's East—

An Hon. Senator: Another islander.

Senator Doody:—that the Government of Canada, as well as the governments of the provinces, might see fit to start the process through which the reform of this institution in which we now sit can take place.

The concern expressed by the Mulroney administration with regard to child care in Canada is welcomed, and I would hope to see that important part of our social system—a great social welfare system, I might add—reinforced and enhanced. The government's commitment, above all, to rehabilitating the economy of Canada is welcome indeed. The proposal to hold a national economic summit involving government, business, labour and consumer groups, concerning Canadians generally, is a most welcome expression of intent. That expression in the gracious Throne Speech was reinforced dramatically by the magnificent financial statement in the House of Commons by the Honourable Minister of Finance. The demonstrated intent to reduce the deficit, to simplify the taxation system, and to enhance generally the economic climate in Canada will undoubtedly spur investor confidence in our country and start the so badly needed job opportunity process that our country has long awaited.

The government's concern with the defence of Canada and its NATO commitment has been expressed forcibly and is welcomed by all Canadians.

I note also the intention of the Solicitor General's department to tighten early prison release and introduce administrative measures the better to protect the public and police. Surely this is a matter which in recent years has concerned Canadians in increasing numbers, and early action in this sphere will be welcomed.

Honourable senators, I would be remiss if I did not mention my keen satisfaction in noting that the Government of Canada, through the agency of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, is commissioning a study into the purchase of Petrofina. Honourable senators will recall that time after time, after time the then government representatives in this chamber were questioned by me and by others for details on the acquisition of Petrofina by Petro Canada. They were asked to explain why a seemingly inflated price was paid for those shares, a price inflated far beyond their current market value. We asked for copies of the report or study which was done and which reputedly justified the purchase at that price. No answers were forthcoming and no report was forthcoming. I would hope that this study commissioned by the minister gets under way quickly and reports back through Parliament to the people as to why this price was paid. It is a matter involving public funds and the public has a right to know.

• (1540)

Senator Frith: You might report on those job figures at the same time.

Senator Doody: In the same vein, I welcome the offering for sale of crown corporations. I have long felt that there are areas where government is not needed at all, or, at any rate, is no longer needed. I welcome the news from the Honourable Sinclair Stevens that certain crown corporations are being offered for sale, and the possibility is that further crown corporations will follow them on the auction block. This is not a fire sale. It is not a give-away. It is a reasonable transfer of business responsibilities to the business sector with a helpful addition to the revenues of our national treasury which so obviously is desperately in need of an infusion of funds.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: How do you know? No one has offered to buy them.

Senator Doody: Oh ye of little faith.

Senator Steuart: Oh ye of great experience.

Senator Doody: Yes, and look at you. I also take heart from the work being done on the disastrous national energy policy. It is welcome news, particularly to the west but, indeed, to all of Canada, that a rationalization of this disaster is being undertaken.

Honourable senators, let me say in conclusion that I welcome the initiatives taken by the new administration. The challenge is great. I am delighted with the speed with which the government has moved to take steps to correct the problems, or at least to face them. I look forward to a revitalized economy with the resultant job opportunities so vital for the social and financial wellbeing of the people of my province and, indeed, of all of the Canada. I thank you for your tolerance and forbearance.

On motion of Senator Argue, debate adjourned.

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

On the order:

Consideration of the First Report of the Committee of Selection—(Honourable Senator Phillips).

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I move that the report be now adopted.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

SECOND REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

On the Order:

Consideration of the Second Report of the Committee of Selection—(Honourable Senator Phillips)

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I move that the report be now adopted.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not intend to speak about this resolution, but I missed the opportunity to speak on the first one, which refers to the motion making you, Your Honour, the Speaker pro tempore in this house. I would feel that I had neglected my duty and had thwarted my pleasure if I did not ask the consent of the Senate to add a word of congratulations to you on your appointment. We are all delighted to see you in the Chair.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): As honourable senators and Your Honour may have observed from the customary method of demonstrating our enthusiasm in this place, we echo the remarks made by the Leader of the Government, welcome you as our Speaker pro tempore, and congratulate you and tell you how glad we are that you are in that well-earned position.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I thank honourable senators for this vote of confidence and assure them that I will do my best to serve the interests of the Senate.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I wish to thank all honourable senators for the trust they have placed in me, and I can assure them that I shall do everything I can to perform my new duties responsibly and efficiently.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, November 15, 1984

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rules 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, November 20, 1984, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

INDIA—DETENTION OF CANADIAN NATIONAL

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate the case of Jonathan Mann, a Canadian journalist who has been arrested and incarcerated in India while in pursuit of his work of informing the Canadian public on the situation in Punjab State. In this respect, a number of questions are justified.

In view of the insensitivity of the government to the issues involved, and the ineffectual and passive role of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, my first question to the Acting Leader of the Government is as follows: In spite of the minister's original refusal to press for the early release of Mr. Mann, will the government now reconsider that position and call in the High Commissioner for India in Canada, press him for the early release of Mr. Mann and also request that treatment as favourable as that accorded nationals of other countries be accorded Canadian citizens in India?

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, without accepting the substance of the preamble, as was the tradition of my predecessors on this side of the house, I certainly will refer the question to the appropriate department and obtain an answer for the honourable senator.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the acting leader for his undertaking to provide further information, but I can advise him that I have been informed that up to the present the Indian High Commissioner in Canada has not been approached by the Secretary of State for External Affairs with respect to this case. I believe that it really calls out for an explanation as to why the matter has been left to drift and why there is such neglect.

There is a second question arising from what I consider to be the incomprehensible attitude of the Secretary of State for External Affairs in this particular case. Mr. Clark is reported as saying as follows, referring to Mr. Mann: "The problem with Mr. Mann is that he broke Indian law and he must be treated like all people who break the law." I should like to know from the acting leader why the Secretary of State for External Affairs so seriously prejudiced Mr. Mann's case by condemning him before any hearing.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: Why condemn him when he is responsible for looking after his interests? What has happened to the principles of natural justice? Will the government even at this date—

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Shocking!

Senator MacEachen: —take some steps to repair the damage inflicted upon Mr. Mann by the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, in undertaking to obtain the information for the honourable gentleman, I should like to mention my recollection of the unfortunate incident. I understood that a fellow Canadian journalist, a lady who had accompanied Mr. Mann on that trip, admitted that they were in violation of certain edicts and restrictions that had been laid down by the Indian government. Be that as it may, I shall nevertheless pass on the request—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): She was not before an Indian court when she said that.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: We know she is not a witness. Don't be so stupid.

Senator Frith: Exactly. The minister constituted himself the court and decided to treat this as a legal admission.

Senator Perrault: It is more serious than that.

Senator Doody: As soon as the honourable gentlemen opposite restrain themselves, I shall finish my brief comment.

Senator Frith: And your side, too.

Senator Doody: I should take advantage of this opportunity to congratulate the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition on breaking the security blanket that surrounds the Senate in getting the substance of his speech in the local and national press. It is quite a step forward for this chamber.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Doody: Having said that, I shall undertake to find out what I can about the problem as enunciated by the honourable gentleman.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the acting leader for mentioning the breaking of the security blanket. With his co-operation, and with some information from him from time to time, we may be able to do it in the future as well.

The acting leader referred to the case of another Canadian journalist who made some comments about Mr. Mann's situation. What I should like to know from the government is whether they have made any representations or whether they will make representations to the Indian authorities, perhaps along the lines of those made in the case of a Swedish citizen who was apprehended and released very quickly with a warning, and ascertain why similar treatment was not accorded the Canadian journalist. Would the acting leader make a point of making a comparison between the two situations?

While I am on my feet, honourable senators, I should like to raise a couple of other questions. In view of the comments that were made by Jacques Abochard, a French journalist, who was arrested in Afghanistan, spent some time in prison and was then released as a result of the representations of the French government, why is it that our government is incapable of doing something much less than was done for a French national by his government? He himself said, "It is a good thing my government did not react in the same way as the Canadian government, because I probably would still be in prison in Kabul." He further said today, on French television, that he was glad he was not a Canadian.

Senator Perrault: That is unbelievable.

Senator MacEachen: I am informed also, honourable senators, that this morning in Washington—and that will impress this government—the Foreign Correspondents' Association has criticized the Government of Canada for not taking action and has particularly criticized Mr. Clark for condemning this journalist without any hearing.

I would ask the Acting Leader of the Government, when he is talking to his colleagues in the government, when he is trying to get some action from Mr. Clark, that he also remind him of the necessity of taking some action to repair the damage to the image of Canada resulting from the rather ineffectual performance by the government in this instance.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I shall certainly try to separate the concern from the rhetoric and pass the concern on to the appropriate official.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, 50 years ago to this day, I suffered the same thing that Mr. Mann is suffering today. The British government defended me even though I was not a British subject. They sent the Deputy High Commissioner to Amritsar to get me out of detention at the same place as Mr. Mann is. Why can't the Canadian government do for a Canadian what the British government did for a foreigner?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

BURKINA-FASO—CLOSING OF CANADIAN DIPLOMATIC POST

Hon. Andrew Thompson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Acting Leader of the Government a question which I think he would also want to refer to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

May I say, first, that I am sure all of us in this chamber have great respect for the decency and civility of this minister during some very trying times. Having said that, I think all of us on both sides would recognize that he does have a somewhat great propensity for making rather hasty announcements about such things as moving or closing diplomatic posts. This time around, honourable senators, I am not referring to Tel Aviv.

I should like to know what signal the minister feels Canada is transmitting throughout the whole of the devastated, drought-ridden belt of Africa—and today we are seeing on television so much of the human agony that is taking place throughout that area—by pulling down its flag in a little outpost in one of the poorest countries in the world. I refer to Burkina-Faso which was previously called Upper Volta.

That tiny nation has suffered the most horrible existence from starvation. As a Canadian, I was proud there was an outpost there over which the Canadian flag flew, and through which over $90 million of aid was being transmitted. We know how important it is to have on-the-spot supervision of the aid being given. Indeed, we realize that the minister is trying very hard to ensure that that will take place in Ethiopia.

My question is: What signal is the minister giving by pulling down the Canadian flag in this devastated little nation, and how much is he saving? Can he break the lease of our little outpost? How much are we losing face in Canada by closing down a symbol of hope to the millions who are starving in that area?

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Great speech.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: All true.

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think we are talking about two different issues: the closing of the posts; and the particular post referred to. This signals an effort by this government to save money where it possibly can in terms of the general restraint program that has been announced. These closings will not seriously affect any of the Canadian programs in effect in these countries. The aid programs will be continued and, hopefully, increased.

We now have a group studying the Ethiopian situation seriously. There are plans to increase the level of aid to that particular country, which is suffering such ravages at the present time.

Honourable senators, I do not think that Canada, under this government or under the previous government, need be in any way ashamed of its efforts in terms of aid given to the Third World. The problems associated with these particular small posts and embassies are simply ones of economy. In no way do they signify any Canadian intent to diminish interest in these countries at this time.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre De Bané: I want to ask a supplementary question to the Deputy Leader of the Government about one of the embassies which will be closed, namely that of Ouagadougou, the capital of Upper Volta.

Since the government has decided to maintain its cooperation program with Upper Volta, which is one of the benefiting countries under the Canadian program, I cannot understand why that decision was made. The principal mission of our Ouagadougou embassy is to administer the cooperation program.

I would like to know how the Canadian government will save money by administering that cooperation program from Ouagadougou hotel suites rather than from our embassy. If I am not mistaken about the intentions of the government, there will be no cutbacks in the cooperation program.

Will it be cheaper for the government to find accommodation for its officials in hotels instead of in the embassy where they are now?

[English]

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I really have no idea of how or where these people are going to be accommodated. I assume they will be looked after humanely as the Canadian aid programs are administered.

The honourable senator can be assured that the Canadian commitment to aid in these countries will be maintained. I will refer the question to the minister responsible and attempt to get further details for Senator De Bané, just as I will for Senator Thompson, who asked for the actual costing of the close-down. Other than that, I cannot supply information at this point.

IMMIGRATION

ENTRY OF SOVIET REFUGEES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, my question is addressed to the Acting Leader of the Government. It concerns a misleading statement made yesterday by a minister in the other place. In answer to a question by Madame Lucie Pépin, the Honourable Flora MacDonald, Minister of Employment and Immigration, said that asylum had not been granted to six Soviet defectors because no requests for asylum had been made. This is false. Officials confirm that—

Some Hon. Senators: Order!

[Senator Doody.]

Senator Gigantès: —requests were made and were refused by this government.

Will the Acting Leader of the Government tell this house whether the Minister of Employment and Immigration remembered that she had refused these requests? Had she forgotten them? Is the matter of the lives of six people of so small import that it can be forgotten, or did another minister take this decision, bypassing Miss MacDonald's authority and responsibility to make it?

If that is not the case, could the acting leader find out for us whether the Minister of Employment and Immigration had failed to refresh her memory by consulting her officials? Was it that she wanted to hide from the Canadian people a cruel decision—

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): On a point of order—

Senator Gigantès: —not to grant asylum to six young people?

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Sit down, you idiot.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I have to protest that particular type of question and the way in which it is phrased. Honourable ladies and gentlemen with any parliamentary experience know that it is completely unacceptable to question the motives or sincerity of a minister, or to say that a minister or member deliberately misled the house. That is just not acceptable. If it had been done in the other place, a point of privilege would have been raised immediately.

Honourable senators, I have every intention of being as co-operative as possible in efforts to obtain information, but I really cannot be expected to sit here and listen to that kind of abuse heaped upon a minister of the Crown.

Senator Gigantès: Would the Acting Leader of the Government then ask the minister to tell us why it was that, by her statement, she, in effect, hid from the Canadian people a cruel decision, that of refusing asylum to six young men who were trying to flee cruelty and get to freedom?

● (1420)

Senator Doody: I find myself in a difficult position. I appreciate the fact that the honourable senator may not be familiar with the decorum and deportment customary in a parliamentary forum, but I also appreciate the point he is trying to make. I will make some inquiries along the lines he suggests. However, I must go on record as deploring the form of the question and the language used in asking it.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: He doesn't know better.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, as a supplementary, I do not believe that matters of decorum can take precedence over a matter concerning six people who wanted to come to Canada to save their lives. Since the Acting Leader of the Government does not want me to refer to ministers, perhaps he will be able to tell me why members of his party in the other house hooted and snickered when the minister gave her answer regarding the refusal to allow those people into Canada when they needed asylum. Do his colleagues in the other house believe that the lives of six young people are a laughing matter, or were they laughing because they had been left in the dark by the government and did not know the facts of the case?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: You will have loved that.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I will applaud when we get an answer.

RESTAURANT OF PARLIAMENT

AVAILABILITY OF FRENCH APPLES

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I am holding in my hand an apple. It is not a large apple, by Canadian standards. It is not an ostentatious apple by the standards of the Annapolis Valley, the Okanagan Valley or Ontario and Quebec. I do not expect the Acting Leader of the Government to have the answer to my question immediately. Can he inform the house why it is necessary for the parliamentary restaurant to import and sell French apples, as they are clearly marked here, in our parliamentary restaurant when Canadian apples are of world quality? They are in surplus in the Annapolis Valley, in the Okanagan Valley and in Ontario and Quebec. What elusive gourmet qualities do these Continental apples possess to make it necessary to fly or ship them in from France; or are imported apples part of a new parliamentary restaurant regime established since the new government took power?

On behalf of Canadian orchardists, who are having a difficult time these days, I should like an explanation. It is a fair question. Indeed, I know the Acting Leader of the Government would not approve of this practice if indeed it can be demonstrated that it exists. Are we simply apple polishing with foreign countries?

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on behalf of the orchardists in Newfoundland, I will do what I can to respond to that question. My impression—and I stand to be corrected—is that this matter is really not one that is the responsibility of the government and I am uncertain as to which minister this matter should be referred to.

An Hon. Senator: Get your teeth into it.

Senator Doody: Perhaps the honourable senator should think in terms of the Joint Committee on the Restaurant of Parliament, and the Speakers of both houses to whom that committee reports. Perhaps they are in a better position to deal with the honourable senator's distaste for foreign apples—

Senator Perrault: It is not a question of having a distaste for foreign apples or for foreign trade. It is recognition of the fact that orchardists in your part of Canada and mine are having a difficult time at the bank these days. We should buy Canadian apples whenever we can and even attempt to export some to France.

Senator Doody: It is refreshing indeed to realize that the honourable senator recognizes the problems that apple growers have in Newfoundland.

Senator Perrault: And the Atlantic provinces—Nova Scotia.

Senator Doody: However, I believe the matter should be referred to the committee that deals with the parliamentary restaurant.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM INCENTIVE PROGRAM—REDUCTION IN GRANTS

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Leader of the Government. I am aware that he is not a member of the cabinet, and I hope that he will be able to provide us with better answers than his colleague, the Leader of the Government, who is a member of the cabinet. I sometimes wonder if the Leader of the Government attends cabinet meetings. My question deals with a subject that is close to the heart of everyone in Atlantic Canada, western Canada and northern Canada. I refer to the oil industry. The Minister of Finance announced that there would be cuts in the Petroleum Incentive Program, PIP, to the tune of $250 million. Is this a real cut or does it amount to smoke and mirrors, to the effect that, if resource development does not increase over last year, this cut will take place, whereas if it does increase, this cut will not take place? If an increase in exploration takes place, will the government still cut $250 million out of this program? I am told by the oil industry that if there is more research and development in western Canada and the Atlantic provinces, the cut will not happen and that the government will have to pay out the $250 million. Is this cut real or illusionary?

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the intent of saving that amount of money was announced by the Minister of Finance in his statement. Therefore, I assume that the intention is to cut that much money from the Petroleum Incentive Program. Whether regulations, rules, laws, statutes or what-have-you have to be changed to achieve that end, I cannot say at this point. I can only tell you what was in the statement and that it is the intention of the government to save that amount of money in the Petroleum Incentive Program.

Senator Steuart: I have before me an article written by Thomas Walkom, which reads, in part:

Mr. Wilson said he will cut $250-million from petroleum incentive program grants made to oil companies. Industry sources scoff at this, noting that PIP grants are still tied automatically to the level of petroleum exploration. All that has been cut, they say, is the oil industry's estimate of how much it plans to explore. If exploration increases again, so will the PIP grants and the saving will disappear.

Will this in fact happen, in spite of the promise made in Prince Albert that the oil industry, along with other industries, will step up exploration, with the election of a Conservative government? Just as we had "jobs, jobs, jobs" promised in Prince Albert, does the government now think that exploration will not increase, and it has, therefore, made this cut which, in fact, is not a cut?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Flim-flam.

Senator Doody: I appreciate the honourable gentleman's reading the newspaper clipping for us. It is helpful, but I can only repeat what I said earlier, that the intention of the government is to save that money. This intention has been enunciated loudly and clearly, and I can only assume that the government has every intention of fulfilling that commitment to save that money from the PIP grants. I cannot give any detail as to how this is to be done, but I can certainly pass the inquiry on to the appropriate minister in an attempt to get more detail for the honourable gentleman.

Senator Steuart: I am surprised that the honourable senator does not know. It looks as though some of the cuts will affect Atlantic Canada, western Canada and northern Canada but not central Canada. If oil exploration increases—which was a promise of the Tory party made while in opposition and during the election—will $250 million be cut from the program, or if activity in the program increases, which is our hope, will the government have to pay out that amount automatically? Has there been a change in the program, or is this just another illusion?

Senator Doody: As I said the first time I stood up—

Hon. Jacques Flynn: For the third time!

Senator Steuart: It takes at least three times before you can understand anything—in either language!

Senator Doody: I don't want to interrupt. You guys go right ahead.

Senator Flynn: You don't know what you are saying, so don't bother me.

Senator Steuart: You have been shoved aside, and it is a good thing. Now we can get some answers.

Senator Doody: I want to tell Senator Steuart that the first time I attempted to reply I told him that the intention of the government was to save the amount of money that has been mentioned. Whether it takes a change in the regulations, programs, specifications or law remains to be seen. Perhaps we had better wait for a budget or another statement. I do not have the details here. I simply understand the intentions, which were just as clearly read to me as they were read to the honourable senator.

Senator Steuart: But you will obtain an answer?

Senator Doody: I will certainly try, which is what I said five or six minutes ago.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on this point, if it is the intention of the government, as the Acting Leader states, to achieve real savings through real cuts of $250 million, will he confirm that if there are, for example, applications for exploration on the coast of Nova Scotia, the government will turn down those applications in order to save this $250 million and deny those companies an opportunity to explore off the Atlantic coast?

• (1430)

Senator Doody: I can neither confirm nor deny that but will seek the information my honourable friend seeks.

Senator MacEachen: The Acting Leader cannot tell us in one breath that the intention is to achieve real savings, and then in the next breath say that he cannot confirm that there are to be real savings.

Senator Doody: I told the honourable gentleman earlier, and I repeat, I cannot answer in specifics with respect to how that achievement is to be attained. I can simply reinforce the desire of the government to save that amount of money in that program.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Andrew Thompson: Honourable senators, in the interest of economy, since the Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate is sending a number of requests for information to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, perhaps I could ask him to include one more. My question is with respect to what was a rather puzzling announcement made by the minister when he first went to New York after taking office. I quote remarks made by the minister at a press conference which took place in New York. He said:

The position of the party is that we should look very favorably upon joining the OAS. That . . . is not news. That was the position of the party . . .

He is referring there to your great party, the Conservative Party.

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): A great national party.

Senator Thompson: The quotation continues:

That was the position of the party through the election campaign and nothing has happened to cause us to change that view.

I wonder if the government has taken into consideration that it will cost some $8 million to join OAS. There may even be other reasons why the government would not want to join the organization immediately. As we all know, Canada has an observer position in the Washington headquarters of OAS. Perhaps we felt that was a useful position to be in when we saw such events as the Falkland Islands crisis and other disputes arise within the organization itself.

I ask the acting leader if he could clarify for us whether or not Mr. Clark's statement represents the official position of the Conservative Party. Also, is it the official position of this government?

[Senator Steuart.]

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, the honourable gentleman has obviously quoted the words of the minister responsible. Thus, he is in possession of the same information as I am at this point. I have no doubt that that very civil and trustworthy minister was explaining the facts exactly as they are. I have no reason to tell the honourable senator that it is an incorrect statement.

Senator Thompson: What I am concerned about is whether or not the statement from which I have quoted represents the position of the Government of Canada. I would like to have that point clarified.

Senator Doody: We can accept the fact that if a minister makes a statement he is speaking for and on behalf of the government. If there is a change in the position later on, I have no reason to believe that the minister, or some other minister, will not make a statement in that regard. I am obviously not in a position to contradict. Although I am not a member, I am a very fervent admirer and supporter of the government. Through some oversight I was not included in its formation!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to raise a point with respect to the Organization of American States. Senator Thompson has raised a very good point and I understand what the acting leader has said in reply. Can I ask him if at a later sitting of this house he will tell us whether or not the government has considered the question of Canadian membership in the Organization of American States and whether, having considered it, it has taken the decision to join or not to join? Can we have confirmation of the present situation, which is observer status in the Organization of American States? It is a question of information, and not of debate. I would like to know whether the government has considered this matter since it took office, and whether it has decided yes or no.

Senator Doody: I think I am safe in saying that the government has considered and is still considering the question, just as my friend across the way undoubtedly considered the question on many occasions over the past number of years. However, whether a decision has yet been made, I am really not in a position to inform honourable senators, but I shall certainly try to obtain the information as soon as it becomes available.

RULES OF THE SENATE

RULE 20—ORAL QUESTIONS—SUGGESTED AMENDMENT

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, but since he is not in the chamber today I shall put the question to the acting leader.

Yesterday I asked the Leader of the Government if he was prepared to consider discussing with the leadership in the other place the question of appointing parliamentary secretaries from among government supporters in this chamber in order that someone else might respond to questions put by members of the opposition with respect to problems with which the Leader of the Government was not familiar. At that time, he responded that this was a prerogative of the Prime Minister and that he, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, was not prepared to recommend a change in the law at this time.

While I appreciate that my suggestion would involve a great deal of work and perhaps a great deal of parliamentary time to institute, nevertheless I am asking the acting leader whether he is prepared to discuss the matter with his colleague, the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I would point out that there are some changes that could be made to the rules of the Senate which do not entail a great deal of debate or a great deal of work. For example, he might perhaps consider amending rule 20 which deals with the manner in which questions can be put in the Senate. Rule 20(1)(a) states that a question may be put to the Leader of the Government in the Senate; rule 20(1)(b) states that a question may be put to a senator who is a Minister of the Crown, and rule 20(1)(c) states that a question can be put to the chairman of a committee, if it is a question relating to the activities of that committee.

Would the leader consider adding to that rule to provide for some designated persons from amongst government supporters who could speak and would be knowledgeable on certain topics that are of great interest to the Senate, particularly in the areas of energy, agriculture, natural resources and regional economic expansion. I wonder whether the leader would consider designating such spokespersons for these particular areas?

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): The honourable member's question raises all sorts of interesting thoughts, such as whether we will get some extra members to fill all of the posts that the honourable member describes.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: There are five vacancies.

Senator Doody: The Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders is the authority in the Senate to consider such a question, and if my honourable friend wishes to refer his question to that body, I see no way in which we can prevent him from doing so, nor indeed would we want to.

I would like to add that, with respect to the section of the rules to which my honourable friend was just referring, I happened to glance over that section a few minutes ago and I must say it contains a number of interesting points. However, I did not raise any of them when the questions were being asked.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You read them for the first time today; you did not read them when you were on this side of the house?

Senator Doody: That is right. They were of no interest to me when I was on that side.

Senator Bosa: I have a supplementary question. The acting leader is making the suggestion that this matter should be raised in the Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders. However, it is the Leader of the Government in the Senate who must respond to that suggestion. There must be the political will to carry through with that suggestion.

Also, the acting leader claims that there are not enough government supporters on his side of the house. As I look across the aisle from here, I see, both in the front benches and elsewhere, senators who are very capable of assuming such responsibilities.

Senator Doody: I must say that I agree with the honourable gentleman. The talent is certainly here. Senator Bosa and Senator Roblin had a good discussion on the topic yesterday, and I see no reason in the world why Senator Roblin and myself should not have an equally good discussion on the same subject tomorrow.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Would you consider recommending to the Standing Senate Committee on Standing Rules and Orders that the rules of the Senate conform to the realities of the situation, in that there is no provision in rule 20(1)(a) for asking questions of the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, although we always do so.

Senator Doody: I appreciate the comment; I knew that as well as the honourable senator, but this is the first time since 1979 that I have had any adrenalin pumping, so you would not want to deprive me of that.

Senator Frith: That is why you will be referred to in the Debates of the Senate as the Acting Leader of the Government.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEES—MEETINGS

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, on Tuesday, November 13, 1984 Senator Godfrey inquired as to the last meeting of the Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament and the Joint Committee on the Printing of Parliament.

I am advised that the last meeting of the Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament was held on June 17, 1982, and that the last report of the Joint Committee on the Printing of Parliament was issued on June 21, 1948.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Who was in power then?

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—NEW APPROACHES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask another question of the Acting Leader of the Government.

The Speech from the Throne placed a great deal of importance on trade relations with our trading partners, particularly the United States. I, of course, applaud that emphasis.

The Speech from the Throne went on to say that the Government of Canada is actively exploring new approaches with the United States in the field of trade. I was struck by the expression "new approaches". Certainly it would not be the creation of a free trade area, because that is not new; it would not be the introduction of sectoral free trade, because that is not new; so I have been very curious to know what the government has in mind.

Would the Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate be good enough to inquire and tell us, when he receives the information precisely what these new approaches are that are under active exploration with the United States?

Hon. C. William Doody (Acting Leader of the Government): I certainly will try to do that.

Hon. Jack Marshall: See how co-operative we are.

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, seconded by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to Her Speech at the opening of the session.—(Honourable Senator Argue P.C.)

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, as have other senators who have taken part in this debate, I should like to congratulate Senator Roblin on his appointment as Leader of the Government in the Senate. I believe he will conduct himself in this chamber in a very commendable way and will bring a great deal of honour to the Senate and to the government. His deputy has already demonstrated his ability, yesterday and today.

I, too, wish to congratulate His Honour on his having been appointed Speaker of the Senate. We are all aware of his important contribution to this great country over the years and look forward to working with him as Speaker of the Senate.

I want particularly to compliment the Speaker pro tempore on his having been appointed to that important post. He and I have been colleagues in both houses of Parliament for a number of years, and I have learned to respect his sincerity, his ability and aggressiveness, and I am sure he will bring sound judgment and a great measure of fairness to that position.

I am also quite pleased that Senator Phillips has been appointed the government whip. I have known Senator Phillips for a long time, and I am sure he will continue to deal with his colleagues in the Senate in his usual fair and open-minded manner.

I congratulate the mover and seconder of the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech of Her Excellency the Governor General. Although the Speech from the Throne lacked many things, their speeches were excellent.

I am happy, on this side of the house, with the leadership that has taken responsibility for the Liberal Party. Our whip and our deputy leader come as no surprise, because both persons are eminently qualified for those positions, but I am not sure that the appointment of our leader was not a surprise; I really did not have any idea who that person might be. I think that we are lucky on this side of the house; I think the Senate is fortunate; and I think that Canada is fortunate in that the leader of the Liberal Party in the Senate has the breadth, vision, experience and outstanding ability of the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen. I am very pleased to be in the same party and to have him as my leader.

It was announced today that the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, the Honourable Charles Mayer, has been given the responsibility of dealing with co-operatives and, in particular, the follow-up on the Co-operatives Task Force Report. That is a most welcome announcement.

I was pleased in my time in the cabinet to have been associated rather closely with the co-operative movement in this country, and I worked with the co-operative movement and my colleagues in the cabinet in bringing forward a new energy company, Coenerco, financed and managed jointly by the co-operatives and by the Government of Canada. The company is off to a very good start; it has an excellent balance sheet. I believe its assets are now something over $100 million. That company will grow, and I am sure that it will make a valuable contribution to the oil industry and to consumers.

I was able to bring before the cabinet in those days recommendations for certain changes in existing government legislation. It seemed to me that in our free enterprise system really one of the best kinds of free enterprise is the co-operatives, where many ordinary Canadians band themselves together, dig into their own pockets and put up money to operate particular companies.

I was happy that in that last Parliament the Financial Administration Act was amended so that credit unions could accept government deposits. Credit unions told me then that when Canada Savings Bonds went on sale over two years ago, they immediately lost more than $300 million in deposits. They now tell me that being able to have government deposits is a very good part of their business; that they are getting just about their share of government deposits. They have found that it is a money-making department of their operation. Therefore, I think that that was a move in the right direction.

I was pleased to see that towards the end of the last Parliament we were able to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act to allow, for the first time, credit unions to supply credit to the Canadian Wheat Board. I think that that is an important step forward.

I understand, as I have said, that the Honourable Mr. Mayer will be responsible for dealing with the task force report on co-operatives. I hope that he will give that report the kind of consideration that it requires. We know, from the actions of the government and from studies undertaken by the former government and others, that this country has many problems for which many of the solutions are not readily available. It seems to me that, in trying to work out new solutions and new initiatives, the co-operative system has a great deal to offer. The task force report on co-operatives made special emphasis on the role that producer co-operatives might play in the future. They asked that special consideration be given to using co-operatives in providing community health services. They felt that the fisheries industry was one where co-operatives might play an enlarged role. They were particularly interested in the question of housing co-operatives and of ensuring that co-operatives had the opportunity to provide the housing needs of many Canadians.

The government has been in office for only a short time. I should like to make some references to the expectations that have been on the minds of Canadians but, particularly, of western Canadians. Western Canada has strongly supported the Conservative Party for a long period of time. In western Canada approximately 80 per cent of the ridings elected Conservatives in the last election. I am certain that people out west particularly were looking to the government to meet the commitments and the promises that had been made. One promise that has not been forthcoming was to provide additional funds for drought assistance. The drought assistance that was paid was $48 per brood cow in the main area of drought and half of that in fringe areas where the drought was less severe. Of course, that program was put in place by Prime Minister Turner and the current government has gone forward with that program. But the expectation out west was for much more. Premier Devine of Saskatchewan said that the federal government should be paying an additional $700 million for drought relief. That is something we have not heard about since. We certainly have not heard of any action by this government. Premier Devine has been strangely silent in prodding this government in the same way as he was prepared to prod the previous administration.

The farmers in the west were told that if they elected a Conservative government the fuel tax would be taken off. It has been announced that the fuel tax has not been taken off on farm fuel but that farmers can make an application for a refund at a later date. The farmers thought they were going to save money when they went to town to purchase their fuel or when it was delivered to their farm, but they did not think that they would have to go cap in hand and keep all of their records and apply for a rebate. They certainly were not fully aware or perhaps even suspicious, although some of us were, that the government would announce that the regime would be going to world oil prices immediately and that that very action would, in fact, take away virtually all of the benefits of the new policy with regard to the tax on farm fuel. That is an illusion and something which has not helped the farmers in the west in any major way.

The government was going to institute measures to remove capital gains on farm land so long as farm land was kept for agricultural purposes. That was a clear commitment. In the economic statement it is not clear that the capital gains tax on farm land will be removed. All it says is that a study will be made and before the study is commenced a government document will be produced dealing with that issue. Some of us who have had experience with government documents know that they can be shaded and weighted one way or the other, and that a government document could, almost by itself, be making the decision or forecasting the decision that will be made. There is no longer a clear-cut decision to remove capital gains from the sale of farm land.

Another promise that was of major importance, in my judgment, as a result of the election was the clear commitment by Mr. Mazankowski and by Prime Minister Mulroney, who was then Leader of the Opposition, that a newly elected Conservative government would prevent the increase of grain freight rates being in effect this year. In other words, the farmers were told that they would save $60 million on freight rates on grain and that they would not be allowed to increase. They have increased and there is no indication that they are going to be rolled back. That is another indication of where the promises and the commitments have not been fulfilled. As these commitments are repudiated one after the other, the feeling will be prevalent in western Canada that despite the support for the present administration from voters in western Canada, western Canada is being repudiated.

I took a special interest in these matters because my responsibility was for the operation of the Canadian Wheat Board. I believe that history shows that it was a very successful operation that took place over those years. Now I am concerned about the attitude of the present government to the Canadian Wheat Board and to that marketing system and how it functions. There are alarming signs that the Mulroney government may damage the Canadian Wheat Board's effectiveness in exporting Canadian wheat, oats and barley. The new minister, the Honourable Charles Mayer, said that he has been reassured by the United States Secretary of Agriculture, John Block, that the United States blended credit that provides a portion of credit at zero interest rates has not hurt Canada. Mr. Block visited Canada and met with the new minister, and Mr. Mayer was reported as saying that blended credit has not hurt Canada. There is overwhelming evidence that United States blended credit has hurt Canada in certain important markets and has turned what were cash markets into credit markets. Obviously, if a country can get credit, some of which is at zero, there is a temptation for them, even though they have been paying cash in the past, to obtain credit at these lower rates. That statement by the minister is encouragement to the United States to continue its aggressive, harmful, blended-credit export drive.

In the document, "A New Direction for Canada", presented by the Minister of Finance, there is an obvious serious threat to our orderly marketing system, the Canadian Wheat Board. This document, at page 30, states:

Also at issue is whether or not the government should make room for the private sector to provide competitive export financing services.

In another obvious threat, it states:

It is timely to consider the ongoing role and mandate of Canada's export financing organizations.

That is, the Canadian Wheat Board.

[Senator Argue.]

The Canadian Wheat Board has proven to be the best possible system of marketing western grain. In each year of the last four years, we have broken every previous export sales record, and in that period of time Canada has been recovering its historic position in the world grain market. Financing is an important element in the Canadian Wheat Board's trade policy.

The attack on the Canadian Wheat Board in this document is very obvious. The Canadian Wheat Board is careful not to divulge its commercial operations, and, yet, this document spells out that 12 per cent of wheat sales last year were on credit terms. It informs the world of the total value of the credit. I would say that this statement casts a slur on some of our customers. Six of the ten countries which have purchased grain on credit from the Canadian Wheat Board have already rescheduled portions of their debt.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Why is that a slur?

Senator Argue: Because they are not named; because it is a blanket statement. I do not think they should be named. If the government wants to name them, then let them take that responsibility. If the Canadian Wheat Board names them, then that is fine. The main one, of course, is Poland, and that is public knowledge. Why slur all the rest? Most of the credit customers have been excellent customers, and, while this government may act differently, no government in the past has declared that any of this credit is such that it cannot be collected. None of it has been written off. Divulging this kind of information is not fair, because it is inadequate. It does not cover the whole situation. Most of those customers are excellent customers and have paid their credit when it became due.

Some years ago, I remember taking a recommendation to the cabinet for a very large guaranteed credit for Canada's biggest customer, the Soviet Union. There were people abroad and in this country who asked why we should provide credit to the Soviet Union. That credit was for a short time. It was the revolving type of credit. Every dollar of credit was paid on the due date and, since that time, this customer has purchased for cash only. I say that this is an excellent operation and should not come under the kind of attack set forth in this document. It was a Conservative administration that went along with the United States' partial embargo on the sale of grain to the Soviet Union that cost the farmers of this country hundreds of millions of dollars.

How is the financing done? Every dollar has been loaned at commercial rates of interest, and each proposed guaranteed loan, after careful scrutiny by the Canadian Wheat Board, by officials of the Grain Marketing Office of the Government of Canada and by the Department of Finance, has gone forward, with their recommendations, before the whole cabinet for final approval. I say that no system could be more careful, more painstaking and more successful for western farmers and the Canadian economy. It is nonsense to talk of opening it up to the private sector to provide competitive export financing, because the money has all been provided by the private sector, by Canadian financial institutions, as one would expect, namely, the Canadian chartered banks.

I want to serve notice on the Mulroney government that the Liberal members of both the House of Commons and the Senate will resist any tampering with and any threat to Canada's most successful business enterprise, the Canadian Wheat Board, now bringing revenues into this country in excess of $5 billion a year.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Argue: It is a great success, and it is the best kind of business that I know, because it is a blend of the individual proprietor, the farmer, his marketing organizations—often the co-operatives—and the government through a marketing agency.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): It is a renewable resource.

Senator Argue: It is a renewable resource, and the farmers are so successful that they can get a bigger crop almost every year, at least by way of a trend.

I think this model could be applied to other Canadian industries. I think it could be used to a larger extent in the grain industry in western Canada. It is hard to convince enough farmers because private grain traders are constantly on the air pointing out imagined difficulties in this system. There are some farm organizations with a handful of members—financed in large part by the provincial treasury of the province of Alberta—who are continually attacking the Canadian Wheat Board system; but the people who are in trouble in a marketing sense are not so much the wheat producers—although their price is not nearly as good as it should be—as it is the canola industry because producers have no assurance of price. The crushing industry has no assurance of supply, and the whole western canola-crushing industry is in great danger of folding up, sometimes because of lack of supplies, sometimes because of promotions of a crushing industry in central Canada, and sometimes because of the lack of the kind of marketing development that is required.

The Wheat Board system lends itself to expanded markets; to guaranteed supplies; to orderly marketing, and the farmers respond to that kind of system.

Perhaps I could give some gratuitous advice to those who are concerned with the fishing industry. It seems to me that the Canadian Wheat Board model would have a great deal to offer the fishing industry. It could offer initial prices. It could put forward quotas. As I say, I am not an authority on the best way to respond to the needs of that industry. It could have control over the marketing, the processing and the storage of products. All parts of the industry, particularly the co-operatives and the fishermen, would have an important role to play. The government could go out and make long-term contracts and sometimes, perhaps, with guaranteed credits for the delivery and the export of Canadian fish.

When he was Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, Senator De Bané came to me one day and asked if I could have someone from the Canadian Wheat Board attend a conference where the government was to consider all the problems of the fishing industry. I told him that I would be very glad to ask Mr. Jarvis to attend. Esmond Jarvis, Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, participated in that study session with representatives of the industry and representatives from all aspects of government. Mr. De Bané reported that the star of the session was Esmond Jarvis, the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board. He told me that he thought the Canadian Wheat Board had a great deal to offer. I thought that he went overboard a bit when he suggested to me that the Canadian Wheat Board could obviously market fish in an efficient way. In his view, all they would have to do would be to set up a particular department within the Wheat Board system and to staff that department with people who understand problems involving fish. The Canadian Wheat Board has the expertise in marketing wheat internationally, and Mr. De Bané said that expertise could be used to market fish.

Honourable senators, I think that the Wheat Board system is a good one for western Canada. I think that it is a model that could be examined for use in other areas. I think that it is a system that not only deserves preserving, but should be looked at as a means by which to provide greater services to other parts of the country.

The government has created the expectation that, upon its election and simply because it is a new government, 200,000 new jobs will be created. When it was pointed out that the Conservatives, by tradition and by philosophy, might well step in and attack the social security system, the leader of the Conservative Party, Mr. Mulroney, said that that system is a sacred trust. He has continued to say that there will be no means test and that there will be no deterrent fees or extra billing in the delivery of medicare. But the message with regard to old age security is not nearly so clear. The social security system is going to be looked at. The question of family allowances and how they are to be paid is going to be looked at. I noted that the Prime Minister, at one point, made reference to a bank president earning $500,000 a year yet receiving family allowance benefits. You know, most family allowance benefits are received by the mothers, but in this case the bank president, the father, is getting it.

Senator Frith: How many bank presidents are there in the country, anyway, about 12?

Senator Argue: There may be 12; I thought there were only about five, but maybe there are a few smaller banks worth just a couple of billion rather than tens of billions of dollars. At any rate, isn't that a great argument? They will take the tax schedule to show that the bank president does not return in taxes the full amount of the family allowance. Perhaps we might think of putting in a one per cent surcharge for family allowances or for old age pensions, just to make sure that the bank presidents—all 12 of them—pay enough to understand that there are others in the country who need that kind of payment. But the great danger here is that the system may be altered in such a way, that universality is removed. In such a changed system all of the old age pensioners and all of those receiving family allowance benefits would be divided into two categories: one made up of the well-to-do and the other made up of those with low incomes. I am fearful, honourable senators, that, as soon as the Conservative government has created those two categories, the poor will then be under attack—under heavy attack.

I have been around Parliament Hill a long time, now; I was first elected in 1945. I have participated in the debates on and have been part of the ongoing process of providing a system of old age security without a means test. I think that system has a great deal to offer. Everyone reaching the age of 65 receives the old age security pension. Out in my little hamlet, people look forward to getting that old age security pension. To that extent, they are all equal; they are all in the same boat and they like it that way. Then, for those who have very small incomes, there is the particular provision by which they can get the guaranteed income supplement. That is accepted and appreciated. But I do not think anyone would appreciate the eliminating of the old age security pension by means of taking away its universal application.

Honourable senators, the system that we now have is a good one. I hope and expect that it will be maintained. I do not think that any kind of attack is going to remove the universality of the application of old age pensions and of family allowances because I think there is just too much support for universality. The element of universality was introduced by the administration of the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent. I remember seeing him in the late afternoon, perhaps, strolling away from Parliament Hill, going to his apartment unaccompanied by any security guards—how times have changed! We were all kind of proud to know that the Prime Minister of this country was prepared to accept an old age pension, and, in accepting it, removing whatever stigma there might have been attached to pensions in the past. Pensions are universal; everyone receives one.

Honourable senators, the way to deal with those people earning high incomes is through the income tax law. If you want to take it away from them, okay, and through the tax system is a better way to do it. You can, if you wish, tax five times as much away from them through the income tax provisions, yet still keep on paying them pensions. The general public of this country would support that kind of policy.

Today, all over Canada, there is an attack on the poor. I do not think there are too many spokesmen for people who are living on low incomes. Saskatchewan has been said to be as wealthy a province, per capita, as any other in Canada, although it is now said that there is less unemployment in Manitoba than there is in Saskatchewan; I will not get into that. The Devine government of Saskatchewan decided that it was going to tackle the welfare system. It brought in changes. I will tell honourable senators how far those changes have gone. Those changes have gone so far as to reduce the income of a single person on welfare to between $125 and $135 per month, over and above the cost of shelter. Shelter is provided; the rent is paid; presumably it is a warm place where one could have a comfortable sleep. With this new régime in Saskatchewan, those people can look forward to a month's expenses which cannot total more than $4 a day—$4 a day for food, clothing and drugs. God help them if they smoke—that $4 a day would have to include the cost of tobacco and the cost of a cup of coffee. Honourable senators, I say that that is an absolute disgrace to any part of this country and to any government in this country. I say that that kind of situation should be changed.

I know that in the former administration the federal government stood ready to pay 50 per cent of the cost of the welfare programs. But in Saskatchewan, a Conservative government has been the chiseller and has put the people of that province into what I think can only be called terrible circumstances. There is hunger around the world and there is hunger in Canada. Sure, maybe the bellies of Canadians are not flattened against their spines; maybe people are not as thin in Canada as they are in other places; but there is hunger, there is malnutrition, there are soup kitchens and there are food banks. What is provided by a food bank? It is just high-grade, reclaimed garbage. That is what it is—the food stores, towards the end of the week, will call in the people who operate the food bank and will say, "Here is what we have. Some of it may not be in the best of condition, but if you can use any part of what we are going to throw in the garbage, we are prepared to give it to you." God bless them—isn't that great?

The Conservative government in Saskatchewan has said: "This is a province that is open for business. This is where initiative is important. We are going to starve them into jobs even if there aren't any jobs available." Now, I'm not fooling. I see that Senator Marshall has put on the order paper a question dealing with incomes across Canada, particularly related to low income people. I will be interested, indeed, to learn the results of that inquiry.

Honourable senators, when we are looking at the whole economic system in this country, let us look at it from the point of view of helping those Canadians who have such low incomes. Let us keep our programs without stigma. Let us make sure that the wealthy pay their share—and, perhaps, even more than what some may think should be their share—into these programs so that all Canadians can receive the benefits with their heads held high. Let us try to make sure that no one feels ostracized because of being poor.

This was supposed to be an open government. The day of secrecy was to have passed. We were no longer going to hear about patronage "Because, you know, those Liberals made former members of the House of Commons judges and one or two of them ambassadors". Well, I had something to do with operating under the patronage system. I was in the cabinet for a few years. We did not go around checking those lawyers who wanted to become judges, to see how many Conservatives we could appoint. I am quite frank about that. But people who should know have said to me that in the period during which I had some responsibility the equality and effectiveness of the judicial system in Saskatchewan was improved.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Argue: I have no personal knowledge of whether or not that is so, but that statement was made to me by people who, I believe, knew what they were talking about. Okay, so there have been one or two patronage appointments as ambassador, and those appointed have now been dumped. Now, of course, there will no longer be any patronage appointments. At least, that is what the government has said. Appointments will be made solely according to merit—except in ministers' offices. A sum of $80,000 per year has been mentioned for an executive assistant, or a new commissar, or whatever he or she is supposed to be. I brought a young man to Ottawa as my secretary many years ago. He was a capable young man, who went on to become my executive assistant and was paid, I guess, less than half the figure of $80,000. We did not find it necessary to pay $80,000 per year for that position. Perhaps Liberals come cheaper than Conservatives. Perhaps Conservatives earn more money in private life than do Liberals and therefore $80,000 is necessary.

I hear that ministers do not appoint their own executive assistants, the commissars. That is done by the Prime Minister's Office. We thought that the power of the P.M.O. might be decreased with the new government, but, oh no, the power has been strengthened. Ministers now have commissars in their offices who have been chosen by the Prime Minister. Then there is the policy of no press releases. One has to "check with Eric", as the Minister of Justice has admitted.

The Department of External Affairs received special treatment. There will be no press releases. No person working in the Department of External Affairs must associate with the press. I suppose that if a minister were attending a function one evening and a member of the press was on the dance floor, he would be unable to say hello; they could not associate together, and presumably the minister would have to leave right away. And this was going to be an open government! We now see the largest concentration of power in the hands of the Prime Minister that this country has ever seen, and I suggest that is not a good omen. Patronage will continue to exist. The government says "We shall remove all of the difficulties with the premiers". Well, they are almost doing that. But, you know, they have lots of plums. The premiers are probably wondering "Will I have a shot at the Governor General's position when the next appointment comes along? Should I retire early so that the political burden is off my back and I can come in from outside and be less partisan?" And they wonder which one will eventually qualify. Some of the cabinet ministers who are lawyers may want to become judges. What a masterful method of seeing that they all get along. It is not quite a one-party state. We do not want that. But the nearest thing we have to a one-party state came through the democratic process, and the Canadian public will soon find out what they have elected and will be exceedingly disappointed.

I hope that the current drive against those people in responsible positions having the opportunity to fully exercise their responsibilities will soon be changed. There have been reports in the press on this matter. I am not certain whether they are accurate, but they have not been denied. Apparently an edict has gone to ministers to the effect that they must check their press releases through the Prime Minister's Office—I guess through a man named Bill Fox. In my opinion, that is shameful, disgraceful and undemocratic, and will be a sure way of undermining the credibility of this government. I hope that when the net is cast more widely, members of the other place, irrespective of the party they represent, and members of the Senate, will resist the obvious drive by the Prime Minister and certain bureaucrats to cut services in connection with the operation of both houses of Parliament.

An Hon. Senator: Why?

Senator Argue: I believe that the facilities that are required by members of the other place to function well should be preserved, and when a government is in office with such an overwhelming majority extra steps should be taken to ensure that members of the opposition in both houses are able to discharge adequately their responsibilities. No one on this side of the house is looking for a car and a chauffeur, but we would simply like to have some of the tools that will help us in the work we have to do.

Senator Frith: Only NDP leaders get those.

Senator Argue: I have made quite a few positive statements on the subject of co-ops, of the Canadian Wheat Board, and of our social security system. Some of my statements were positive and others were critical. The present government may even regard some of my statements as having been negative. In my view, the major challenge for Canada is to get the unemployed back to work. We need an expanding economy. Governments should present programs that will ensure that happening, instead of adopting, as the present government is doing, short-sighted policies to cut down on some necessary programs, and by so doing increase unemployment in this country.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I am pleased to have the opportunity to contribute to the debate on the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I undertake to make my speech shorter than those of several of the previous speakers. Also, I shall keep away from some of those heady economic topics that have already been dealt with and will be further dealt with by subsequent speakers. My only comment on the economic statement is to echo the words of that great Canadian, Mr. Garneau, who thought that Mr. Wilson's statement was courageous. I applaud him for that. I also undertake not to be as witty or as partisan as my colleague, the Acting Leader of the Government; nor will I be as averse as the previous speaker to asking questions and examining programs, although I would say to the honourable senator, on behalf of all Manitobans, that we are delighted that he, as a Liberal, did not seek to comment on Manitoba's employment problem, the problems of out-migration and in-migration.

Senator Frith: Don't push it any further.

Senator Nurgitz: May I first congratulate His Honour the Speaker on his appointment to the Chair. You, sir, have had a long and distinguished business career which, I am sure, will prove to have been a valuable experience and will, I am sure, serve all members of this chamber well.

I also want to mention our former Speaker, who served us so well in the short time he was in office. Senator Riel, who is a distinguished lawyer, brought to the speakership an interest in the traditions of the office of Speaker. He is a worthy member of that group of men and women who have occupied the Chair with distinction and, I am sure, we are indebted to him. I would like to congratulate my mentor and friend, Senator Roblin, the new Leader of the Government. Senator Roblin distinguished himself in this chamber as Deputy Leader of the Opposition. I have known him for some 30 years, since the days when he resurrected a political party in my home province and went on to serve with great distinction as premier. Frankly, I think that he brought my home province of Manitoba into the twentieth century. I do not think that my province has ever been served, before or since, as well by any premier as it has been by Senator Duff Roblin.

● (1530)

I congratulate the newly appointed Deputy Leader of the Government. I am sure all honourable senators who heard him today responding in his own inimitable fashion, in neither of the two official languages—

Hon. William J. Petten: I understood him.

Senator Nurgitz: Yes, all his answers were directed to Senator Petten. Senator Doody brings a certain wit and charm that has endeared him to all of us over the past five years and, as well, a certain sensitivity and intelligence which will be valuable to him and to all of us in discharging his functions as Deputy Leader. I should not pass over the question of appointments without commenting on the new government whip, my dear friend Senator Orville Phillips. I might say on behalf of all my colleagues on this side that we are somewhat alarmed at the seriousness with which he is taking that job. But we do wish him well and he is keeping us all in line. On the subject of whips, I want to pay tribute to Senator John M. Macdonald who has contributed so much to this chamber and to his native Nova Scotia over the years. The other day during what I thought was a brilliant piece of oratory by Senator Macquarrie, I was tempted to interrupt him but I thought I would wait for this moment to make the correction. During the course of his speech he spoke of that famous Cape Breton trio that we now have in this chamber, namely, Senators Muir, MacEachen and Macdonald, which is not a bad ballroom trio. But had he added that other very distinguished senator from Cape Breton, Senator Graham, he could have converted that ballroom trio to a ballroom quartet.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): What about your deskmate?

Senator Murray: Grenville-Carleton.

Senator Nurgitz: In any event, I wish Senator Macdonald many years of continued service and thank him again for the kindness and help he has extended to me.

[Senator Nurgitz.]

On the subject of Cape Breton Islanders, I should also like to take this opportunity to wish the new Leader of the Opposition well. While preparing these notes I had in mind that I would wish him a long term in office, but Senator Doody stole my thunder. I am sure, though, with his meagre number of supporters and the able assistance of one of the most skilled debaters in the house, Senator Frith, as his deputy, he will provide effective opposition in this house.

Honourable senators, I was pleased to note in the address of Her Excellency the Governor General, that mention is made of the need for Parliament to deal more effectively with several matters relating to the Criminal Code of Canada. The Speech from the Throne made reference to such matters as impaired driving, computer crime and sentencing, among others. There is probably not a community in this country that has not experienced the tragedy of a person killed in a dreadful automobile accident involving an impaired driver. I think there is a crying need for Parliament to deal with this problem. Computer crime is also becoming a problem in the business community. I suspect that as computer technology expands and becomes more sophisticated, there will be more such crime, unless we become more future-minded and identify categories of offences that will deal with the problem. I am reminded of the last session when the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee, chaired by Senator Neiman, dealt with a bill updating Canada's evidence laws and how disappointed we were when the Department of Justice, whose lawyers worked for a year or more putting the bill together, provided us with one that did not have one piece of information on new evidentiary law dealing with proving matters in this computer age. I see that Senator Frith is looking at me. Perhaps it had one or two items, but it did not deal adequately with this problem. The department agreed on this point among others, and the bill was withdrawn.

Sentencing was also mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. I suspect that there is a public demand for the upgrading of matters relating to sentencing. There is a growing concern that some sentences are inconsistent with others, and that the law does not provide for adequate sentencing. One example I can think of deals with a section of the Criminal Code which is familiar to all of us in this chamber. I am speaking of Section 110, which deals with fraud perpetrated on the government or Parliament. The maximum penalty for that offence is five years, whereas the maximum penalty for theft of an item of $200, which is not very much these days, is ten years. I think there is a demand out there that we reconsider the punishment for such offences in such a way as to meet community standards. I do not think you could get away with any attempt to justify why the former offence should incur a penalty that is one half that applicable to the latter.

I would like to deal with the subject of corrections, which was also mentioned in the Throne Speech. I think this problem concerns a small number of inmates in federal institutions. The total number of inmates is between 30,000 and 40,000. However, here I am dealing with a comparatively small number, which I consider to constitute a very serious social problem.

While they may be small in number, they create a problem which is large and troublesome. The court system provides for an inmate to seek parole after serving one-third of his term. I shall not go into the question of how you arrive at the one-third but, indeed, the term is even less than one-third. My view is that we should be considering applications for parole for certain inmates even sooner than on completion of one-third of the term. I think there are many prisoners for whom the process of investigation, trial and initial sentencing is all the penalty they need. I am of that school of thought that believes that a great many of the first offenders will not be back. The problem I want to deal with is one which was dealt with by the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee—the question of mandatory supervision. Under this heading we are considering an inmate who has been refused parole. We should understand that he has reached the stage where he has served two-thirds of his sentence.

In or about 1970 Parliament, in its wisdom, decided it was better to have an inmate out on the street with some conditions placed upon him so that he could better integrate himself into the community, as opposed to having him serve to the end of his term and then putting him out cold turkey. In the cold turkey situation he is free and unfettered and is more likely to get into trouble since he is not required to report to a parole officer.

Senator Frith: Plus there is the alleged value to the system of his earning his parole.

Senator Nurgitz: Yes. That is a point I did not make a note of. I am glad Senator Frith has raised it, because it brings to mind the time when we examined officers of the Solicitor General's Department at Laval, which has a reasonably tough group of inmates. Our examination showed that the number of days spent in the hole, that is solitary confinement, ran into the hundreds of the total number of days involving all prisoners. It ran into the hundreds over a given period of time, although I do not recall exactly what period of time that was. The number of deductions—that is with respect to people who were docked days for reasons of behaviour—amounted to about four days. The reason for that, given by the people who have to administer the system, was that there is no way you can run an institution such as Laval and be docking days. In the view of the tough inmate population that is definite a “no-no”. I take it if you are an administrator at such a prison, it is best to turn a blind eye to the situation rather than have to deal with the consequences of deducting earned remission days. The system we have does not lend itself to the deduction of earned remission days except on rare occasions. I suppose that is a failing of that part of the system.

Hon. Andrew Thompson: Is that because of the fear of violence?

Senator Nurgitz: Yes, fear on the part of the administration that there will be violence to staff members. Looking at the records of Laval we saw that there was a tremendous amount of disciplinary action taken. As I have said, my recollection is that there were hundreds of days spent in solitary confinement while only four and a half or seven and a half days were deducted from earned remission.

Senator Frith: That is hard to believe.

Senator Nurgitz: Yes, it is.

Senator Frith: I am not saying that I do not believe what you have said, but that it is really very surprising.

Senator Nurgitz: I apologize for not having more accurate statistics on this point. I might say, honourable senators, that I had no difficulty in understanding the explanation given, and I am sure no one here would have difficulty understanding it. I am referring to the difficulty of dealing with an inmate. Thus, we have the question of an inmate who is a problem in an institution and who is refused parole. He reaches the two-thirds stage of his sentence and is then put out on the street.

I would like to cite an example from late 1979 of an inmate released from Millhaven penitentiary who was charged two weeks after his release, and ultimately convicted, of first degree murder of a two year old girl whom he sexually molested and killed within steps of her home. The accused was a 20 year old Millhaven inmate who had a history which clearly indicated he had a diseased mind. Why was he on the street? The short answer is that the law says he must be on the street.

Dr. Nuffield of the Solicitor General's department, who is an expert in this field, when asked about this particular case said, and I quote, “Let's face it, everybody knew this guy was weird.” The Chairman of the National Parole Board, Mr. Outerbridge, had this to say about the case:

The bottom line is we can't do anything about it . . . We can't stop this person from returning to the street.

I do not cite these comments to advocate complete abolition of early release. As I have said earlier, I am in favour of even earlier release in the case of some individuals. Perhaps the reason for the law is a good one. I believe it was well intentioned; it was meant to integrate inmates into society with some conditions placed upon them.

Honourable senators, reasonable people out there are asking questions about the corrections system. The notion of a sentence being a sentence and being required to be served within an institution is a notion that has been raised. However, a more serious question is that raised by some people as to whether or not it is time we took steps to stop the flow of these dangerous prisoners to the street, which has consistently caused terrifying results and tragedy after tragedy.

Everyone who refers to these terrible incidents always comes back to the Clifford Olson case. I believe he committed six of his murders while out on various mandatory supervision release periods.

A Solicitor General's report which followed the careers of people such as Clifford Olson was completed in 1981. It covered the five-year period from 1975 to 1979 inclusive. In that period of time some 52 persons were killed—more than one a week—by prisoners released under mandatory supervision. During this same period of time there were 11 convictions for attempted murder by other persons released under mandatory supervision, not to mention 62 rapes or sexual assaults. The study also indicated there had been a significant number of crimes of violence by those released under mandatory supervision. Between 1975 and 1979, inmates released under mandatory supervision committed: 31 murders; 21 manslaughters; 11 attempted murders; 25 rapes; 23 other sexual assaults; 153 other assaults; 15 kidnappings; and 394 robberies.

Senator Frith: Out of a total of how many released?

Senator Nurgitz: I will deal with it on a percentage basis since I do not have the total number.

The report goes on to indicate that in that five-year period, in reviewing all inmates released, both on parole and under mandatory supervision, 391 crimes of violence were committed—324 of them, or 83 per cent, by persons released under the mandatory supervision program.

On the one hand, we hear public outcry for abolition of that system, while on the other one must ask oneself if that is too harsh? I read with interest that a newly elected member of Parliament from Toronto, the Liberal Party critic of the Solicitor General's Department, Mr. Nunziata, indicated that in his view the mandatory supervision program is an experiment which has failed and, not inconsistent with a view expressed by the new Solicitor General, all cases of release should be reviewed by the National Parole Board. I am not so sure that just a simple change in legislation should just wipe it all away. I lean toward some type of judicial review. In this way the reasonableness of allowing a prisoner out can be looked at.

Senator Thompson: You have raised some very interesting points. If the mandatory supervision period were to be removed it would just be a matter of time before the prisoner is released anyway. You have referred to the diseased mind of one prisoner. Certainly remedial treatment of these people should be considered.

Senator Nurgitz: I shall comment on that. That is an argument that one hears frequently. When I was on the other side, I was constantly visited by our colleague, Senator Hastings, who made that very point. He felt that all that was being achieved was a delay in the process. My reply to that is: Surely if we are delaying it, aren't we saving some lives? The logic of that escapes me.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: If the provision were not there in the first place, you would not need to delay it.

Senator Nurgitz: Having said that, I must tell you that this is not meant to be an expression of my best redneck form, saying that that is the only method. I think we do have to deal with the cause and look at it as we go along.

Senator Frith: Could we hear a little more from Senator Phillips on this point?

[Senator Nurgitz.]

Senator Nurgitz: As I said in my earlier comments, I was pleased that the Throne Speech dealt with this aspect of a matter that, in fact, our own Senate committee has spent some time on. Although I do not have the temerity to do it, I would like to issue something of a warning to all parliamentarians. I think that those of us who hold some moderate views on this issue have reason to be concerned. If the government does not act quickly and if we do not respond quickly in allowing for the passage of this kind of measure, those who are advocating more drastic or draconian measures will have their day. I have as much concern about that aspect of the matter as I have about the other.

That is not to say that we do not need to find more innovative ways to deal with offenders, nor does it mean that we can ignore our obligation to get to the root of this dreadful social problem. I know the argument is made that we have had prisons for hundreds of years, and all that we have ever proved is that we need bigger and larger prisons. Nevertheless, there is a need to examine the whole situation.

Honourable senators, I would point out that there is an unhappy and restless society out there, not feeling secure or safe. In fact, it is feeling, I think, somewhat at risk. People are demanding of their legislators that they be protected from what many consider to be the obvious. For example, in this Millhaven case that I have mentioned, it was virtually known what type of offence this person would commit. Therefore, honourable senators, I welcome, as I am sure you do, this kind of initiative on the part of the government as it was outlined in the Throne Speech. Thank you for your patience.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Would the honourable senator consider a question?

Senator Nurgitz: Sure.

Senator Bosa: What was the rationale that led to establishing the system of mandatory supervision in the first place?

Senator Nurgitz: Perhaps I was not successful in explaining that, Senator Bosa. The rationale was very simple: If you kept a man in until the end of his sentence, you let him out unfettered, with no conditions or anything else. It was considered that it was better to take a man at two-thirds of his sentence and say to him: "These are the conditions; you do not drink and you do not carry firearms and you do not do any of these things that are set out. You do not go to establishments that dispense alcoholic beverages." Then in that way, for the last third of his sentence, he would be on the street with this kind of control. However, one should understand that, at best, that control works by having the inmate report to a parole officer who says: "Did you have a drink?" I suspect I know the answer, as I suspect you do, because he knows that if he violates the terms of his mandatory supervision, he can be—and very often such people are—put back in to serve the remainder of the term.

Senator Frith: There was that additional rationale that we touched on in committee. It was said there was some value to the administration of the prison for an inmate to know that he received a certain amount of automatic benefits. I am sure

Senator Nurgitz will remember that the committee heard about that, and you have already commented on how effective you thought that was, particularly in the Laval case. For the record, it should be added that when we heard the rationale for this doctrine, that was given one of the elements; that they would receive automatic benefits not dependant on the administration's giving those benefits to them.

On motion of Senator Petten, for Senator Gigantès, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Paul C. Lafond, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, November 13, 1984, moved:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to hear evidence on and to consider matters relating to national defence;

That 12 Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the Special Committee;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada, and to such places abroad where members of the Canadian Armed Forces may be stationed;

That the Committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate;

That the Committee be empowered to retain the services of professional and clerical staff as deemed advisable by the Committee; and

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject before the Committee during the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the Committee.

He said: Honourable senators, this motion does not seem to require lengthy explanations. I still believe that a permanent body within the parliamentary structure of Canada should be concerned exclusively with matters of defence. However, this is not the time to press that point.

Your subcommittee and later the Special Committee on National Defence have performed their mandates most creditably during the last five years. However, there are still many areas of our territorial defence requirements and capacity to be explored and drawn to the attention of Parliament and the people of Canada. This is one of the areas where the committee has achieved some success and which should continue to be pursued.

As most senators know, when Parliament was dissolved we had reached the stage of a draft report, which has been more or less in the oven ever since. It requires the approval of the committee prior to tabling in the Senate. In view of that, if the motion is approved, I would like to suggest to the Committee of Selection that those members of the Senate who did the work on that phase of the report which is now almost ready, should be re-appointed to the committee to complete the last phase and give final approval to the report for tabling. Once that report has been tabled, then through the normal process provided for by the rules, the leadership on both sides or the whips can re-arrange the membership of the committee according to their wishes.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to ask the mover of the motion for clarification on one point. Do I understand that the motion to reconstitute this special committee is not merely for the purpose of completing the report to which the mover referred, but is also for the purpose of conducting further studies by this committee?

Senator Lafond: The motion, as drafted, is substantially the same motion that I moved during the last session of the last Parliament and provides for studies on matters relating to national defence to be continued.

Senator Frith: So I can assume that the powers that are being sought, for example, the power to adjourn from place to place within Canada, and to such places abroad where members of the Armed Forces are stationed, are powers that the mover wants the committee to exercise for further studies, and not just for the purposes of completing a report that, as he has stated, has been in the oven for some time. We are not voting on a motion simply to complete a report, but to continue the work of the special committee after that report is prepared..

Senator Lafond: Precisely, and I do not think the committee abused the power to travel in the past. It is just power to be held in reserve should we at some point during our inquiry be required to visit our major base in Lahr, as we had occasion to do once when we visited NORAD Headquarters in Cheyenne, Colorado. It is just a matter of keeping the powers in reserve should they be required. The Deputy Leader of the Opposition should note that such travel abroad, as requested, is limited to where Canadian forces personnel are stationed.

Senator Frith: Yes. I did not mean to focus on that for the purposes of saying that that is a power the committee ought not to have, but simply to illustrate the fact that obviously the request is there so that the committee can carry on its studies after it has issued the report referred to.

With that clarification, I move the adjournment of the debate, and, by way of explanation, I move the adjournment so that I can have an opportunity to consult with my colleagues on the subject of this motion.

It is not the fault of the mover of the motion that I request an adjournment because he gave us adequate notice; I simply have not had an opportunity to consult with my colleagues on the matter.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 20, 1984, at 2 p.m.

POVERTY IN CANADA

POVERTY LINE UPDATE, 1983

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I ask leave to table the twelfth Poverty Line Update, which includes estimates for 1984. I ask that it be printed in the Debates of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

7	$28,490	$30,510	$19,731 to $26,863

*The Statistics Canada cut-offs (base year 1978) vary with degree of urbanization.

The Senate Committee poverty lines are based on a formula which is updated annually on the basis of a measure of disposable personal income in Canada and changes in the distribution of families of various sizes.

THE SENATE POVERTY LEVEL is approximately 50% of average Canadian family income adjusted to family size, making provision for inflation and gross national product. For families of sizes 2, 3, and 4, the Poverty Lines are almost exactly half of the average income for families of those sizes.

STATISTICS CANADA: Poverty Level Lines are based on changing consumption patterns which now indicate that families who spend 62% or more of their income on food, clothing and shelter (as opposed to the 70% criterion used at an earlier date) are in straitened circumstances. These limits are differentiated by size of area of residence.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

PRIVACY

On the tabling of documents:

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, if my honourable friend will yield for just a moment, I am sure honourable senators have noticed that a great many of the reports the Leader of the Government is referring to are reports required by the Access to Information Act or the Privacy Act. We can anticipate many of these, because I believe virtually every organism of government is required to report under either one or, as Senator Roblin has shown, in some cases, both of these acts. The Leader of the Government has also referred to some annual reports, including financial statements, which, of course, are not in the same category.

I can assure him that certainly we on this side will be quite satisfied if he just says that he is filing reports "of the following organizations pursuant to either the Access to Information Act or the Privacy Act." He can simply list the names of the organizations because, in all cases, they would be effective as of March 31, 1984, under either or both of those acts.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend is endeavouring to be helpful, and I appreciate that, but I think I should continue to report these various tablings.

Senator Frith: I agree, but differently organized.

Senator Roblin: I should do so in order that our action in this chamber be appropriate. I have asked for permission to refrain from quoting the statutory authority. That has the advantage of reducing my task by about 50 per cent.

I have only three or four more pages and, if my honourable friend agrees, I would like to complete them because they do not all relate to the Access to Information Act or the Privacy Act, and I have not sorted out the ones that do.

● (1410)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators will understand that I am not suggesting that we dispense. I suggest, simply, that all those to do with access-to-information and privacy legislation be put into one group.

Senator Roblin: This happens only once a year, so I ask that honourable senators have the patience to listen to them all.

[Later]:

Senator Roblin: That completes the tabling of these documents, honourable senators. I think, however, that the honourable Deputy Leader of the Opposition has put forward a good idea. It might be appropriate, in the future, to group these items together so that they can be covered by one set of explanations rather than umpteen dozen. I would therefore ask those responsible to take into account my friend's suggestion. If it is in accordance with legal form and procedure, I suggest that it be looked into.

THE GREY CUP

CONGRATULATIONS TO WINNIPEG BLUE BOMBERS ON WINNING CANADIAN PROFESSIONAL FOOTBALL CHAMPIONSHIP

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I wonder whether the Leader of the Government would confirm or deny the report that last weekend a football game was played in which the Winnipeg Blue Bombers participated.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Oh, my honourable friend knows how to stroke a guy. He has gone right to my heart. He has asked me to say whether or not the Blue Bombers won the Grey Cup, and I am happy to confirm that that is so. Are there any other Manitobans present who would like to corroborate the evidence I bring before this house?

Honourable senators, there was, indeed, a game on Sunday. It was a marvellous game. It did not even take place in Winnipeg, but in Edmonton, which makes the victory all the sweeter, I think. The victory was undisputed, much like the victory of Brian Mulroney in the general election. We had a decisive score. I am happy to join with all of my colleagues in saying that two good teams fought a very good game. And I can say the same thing about the general election: two good teams fought a very good game. In my opinion, the best team won and I am perfectly satisfied with that result.

THE ESTIMATES 1984-85

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B) REFERRED TO NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine the expenditures set out in the Supplementary Estimates (B) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1985; and

That the Committee be authorized to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be required for the said examination.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Senator Roblin.]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE TO REVIEW SENATE COMMITTEE REPORT ENTITLED "THEY SERVED—WE CARE"

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, November 22, 1984, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to review and update the recommendations contained in the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, entitled: "They Served—We Care", tabled in the Senate on 20th October, 1981, and to enquire into any matter related thereto; and

That the papers and evidence taken on the subject and the work accomplished during the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the Committee.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

STATEMENT BY LEADER OF GOVERNMENT IN THE SENATE—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government, but, first, I must say that I believe I owe him an apology. It will be recalled that last week I asked him for information as to what books he was referring to, and that were in his possession, which had caused the picture to change. I thought my question was a reasonable one, but the Leader of the Government refused to answer it. I have since done some research on the question, and on the subject of questions addressed to the government, and was encouraged.

During the campaign the Prime Minister asked for our trust. Referring to secrecy in government, he said:

Not since the last war have Canadians had a government so obsessed with secrecy as they have today.

Further, he said:

Secrecy and stonewalling—

He said this in a speech at Kingston.

—have become a habit with the Government of Canada and we will never break the habit until we change the government.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Frith: I trusted the Prime Minister. He then said:

The differences between the present administration—The then Liberal administration.

—and a new Conservative Government is simply this: The present government believes you have only limited rights to know: Conservatives believe you have every right to know.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Frith: He continued:

Why should Canadian taxpayers have to tolerate a situation where the Auditor General of Canada—the people's instrument through Parliament to watch over the taxpayers' money—where the Auditor General is now in a federal court pressing the Government of Canada to release information on a major crown corporation.

Honourable senators, that was the reference to trust with which I opened my question to the Leader of the Government, and the reason why I was disappointed and somewhat disillusioned when he refused to answer it.

On the matter of why the Auditor General should be refused information, over the weekend I read some papers, among which was the headline: "Tories deny auditor general access to cabinet papers." The article said:

The government has no intention of letting Auditor General, Kenneth Dye have access to cabinet documents he says he needs to do his job, Justice Minister John Crosbie said Monday.

The decision marks another shift in the Conservative government's attitude toward access to government documents.

I then read another headline.

An Hon. Senator: It gets worse.

Senator Frith: Yes. Honourable senators can see how my whole attitude toward Senator Roblin was changing over the weekend. This headline reads: "Nielsen to ask for oaths of secrecy." Here is another one: "Ottawa invokes secrecy rules on Cabinet ministers' flights."

● (1420)

An Hon. Senator: Question!

Senator Frith: I am still in the middle of my apology. This article is headed: "Role of deputy prime minister too secret to make assessment." They cannot even make an assessment as to how secret the deputy prime minister is because even his role is too secret. This article is headed: "Gag order tougher than first thought."

Hon. Lowell Murray: You are only looking at the pictures and reading the headlines.

Senator Frith: Do not tempt me or I shall read the whole thing, and I can guarantee that you will not like it. But ask me again and I shall be glad to. Here are some statements the Honourable Joe Clark made out west:

We're running the most open government in the history of the country with a broad series of public hearings on economic policy, opening up the consultation process with the provinces, opening up the discussion of foreign policy.

In the same speech Mr. Clark indicates that he is worried about an elite which opposes Conservative government measures. Apparently, it consists of columnists Richard Gwyn, Douglas Fisher, Geoffrey Stevens and others.

Here is an article which uses an expression I used when I was unjustly disillusioned by Senator Roblin and said that he was "stone walling." This article is headed: "The great stone wall." Another is headed "It's secrecy time: paranoia stalks Parliament Hill."

Honourable senators, I apologize because I did not understand how widespread this gag order is. It goes right up to the Deputy Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and is spread throughout the entire organization. No one is allowed to speak to the press or to give out any information. Mr. Wilson refused to give out information on the government's policy on jobs. Over the weekend, yesterday and today, I have come to realize that the situation is widespread and that this Conservative government is the most secret, having defeated the record it said the previous administration had set. How unjust I was in expecting that the mere Leader of the Government in the Senate would escape this gag order.

My question is—

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Is the Senate ready for the question?

Senator Frith: In the opinion of the government leader, is there any hope that these gags—which make the cabinet and government look somewhat like gagged bank employees struggling to the phone—will be removed; and, if so, can we expect that they will be removed from the Leader of the Government in the Senate at the same time as they are removed from the others?

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I accept my honourable friend's apology.

Senator Frith: Considering how sincere it is.

Senator Roblin: I expect that it will not be the first apology I will receive from him. Whenever he talks to us about secrecy and a good many other topics of like character, he knows that he must bear in the back of his mind the record of his own administration.

Senator Frith: So that is your way out. It is a similar reply to, "When we got our hands on the books."

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Perhaps he wants to save you, Duff.

Hon. Jack Marshall: We will be better than you at everything.

Senator Roblin: I allowed my honourable friend—perhaps I had better change that expression. I did not "allow" him to make a speech; I could not stop him. There are 70 of his kind opposite, and if he wants to make a speech he is going to do it.

Senator Frith: Like I said, we never put a clock on you.

Senator Roblin: That is right, and I am not going to put a clock on you. However, I can restrict myself to answers that are appropriate to parliamentary traditions. One such tradition is that you do not ask ministers of the Crown to express opinions. You ask them questions which involve facts. So far as opinions are concerned, I will not give any in response to the honourable senator's question. If he has a question which concerns facts, I shall be glad to entertain it.

So far, I have listened with pleasure—perhaps I should be more accurate—

Senator Frith: More frank.

Senator Roblin: —with interest to his perusal of the opinions of columnists. I think these gentlemen perform a worthy function and I do not denigrate them in any way, though I may not agree with their opinions. However, I do not think that my friend would like to put himself in the position of endorsing the opinions of every columnist he reads. He certainly did not do that in the past.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, it is true that I asked for the leader's opinion, and if he does not wish to give his opinion he does not have to. May I ask if he will furnish us with the following fact, should that fact ever become true: When it becomes a fact that the government drops its stonewalling and its secrecy and when the fact is that the gags are removed, will he let us know? This information will help us during Question Period to know whether we will get any answers to our questions.

Senator Roblin: If the facts were as alleged by my honourable friend, I would have something to answer. However, the "facts," as he alleges, are not "facts".

Senator Nurgitz: Don't call us; we'll call you.

Senator Frith: Yes, that is what I think will happen. We will have to continue asking and get the facts on record that way.

IMMIGRATION

PROPOSED REDUCTION IN QUOTAS

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Over the past 30 years several studies have been conducted by various government departments with respect to the impact immigration into Canada has on both the labour force and the Canadian economy as a whole. Those studies show that immigration into Canada is beneficial since immigrants create jobs and bring capital with them.

I should like to know what the rationale is behind the present government's announcement to reduce substantially the previous government's three-year projections on immigration from 110,000 a year to 85,000, to 90,000.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I agree with my honourable friend that immigrants are a great source of strength to this country. Both he and I are immigrants and, thus, living testimony in our own persons that we endeavour to add something to our nation. As immigrants in our point of origin we expect to see others follow in our footsteps.

In answering my honourable friend's question, I must tell him that in 1982 the federal government imposed a freeze on some applications for independent immigrations to take into account the state of the economy and the need for jobs. That policy has been more or less followed since.

In 1983 there were 89,000 immigrants allowed into Canada. The new quota provides for something between 85,000 and 87,000. While there is a reduction with respect to the numbers it is not a significant reduction from the number of immigrants admitted into Canada in 1983.

The government is anxious to do what it can for immigrants, particularly for those who are refugees, as questions in this house on previous occasions have underlined. As soon as economic conditions make it possible we will be glad to see what can be done about changing the present quotas.

I should point out to the honourable senator that the projections about which he speaks are fixed for a limited period of time. A report being compiled now, initiated some time ago, with respect to the whole question of immigration into Canada, will provide us with some guidelines as to where we go in the future. The quota which has been set is a temporary one and will be revised and reviewed when the guidelines are available for study and examination.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, the honourable gentleman stated at the beginning of his answer that both he and I are immigrants into this country. I would just like to observe that I am more readily taken for an immigrant than my honourable friend is.

Does the Leader of the Government have any information with respect to consultations having taken place with the Province of Ontario in connection with the reduction in immigration figures?

Senator Roblin: I have no information on that point.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

EXPORTATION OF GRAIN TO PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. We in this chamber are well aware of the importance to the entire Canadian economy of the export of grain to the People's Republic of China. Therefore, I was somewhat dismayed to read recently that China is not taking the full quota of grain from the United States it has contracted for. There was a long-term commitment of six million tonnes. However, the indication is that the commitment is now for 4.3 million, of which 2.9 million will be delivered in 1984.

• (1430)

My question is: Will the Canadian situation be somewhat similar? I hope that the Leader of the Government understands that I am not expecting an immediate answer.

It is interesting to read in this article that China has so improved its productivity in agriculture that they have had a surplus of some crops, but not necessarily wheat. I understand that soya beans and some of the other crops are involved, and it may be that they still need wheat. It is of concern to me and certainly to the farmers of western Canada that we be able to maintain our Chinese market, which has really been very important and very much appreciated by Canadian farmers.

I would therefore ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to inquire of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, the Honourable Charles Mayer, and to report back to us on this situation, as to whether China is fulfilling its commitment to Canada, and what the future situation appears to be.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The honourable senator has raised a question which is also very close to my heart, as I am sure he understands. While I do not have the facts before me, let me say that my impression is that Canada has not been subjected to the same degree of cutback in their exports of wheat to China as has the United States.

However, the fundamental point that my honourable friend raises is correct. There has been a very large increase in the production of the agricultural sector in China, including the production of wheat, ever since the present government of China decided to introduce a modified form of capitalism, making it available to the farmers of China in order that they could earn a little money by farming their farms. Indeed, it has had a startling and dramatic effect on production and, undoubtedly, it has reduced the demand for food grains by China. I fully anticipate that that is a problem that we will have to consider in the future.

I shall undertake to obtain what information I can from my honourable friend, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, in order that, as far as possible, we may clarify the situation.

THE ENVIRONMENT

GOVERNMENT POLICY RE EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. As a descendant of the original citizens of this country, I have some concerns with respect to the discussion and the debate that is presently going on relating to the environment. Having been a Minister of the Environment and having been in charge of the Canadian Wildlife Service and such organizations, I am rather disturbed about the apparent attitude of this government, in that they intend to sacrifice the environment for jobs. In other words, it appears that there will be job creation at any cost to the environment. I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if it is the policy of this government to sacrifice a healthy environment to create jobs.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think I may safely say to my honourable friend that that is not the policy of this government. I think I may also safely say to him that the policy of the government will be to try to achieve an equitable balance—because a balance there must be between the natural environment and the job-creation situation in this country. After all, our country has reached its present economic situation, however you may think of it, by dealing with the natural resources of the country. It may well be true that we have not always done so in a manner sufficiently sensitive to the needs of the environment. I understand the point that my honourable friend is making, and our effort will be to try to see that we come to a just balance between two legitimate and competing claims on our natural resources.

Senator Marchand: I am pleased to receive the reply of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and hope that he passes on to his cabinet colleagues the suggestion that they should carefully review the cuts they are making, especially those cuts relating to the Canadian Wildlife Service. Some of the work that has been done by those outstanding scientists has been among the finest done anywhere in the world. I say that specifically with respect to toxicity levels in the Great Lakes. That work has led to the acquiring of a fantastic amount of knowledge about our environment and the work required for recovery of the Great Lakes. It would be a great loss if the government were to blindly cut expenditures relating to that type of work. That would result in a great loss to our future knowledge of the environment, and a great loss to our knowledge of health matters in this country.

Senator Roblin: I can tell my honourable friend that this subject was raised in the other place, and if he has not already read Hansard on that, he might find it interesting to do so.

I do not think it can be said that in respect of the environmental situation with regard to the Great Lakes there have been blind cuts made. There have been cuts, but relatively minor ones and, to the best of my knowledge, they do not in any way disturb the main thrust of ensuring the environmental safety of those waters.

EMPLOYMENT

JOB CREATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: My question is addressed to the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate and is a factual one.

The Right Honourable the Prime Minister said that the Leader of the Opposition was being critical of the Prime Minister in the house for saying that the swearing-in of the new government would produce tens of thousands of new jobs. The Right Honourable the Prime Minister said:

That of course was a literal interpretation of what I said so I suppose I could respond literally this morning.

The unemployment figures are down by half a point; 32,000 new jobs have been created since our swearing-in;

I looked at this matter and found that the Right Honourable the Prime Minister was referring to the difference in the numbers of Canadians employed in September and those employed in October. In September there were 11,163,000 Canadians employed. In October, only 11,153,000 Canadians were employed.

Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell me which is which?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think the Right Honourable the Prime Minister has dealt with that general question, not only in the other place but also in public interviews reported in the newspapers. His replies are in the public domain; I feel that there is nothing I can add to them.

Senator Gigantès: I have a supplementary question. The Leader of the Government does not seem to be aware of the fact that the Prime Minister was probably referring to seasonally-adjusted figures, which are figures worked out to relate the employment rate to the different seasons, and if one does work out the difference, indeed there was a theoretical increase of 32,000 jobs as between September and October.

My question is: Why has the magic of a Conservative government produced so paltry an increase when the seasonally-adjusted increase for June, when Mr. Trudeau was the Prime Minister, was 49,000, and for July, when Mr. Turner was Prime Minister, 86,000. Is the magic not working?

Senator Roblin: I think my honourable friend is entitled to draw any conclusion he likes from the figures he has given me. I do not intend to comment on them.

Senator Gigantès: Maybe the Leader of the Government in the Senate will comment on something else that concerns him personally—

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): It is doubtful he will have anything to say on that.

• (1440)

Senator Gigantès: We'll see.

The Right Honourable the Prime Minister said, as reported in the Citizen on November 15:

One of the problems with the previous administration is that for 20 years good people in other political parties, be it the NDP or the Conservatives or others, were totally excluded from the opportunity to serve in government and receive appointments—

All of us in this chamber know that the Leader of the Government must be included among the good people. Since he is sitting as the Leader of the Government he must be included among the Conservatives. Does the Leader of the Government know whether the Prime Minister now considers him as a Liberal, as no good, or should we adjust the Prime Minister's statements seasonally?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, knowing my honourable friend as I do, I know he is going to adjust them any way he likes, so I am going to let him indulge in that practice for as long as he likes, but I am rather flattered that he should think that my appointment by a Liberal administration should be sufficient to purge the former Liberal government of all its errors, sins of commission and of the appointment of his own followers to a multitudinous variety of posts that I cannot even begin to name. If the simple fact of my appointment redeems the Liberal party when in government from that accusation, then I must say that I am not only surprised but flattered.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Senator Roblin.]

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

MARKETING OF POTATOES

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

I read in the press that the Government has decided to get rid of the Commission of Enquiry on the Marketing of Potatoes for the provinces of Eastern Canada, including Ontario.

I consulted the Government's official documents, especially those tabled in the House of Commons by the Minister of Finance on the occasion of his economic message the week before, and I have been unable to find a single reference. I even made enquiries on the subject, and no one has been able to confirm or deny that the Government has actually done away with this commission which was set up last spring and was to be presided over by one of the judges.

The Leader of the Government in the Senate is probably aware that the potato growing industry, especially in Eastern Canada, is subject to some rather serious upheavals every two or three years. I should be grateful if the honourable senator could provide official information to the effect that the Commission has indeed been abolished and also enquire as to the reasons why the Commission was abolished. Furthermore, could he perhaps inform me whether another agency will be responsible for examining what is wrong with this industry, which has been suffering serious losses every two or three years, either due to a world glut or to poor harvests in Canada or to the companies that have a monopoly in the processing sector.

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I had cherished some hopes that those recruits to this house who had been subjected to the rules of Question Period of the other place might teach us a thing or two about the traditions of Parliament that have developed over these 300 years or so as to what is acceptable during Question Period. I am rather saddened to see that my honourable friend on his first question that I have the honour to accept has fallen right into the worst of our habits in the Senate. I say our habits because I have not forgotten the past altogether.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): You made them up.

Senator Roblin: Not altogether. The situation then was such that we had four cabinet ministers in the Senate, but now we have one poor fellow.

The short answer to his question is that I am not aware of the answer because it has to do with the Department of Agriculture. I shall ask that department what reply they would like to make to my honourable friend.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In light of the declaration made in the Throne Speech of the intention to conduct a full review of Canada's foreign policy, has the government frozen all negotiations on bilateral matters with the United States?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, to the best of my knowledge those negotiations are proceeding, although I should like to have the opportunity of consulting with the minister in order to give an answer that is precise and accurate.

Senator Grafstein: I have a supplementary question. If those bilateral negotiations are not frozen, could the leader then, following his discussions with the minister in the other place, outline to the Senate those bilateral matters that are under active negotiation with the American officials and the state of each of those negotiations at the present time?

Senator Roblin: I cannot give an undertaking to answer that question because it involves matter of policy—

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Oh, oh, here we go.

Senator Roblin: Furthermore, it is not susceptible to the sort of answers that could be given during Question Period, because I would have to make a speech in order to answer those questions. I do not intend to do that.

Senator Frith: Why not?

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend wants to place a written question on the order paper, then that can be considered.

Senator Grafstein: If I may, I should like to ask a further supplementary question. Is it the government's intention to continue the bilateral sector-by-sector negotiations that were undertaken by the previous government?

Senator Roblin: The same answer applies.

Senator Frith: Which is no answer.

Senator Roblin: It is a proper answer. It is a parliamentary answer.

Senator Frith: We now know that no answer is what you consider to be a proper answer.

Senator Roblin: That is your opinion.

RULE 20—ORAL QUESTIONS—SUGGESTED AMENDMENT

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, in the absence of the Leader of the Government in the Senate on November 15, 1984, I put a question to the acting leader concerning parliamentary secretaries, amending the Rules of the Senate in order to enable knowledgeable persons from government supporters to answer questions on subjects with which the Leader of the Government may not be familiar. Changing Rule 20 does not require a change of the Statutes of Canada nor does it require the consent of the Prime Minister. This measure falls entirely within the prerogative of the Leader of the Government in the Senate and members of the Senate. By adding a further subsection, subsection (d), to Rule 20(l), the leader could designate certain persons from amongst government supporters who could give replies to quite a number of the questions that are put to the leader daily. This is not inconsistent with what the Senate has been doing for the past several years.

In the Thirty-first and Thirty-second Parliaments, because of some electoral anomalies, the Senate filled a very important need. Senators were appointed ministers of the Crown to represent in the cabinet areas that did not have government representation in the House of Commons. This difficulty was experienced in 1979 by the government to which the honourable gentleman belongs and in 1980 by the political party to which I belong. Due to the fact that the election produced such a staggering majority of government supporters in the other place, there is now a need that the Senate could fill by providing government supporters who can respond to questions put by opposition members in this chamber.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend has given me another version of the idea that he was good enough to present last Thursday, and I read the Debates of the Senate of that date and took note of his version on that occasion. I think he misunderstands the nature of the situation. If you expect replies from the government, only persons authorized by the government can make those replies. Under our present Constitution that is limited to ministers of the Crown or, in some cases, to parliamentary secretaries, but it cannot apply to any private member of the Senate. While I appreciate that his ideas are intended to be helpful, I am sorry that I cannot accept that proposition.

Senator Bosa: I have a supplementary question. It would not necessarily mean that an answer given by a government supporter in the Senate would be binding on the government, but, at least, it would provide on-the-spot information and we would not have to wait too long for the detailed answers. I do not see why the Leader of the Government in the Senate would not at least consider this matter a little further and perhaps experiment with it, because this is a constructive and innovative suggestion which, while there is no precedent, I believe ought to be further explored.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Then the Leader of the Government would be the only one refusing to give information.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend is always helpful. I thank him for his contribution. He may speak up any time he wishes.

I have to tell my honourable friend that I am afraid I still cannot accept his proposition because, on that basis, any private member could start answering any series of questions on anything. Private members are simply not privy to the kind of information that is needed in order to answer questions. Questions can only be addressed to ministers in respect of their own portfolios.

That does not apply only to the Senate; it applies to Parliament. Therefore, there is no point trying to make a distinction between the Senate and the House of Commons in this respect. It is a nice idea, but I am afraid it won't work.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

GARRISON DAM PROJECT

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some information in which Senator Guay may be interested regarding the Garrison. I should like to bring him up to date on the latest developments.

I am sure my honourable friend knows that there is a Canada-United States joint consultative group on the Canadian side, which is composed of representatives from both the federal government and the Government of Manitoba, whose views on the matter are identical, so that there will be a joint approach to this matter.

This consultative group is to meet in Washington tomorrow, when it will take the opportunity of meeting with the American government to offer the written submission of the Consultative Committee on the various options that the Garrison Dam study group has now placed on the public record.

The United States administration will have the responsibility to transmit our views with respect to the recommendation of the committee for incorporation in their deliberations before they report.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, as I mentioned last week, a commission has been set up in the United States, the Garrison Diversion Unit Commission, which, as the Leader of the Government well knows, has to report by December 31. I am concerned that that commission's report, notwithstanding anything else, has to be adopted by the Government of the United States of America. That government cannot deviate from that report.

As I understand from the Leader of the Government, there will be representation from both the provincial and federal governments to the United States. Is that in order to formulate an opinion whereby they will make representation to that commission? If that is not the case, then it should be for the simple reason that the commission, based on the information I gave the honourable senator last week, stipulates that the Government of the United States must act on the recommendations. My concern is that they should not refer to the report which will be made on December 31, 1984.

If Canadian representation is to be made to Congress, it can only be effective if it is made at the hearings which will end shortly. The Government of the United States will then have to act on the report of December 31, 1984.

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Roblin: I would add, honourable senators, that, when the Secretary of State for External Affairs met with Mr. Shultz last October, he received his agreement and was told that before the recommendations of the Garrison Commission were "set in stone," the Canadian government and the Manitoba government would have an opportunity to deal with the recommendations they were making or proposed to make; and that that would be done by presenting their views to the American government who, in turn, would pass it on to the Garrison Commission.

Nobody knows what that commission will report, least of all me; but I do know that the responsibility for living up to the rules of the Boundary Waters Treaty Act is still intact, and it is still the responsibility of the American government to live up to their part of the Boundary Waters Treaty Act. It seems to me that nothing will be recommended or done which, in the opinion of the United States government, offends against that act.

To that extent, we can be assured that consideration will be given to the impact of this discussion on the terms of the Boundary Waters Treaty Act. In my opinion, that ought to be sufficient to save us harmless. We will have to see what happens.

Senator Guay: It was my intention to inquire privately of the Leader of the Government as to whether there was a possibility that the federal government could make representations in Minot on December 13 of this year, which is the date of the final hearing of the commission. I am caught short today since I do not have all my papers pertaining to the Garrison with me at the moment, but, if I had, I would point out that it was stated that, when the commission reports on December 31, it was understood that the Government of the United States would act upon the report as presented to them. I am concerned that they act contrary to that since they have now appointed their own men to that commission. When they appointed that commission, they said that they would definitely act on the recommendations of that report.

I would again ask the Leader of the Government to look into the possibility of both the provincial and federal governments making representations at Minot on December 13. I would be pleased if they made representations there.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, seconded by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to Her Speech at the opening of the session.—(Honourable Senator Gigantès)

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Mr. Speaker, allow me to congratulate you on your appointment. Through you I would also like to congratulate the Honourable Guy Charbonneau.

I am sure you will be an ornament to this Chamber, as were your predecessors.

Honourable senators, we are a majority of Liberals in this Chamber, and of course we are all aware that the Conservatives are on cloud nine right now.

I would urge them to enjoy their euphoria as long as it lasts, until the cares of power fall heavy on their shoulders. I want to congratulate them on their splendid victory.

I also wish to congratulate Senators Macquarrie and Tremblay on their erudite and elegant speeches.

[English]

Speaking of elegance, my special felicitations go to Senator Macquarrie for his kilted vestimentary splendour on the evening of the Governor General's ball. He was a dazzling package. The wrapping was almost as impressive as the content. I contemplated wearing a Greek kilt on the next state occasion so as not to be outshone, but my wife pointed out that I did not have Senator Macquarrie's knees, so you will be spared.

[Translation]

I would now like to comment briefly on the Throne Speech and the economic statement made on November 8 by the Minister of Finance. This is not a partisan speech. We are all Canadians first and Party members second.

There is no doubt that Canadians have voted massively for this Government. It means that the Government has an almost fearsome responsibility and also a splendid opportunity to do the right thing. A Conservative Government, supported by business, has a better chance of dissipating certain harmful myths that have confused economic thought and lead to the trials and tribulations we are suffering today.

[English]

To believe that, in a situation of high unemployment, low inflation and grave under-utilization of our resources, growth will result from cost cutting is to ignore the facts. Cost cutting reduces the incomes and profits of some people and therefore reduces demand. The worst effect, of course, is the loss of confidence. There is no better booster of confidence than a long line of customers at the door. That long line of customers signifies demand. Decrease the demand in the economy and confidence will plummet.

If honourable senators want an illustration of how cuts in income will damage the economy by reducing confidence, consider what would be the reaction of the country's retailers if they were told that all of their customers would have 5 per cent less to spend this coming Christmas season. Consider, also, the figures for 1982. In that year, the gross national income per capita went down by 4.6 per cent and, inevitably, retail sales declined by 7 per cent. We have not yet recovered from the consequent decline in confidence.

To start reducing deficits and the growth in the national debt, some people propose a cut of 5 per cent to the federal payroll. This seems to be a popular pastime. If we were to include in this payroll the salaries paid to crown corporations, the public service and the armed forces, it would amount to about $15 billion per year. Five per cent of that payroll amounts to $750 million. That "saving" would pay off our 1984 national debt in 240 years, if, of course, we suspended payments on interest and paid only the principal. Suppose we did not cut the salaries of the armed forces or the employees of crown corporations, but only those of public servants. The cut would then amount to $300 million per year and would eliminate the national debt in six centuries, again suspending payments on interest and making payments only on the principal.

The point I am trying to make is that such cuts, which are advocated by some, would be futile. What is worse, they would be a sop to those who have been terrorized by the myth about the debt. The government would have pandered to and given new life to this damaging debt myth.

In what I am about to say, honourable senators, I must acknowledge my intellectual debt to such eminent economists as Dr. Ruben Bellan of the University of Manitoba and Dr. David McQueen of Glendon College, York University, Toronto. The first thing to note about Canada's debt is that 97 per cent of it is owed to Canadians. Since all Canadians and Canadian businesses who own government bonds are liable to federal income tax, Ottawa receives back about 35 per cent of what it pays to bond-holders in interest. Therefore, our real payment in interest does not amount to $20 billion a year, but to $13 billion. Further, to a substantial extent, according to Professor Bellan, the people who pay taxes are also those people who own the bonds. Therefore, the government is taking the money out of the bond-holders' left pockets through taxation and putting it back into their right pockets as interest.

For Canadians who own the bonds, the debt is an asset and the interest payments constitute income, not liabilities. I confess to some puzzlement when I hear people who collect good interest on Canada Savings Bonds cry all the way to the bank.

Federal deficits will only have an inflationary effect—which is one of the big fears about federal deficits—if they occur when the economy is producing as much as it can. If the honourable Leader of the Government will forgive me for correcting him, Keynes never said that a government should resort to spending cuts as the economy is growing back to full employment of its resources. Such spending cuts should be made only when the resources are being used as much as possible, Keynes said. If, at such time as the resources are being used as much as possible, the government spends more than it takes from the public through taxation, it will be adding to a national total of spending that is already sufficient. But, if the private sector is buoyant and the economic outlook is bright, then businessmen will want to borrow a great deal in order to build additional plants and so on that promise to be profitable. At such a time, the government is likely to have little or no need to borrow. If tax revenue is bountiful, as it would be, then there is no need to borrow and the expenditures of the government on unemployment, welfare and job training will be low. That, however, is not our present situation.

If a deficit is incurred when people are unemployed, when the country's productive capacity has not been fully used—and ours is only being used at the rate of about 76 per cent—then a deficit need not have an inflationary effect. So long as deficit spending serves to put unemployed people to work, it need not cause a rise in the price level. Suppose an unemployed person who receives the present $162 per week in unemployment insurance benefits, finds a job paying $300 per week, then, for so long as this person produces goods or services worth $138 per week—which is the difference between $300 and $162—the effect will be deflationary. For a spending increase of $138, there would be an increase of output worth more than that amount. We would be producing more for less. Prices could fall. By the way, employed Canadians produce, per capita, services or goods worth over $700 per week.

Therefore, if governments borrow at a time when the economy is not fully employed, there need not be an increase in interest rates. There need not be any reduction in the amount of money that is available for private enterprise to borrow, with a consequent increase in interest rates.

Honourable senators, this is mere common sense. Let us forget, for the moment, the theory. Allow me to present some facts, which have been confirmed by contemporary experience and historical record in both Canada and the United States. In the United States, the deficit rose from $73 billion in 1981 to $180 billion in 1983. At the same time, the inflation rate dropped from 10 per cent to 3 per cent. Interest rates declined from 14 per cent to 11 per cent. In Canada, the federal deficit grew from $13.6 billion in 1981 to $31.4 billion in 1983. The inflation rate, meanwhile, went down from 12.5 per cent to 4 per cent, and interest rates went down from an average of 19 per cent to approximately 11 per cent. An increase in the federal deficit, therefore, did not produce the increase in interest rates that would have been the result of crowding out.

Honourable senators, there was no crowding out of private borrowers. Business firms, unable to sell anything like the full output of their existing plants, had no reason, and were in no mood, for expansion. They were not crowded out—they did not want to come in.

From 1930 to 1935, during the great depression, the Canadian government's deficits averaged 3.2 per cent of the gross national product and were therefore equivalent to contemporary deficits of about $15 billion. Remember the howling, not so long ago, when the deficit hit $10 billion? Far from there being any inflation in the thirties, because of the high deficit there was actual deflation. The consumer price index fell by 19 per cent between 1930 and 1935, and interest rates were in the 3 to 4 per cent range. During the war years, from 1942 through 1945, the average federal deficit was 22 per cent of the gross national product. In today's terms that was, therefore, equivalent to $100 billion. Meanwhile the consumer price index rose by less than two per cent per year, while interest rates stayed at about three per cent. That is the record, not the theory.

The United States had much the same experience both during the depression and during the war period. As a result of the government's immense wartime borrowing, the national debt increased more than three-fold between 1941 and 1945 both in Canada and the United States. The same sort of experts—bankers, tax lawyers, accountants, stockbrokers—who today predict bankruptcy if we do not cut the deficit, then predicted a similar fate during and after World War II, both here and in the United States. Yet in neither country did the huge wartime deficits have damaging economic consequences. In both countries the quarter century after 1945 was probably the most prosperous, stable and progressive ever known.

Obviously we must find ways to keep increases in wages and profits from exceeding the growth of the economy or productivity, because such excess contributes to inflation. But we must never again fight inflation by deliberately plunging the world into a recession. There are better ways that have worked elsewhere. To curb inflation by drastically cutting the money supply and causing recession is like trying to cure someone's bad breath by asphyxiating him.

Businessmen will hire additional persons only if they expect to sell a lot more than they are actually producing. More jobs will come into being only when an increase in spending in the country is expected. If no such increase is anticipated, there will be no increase in investment or in employment. If the federal government is to reduce unemployment, it must bring about an increase in investment by increasing demand, either by increasing its own expenditures and/or by reducing taxes to promote an increase in private sector spending. I favour the latter, as honourable senators will see.

Of course, non-productive expenses must be cut—those that do not mean an increase in employment. But through tax cuts, or more government spending, employment and demand can and must be increased, and if that increases the deficit, then that is too bad.

Let me quote Lord Macaulay who in his "History of England" in 1855 wrote about the growth of his own country's national debt by 1600 per cent in one century. He said:

At every stage in the growth of that debt. . . it has been seriously asserted by wise men that bankruptcy and ruin were at hand. Yet the debt went on growing, and still bankruptcy and ruin were as remote as ever.

To quote him further, he said:

It can hardly be doubted that there was some great fallacy in the notions of those who uttered and of those who believed a long succession of confident predictions, so signally falsified by a long succession of indisputable facts.

Again he said:

The prophets of evil erroneously imagined that there was an exact analogy between the case of an individual who is in debt to another individual, and the case of a society which is in debt to a part of itself; and this analogy led them into endless mistakes.

Lord Macaulay was describing in 1855 reaction to the 1600 per cent increase in the English national debt from 50 million pounds in 1713 to 800 million pounds in 1815. Those were gold sovereigns.

That was two centuries ago. Now let us look at what happens elsewhere today. The United States has done better than Canada because President Reagan has done what he tells everyone else not to do. He put through three massive tax cuts and increased public spending—and damn the deficit. That is why the U.S. economy has been growing better than ours recently. Unfortunately, nagged by the people to whom this government is now listening, the Liberals did as President Reagan was saying, and not as he was doing. I admit that. We increased taxes, cut costs and slammed the brakes on the recovery. That is what the Minister of Finance is proposing to imitate, and I beseech him not to do so.

Incidentally, the endless moaning and gnashing of teeth about our deficit being higher per capita than that of the U.S. is grossly misleading. Dr. Peter Dungan, who heads the Institute for Policy Analysis at the University of Toronto, points out that according to most forecasters an increase in employment in the U.S. would not decrease their deficit by much. A similar increase in employment in Canada would decrease our deficit by much more. In other words, the U.S. deficit is more structural.

I will not go into the technical discussion of the structural versus the cyclical deficit; but most experts agree on this. Ours is more cyclical. In other words, growth in employment will cure the deficit here but will not work as well in the United States. Their deficit-cutting will be harder than ours. But the important point is that the deficit in the United States has not stopped that country from doing better, because it expanded demand, which stimulated growth in investment and employment.

Of the industrialized countries, the one which has done best, by all economic indicators, is Japan. We all admire Japan. The Prime Minister has a senior economic advisor who is an expert on the Japanese economy—I hope. In Japan the government accords absolute top priority to full employment and the fastest possible rate of economic growth. The government keeps constant watch over the economy and is prepared to increase its spending and reduce taxation by whatever degree is required to ensure that the country keeps achieving those paramount objectives, namely, growth and full employment; and it accepts whatever budget deficit results.

Japan's national debt, as a proportion of its gross domestic product, is 67.7 per cent for 1984. That is what it is estimated to be. Ours is projected to be 58.1 per cent. Both figures include the entire debt incurred by all levels of government.

The performance of the Japanese economy since 1974 indicates that, to say the least, it has not suffered on account of its government's deficits and the increased indebtedness to its own banks and its own people. Japan has also known the lowest inflation rate over the past four years. Much lower inflation than France, whose national debt represents the smallest proportion of the gross domestic product among the principal industrialized countries—somewhere in the order of half the Japanese debt. Yet it is France which has had the highest rate of inflation growth between 1981 and 1984.

Which country has experienced the greatest growth in unemployment between 1981 and 1984? Great Britain, of course, where the government has been most savagely orthodox in effecting cuts and shunning expansionist policies. There, the rate of unemployment increased 93 per cent since 1980. I am speaking of the rate. In other words, it nearly doubled.

In British Columbia, which has tried to emulate Great Britain's policy, unemployment rates grew even faster in the past four years. They more than doubled. That is to say, they grew by more than 100 per cent. In Canada as a whole, during the same period, the unemployment rate grew by only 50 per cent. There is a lesson in that. Those are facts, not theories. What should we do?

One wise man has told us:

There are hundreds of millions of dollars worth of waste in present government spending that can and must be cut. But that kind of saving will make no effect whatever upon our annual deficits of $30 billion or so. Economists who argue that the way to reduce the deficit is to reduce spending are locked into the past. The only way to do it—the economy could not stand tax increases—is by economic growth which will both increase revenues and reduce social spending.

To make sure we understand, this man adds:

... Government has to create an expansionary economic climate within which businesses can expand ...

Who said this? Not I, though I wish I had. Not Mr. Broadbent, not a labour union leader. Not a flaming socialist. The author of these statements is none other than the Honourable Sinclair McKnight Stevens, Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, speaking to Richard Gwyn, as recorded in the Ottawa Citizen of October 14. I have been critical of Mr. Stevens in the past and I hereby pronounce my mea culpa. I hope that the government will listen to him.

Without even increasing the deficit or taxes, we can have an expansion in demand, which will lead to an expansion in consumption and, consequently, in investment, production and employment. Here are some avenues for the government to explore: Cut the dependent child and spousal deductions which are regressive because they help those who have high incomes and have high tax brackets much more than those who are in the lower tax brackets. Increase by an equivalent after-tax amount the personal exemption. This will cut everyone's tax. That will increase demand. For the poorest, who pay little or no tax, explore a negative income tax. Those on the lower rungs of the economic ladder are more likely to spend what money the tax system puts in their pockets. There is a myriad of things such people need to buy. Demand will grow. Investment will result. Employment will rise.

I suggest that we increase the personal exemption even further, and offset this by taking money from the $18 billion that is given to business in tax concessions or grants. Consider abolishing all tax concessions to business and use some of those funds to reduce the corporate profits tax. Some grants may still have to go to businesses that do not make enough profits to pay tax but deserve encouragement, as the Honourable Sinclair Stevens said. But if grants are still given to business, let the recipients have to prove they are creating jobs. The Minister of Finance talks of unleashing the private sector. Indeed, remove the multi-billion-dollar golden leash of concessions which holds back business: cut its taxes. If personal taxes are cut, as suggested above, it will make more profits because demand will increase. Government revenues will increase. Government expenditures on unemployment insurance, welfare and job training will decrease. The deficit will decrease. This government has the clout to take such action. For all our sakes, let it act.

The Honourable Sinclair Stevens did not only advise an expansionary policy. He also said:

In the past, those who run our businesses have often acted as if they had only a limited responsibility to their workers and to their communities when they have to close plants or restructure them. I am a strong believer in free enterprise. But if our free enterprise system is to survive it is going to have to face up to its social responsibilities and rank those higher than short term greed.

This is a point I wish the Minister of Finance had explored fully. This point is central to what will be happening to Canadians for years and years to come.

We have a technological revolution. New machines now replace not only muscle power but, to some extent, brain power. It is fashionable in certain circles to say that new jobs are automatically created for people who are replaced by machines. But that is only part of the picture. In the past 100 years in industrialized countries, many manual jobs were lost. We need only look at agriculture as an example. One hundred years ago half the population tilled the land to feed us. Now, less than 4 per cent of the population works the fields and produces much, much more. And, yes indeed, the agricultural workers displaced by machines found jobs in other sectors, but only after a long, cruel wait. We must not overlook the fact that in the past century the length of the working week has been halved. In other words, to accommodate those workers whom machines displaced, the economy had to share what work was available. This is not theory. This is what happened and this is what will happen. If the average work week were today what it was 100 years ago, half our labour force would be out of work.

We must start thinking about changes in the legislation that will give part-time workers the same benefits proportionately as are given to full-time workers. This will make it easier for those who might wish to shift from full-time to part-time work and pay. It is not inconceivable—in fact, it is a certainty—that with an increasing use of machinery our gross domestic product, the wealth we produce, will increase faster than our population. That is the record of history and it will continue. But, surely, this wealth must not benefit only those who own the new machinery.

[Senator Gigantès.]

I would like to recall here a conversation on robots between the late Walter Reuther, then president of the United Automobile Workers and Henry Ford II: "These machines, Walter," Mr. Ford said, "will not need coffee breaks, will not go on strike, will work 24 hours a day, will not give lip to the foreman and will never ask for wage increases. Increasingly, they will replace more and more of your workers." Mr. Reuther replied: "Yes, but will they buy automobiles?"

I should like to call to the attention of honourable senators the reductio ad absurdum argument of a great economist, Wassily Leontieff. If we replace all workers in manufacturing and services by machines, which is not inconceivable, he says, we could be living in a paradise overflowing with goods and services in which human beings would be starving, and neglected, because they will have no wages with which to pay for all those goods and services. I did not hear the Minister of Finance address this major problem of our time and our future, which is how the wealth of our economy is to be distributed.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): You did so.

Senator Gigantès: The other problem is how to produce more wealth. We know how. We can increase production if we do not close our minds to the facts. But we have not yet tackled the problem of distributing this wealth so that people displaced by machines will have money to buy the products of these machines. We cannot shirk our responsibility to solve this problem as a society. No hoary myths should stand in our way.

I am also puzzled by the fact that those who complain about the national debt cannot follow the example of any intelligent businessman who considers his debt in relation to his assets. Yes, we do have a national debt, but it has paid for half our school and university buildings, half our hospitals, all our ports and much, much more. If a businessman buys a robot, he pays money for the education that has been put into that robot as well as for its metal and plastic flesh. He then houses it so that it will operate in optimum temperatures. He looks after its health by having repairmen around. He feeds it electricity and even makes provisions for its old age and retirement through amortization. He does all this because he considers his robot an asset to be counted when calculating his debt-to-assets ratio.

The most sophisticated robots that have ever existed or will ever exist are human beings. They should be considered assets, too, worthy of the best in education, health care and pensions. If the wonderful Canadian people are counted in the debt-to-assets ratio of our country as robots are, then I am not sure we have a debt problem at all.

That is just economic common sense. It is traditionally overlooked by those who think that the national debt will lead us to catastrophe. A government with so huge a mandate as the one the Conservatives have received has a duty to educate and to preach common sense. I have not heard it do so yet and I bitterly regret that, as will the nation.

Unless the government dispels the fashionable misconceptions about the national debt, we shall never be able to solve our economic problems. Dispelling these misconceptions is, in my view, the government's first priority. Let me give it some help in dispelling some of these misconceptions.

In 1939 our national debt was $4 billion and our interest payments on that debt were $135 million. In 1984 our national debt is projected to be $180 billion and our interest payments $20 billion. Accounting for growth in population and inflation, that means our national debt per capita is 3.5 times greater than it was in 1939 and our interest payments 10 times greater. If the growth in the national debt is such a disaster then, of course, we should be much worse off today than we were in 1939. However, we are immeasurably better off.

I would like to cite some statistics to show just how much better off we are. In 1939, the rate of infant mortality among children under one year was 61 per 1,000. Today the figure has dropped to nine per 1,000. In 1939, life expectancy for males was 62 years; today, it is 72 years. In 1939, less than 5 per cent of the population in the 18 to 24 year age group went to post-secondary institutions. Today, some 22 per cent of people in the same age group attend post-secondary educational institutions. In 1939, our economy could only manage to provide jobs for 26 per cent of our population. Today, 44 per cent of our population is employed. In 1939, less than 35 per cent of all households owned automobiles. Today, 77 per cent own them. In 1939, some 50 per cent of households had flush toilets; some 99 per cent have them today. In 1939, less than 40 per cent of all Canadian households could afford the telephone. Today, the figure is 98.5 per cent.

Throughout World War II financial experts warned that the country was assuming a burden of debt which would prove to be absolutely crushing and which would bankrupt us. It has not. The view of financial experts with respect to the dangers of deficits was then and is now as it was in England in the seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth centuries.

In 1939, Canada's gross national income in constant 1971 dollars was $1,579 per capita. In 1983, also in constant 1971 dollars, it was $5,400—three times greater. Today, Canadians are three times richer than they were in 1939, despite deficit spending or, rather, because of deficit spending to promote demand, investment and employment.

I beseech the government to look at the facts and to teach those facts about the need for expansionary policies for the sake of growth. I beseech the government to preach the need for labour and management not to seek profit and wage increases which exceed the economy's growth—that causes inflation.

I beg for help for those who need it most in order that that wonderful Canadian asset—their skills—can be put to work. That is not only decent but good sense and good business. Enlightened self-interest should prevail over myths and dogmas. Yes, Mr. Wilson, please unleash not only our businessmen, unleash all our people.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, I might say that the acclaim on this side of the house is on the basis that I promise to be brief. Honourable senators are reminding me that I have promised to be brief.

First, I must say that I have suffered the same bad luck I always suffer each time it is my assignment to speak in this chamber. Today, I have to speak after someone as eloquent as Senator Gigantès. I remember that last year I had to speak after Senator Roblin. I wish that I would be allowed to speak first or, at least, not put so close in the speaking order to speakers of their calibre.

I would like to add my voice to the voices of those who have been heard before in welcoming the new senators to this chamber. Among other things, they have succeeded in removing me from the bottom of the list of senators and have made me feel like somewhat of an old hand, although I will always remember how pleased and excited I was on my first day in this chamber. That was just two years ago. I think 20 years from now I will still remember what a great experience it was. I know a few of the new senators, and I must say that they measure up to the usual high standard of appointments to this chamber. I wish to reassure them on that point.

I wish to congratulate our new Speaker, Senator Charbonneau, although he is not here today. I have known the good senator in many capacities over the years and I must say that the role of Speaker suits him well. He has taken on a certain air of dignity and has even managed to develop that rather unique glazed expression which Speakers of this chamber seem to develop as they glide up the centre of the chamber to take their place in the Chair. In all seriousness, this chamber has been graced with a long line of eminent Speakers. I know that Senator Charbonneau will be no less.

I was delighted to hear of the appointment of Senator Asselin as Speaker pro tempore. The recognition is well deserved.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Kelly: I would like to congratulate our two new leaders. They will both have to work hard to live up to the examples that have been set for them by their worthy predecessors, and I know they will.

I would also like to congratulate and offer best wishes to the deputy leaders and to the whips. In so far as the whip on this side of the chamber is concerned, I have good reason to believe that I am going to miss Senator Macdonald. He always treated me gently and with some kindness, which is in sharp contrast to the pushing around I have received recently from Senator Phillips. I will try to live with that, since I do not have much choice in the matter.

Honourable senators, I was fortunate enough last week to have been invited to attend the NATO meeting in Brussels. Therefore, I missed the beginning of the debate on the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. However, I have read the Debates of the Senate carefully, and I must say that the subject has been thoroughly and eloquently covered, certainly up to and including today, by Senator Gigantès, and particularly by the two leaders in this chamber whose ability with thoughts and words I could not match and will not try to.

I will say that, in my opinion, what seems the most significant commitment by far in the Speech from the Throne is the commitment to consensus, to consultation, to harmonizing policy among all levels of government, to attempt to achieve togetherness among governments, business, labour and Canadians as a whole.

The problems we face in Canada today are not unique. Last week I listened to representatives of the 16 member nations of NATO. I heard all about deficits and interest rates. I heard about sagging economies, high unemployment, particularly among young people, excessive government intervention and so on.

While our problems are not unique in the world, they are nonetheless our problems and they must be dealt with. I believe the Mulroney government has set out certain clear objectives in the Throne Speech. If it follows through with its commitments to bring all sectors together in consensus and if it is successful, then we shall have taken a giant step toward solving many of our problems. Whatever we do, I firmly believe we must do it together.

In his economic statement on the Thursday following the Speech from the Throne, the Minister of Finance created a considerable stir and perhaps some unease in his announcement of an immediate process of review of government programs. In my opinion, the review process is aimed at discovering ways and means of reducing expenditures, and does not necessarily suggest that worthwhile programs will be diminished. It might simply mean that the process of delivery of those programs is streamlined and more cost effective.

Honourable senators, government is a huge institution involving massive bureaucracies often addicted—albeit well-intentioned—to a certain commitment to the status quo. When any large institution, whether it is government or private sector, comes under new management—and this institution did come under new management—the first thing the managers do, if they are prudent, is exactly what is happening now, they review the way in which the institution is doing its business. For example, although there was some joking about it, I was pleased with the symbolic gesture of the Prime Minister in instituting modest pay cuts among senior managers. This is classic, good business practice and has often been used as a clear signal to managers at all levels that senior management is serious about finding fat in the system, wherever it is, and often has the very beneficial effect of mobilizing serious cost-cutting efforts at subordinate levels across the management spectrum.

The new government has already started to move into its review of crown corporations. In my opinion, it is about time. There are over 400 crown corporations. I have said it several times in recent days, but I would like to remind this chamber that since 1968 we had been creating, on average, a new crown corporation every three months. The problem we face today, in the review of crown corporations, is not so much whether governments should or should not be in business but more that of having so many businesses as to make it impossible for any government to function effectively in its duty as a vigilant shareholder and to operate any meaningful system of accountability.

There is, as might be expected, the outcry in debate today: Where are the jobs? Where are the specific programs? Where are all these changes aimed at creating a better environment for the private sector and for the revival of the entrepreneurial spirit? I believe that Mr. Mulroney, Mr. Wilson and their colleagues fully intend to see these changes come about. However, as they approach this new era, they are well aware that they must first gain the confidence of the private sector, of business, of labour, of the investor, if the appropriate responses are to take place. In my opinion, this can only be achieved over time and after a careful series of meetings of minds such as is planned for in the announced national economic summit referred to in the throne speech and other similar meetings. Business and labour must know what governments are thinking, and be confident that the rules will not be changed without some advance notice.

The National Energy Program was an interesting case in point. I have many criticisms of the details of that program, but my major criticism is levelled at the way it came about. It was simply announced, with very little broadly-based consultation. It is this sort of thing that causes the private sector to mistrust governments. We are not going to solve our economic problems in an atmosphere of mistrust. It just will not happen.

On the government's commitment to try to bring down the deficit, with all due respect to Senator Gigantès' cry that the deficit is too big, I cannot find any reason for arguing with a commitment to reduce the deficit. As long as governments are inordinately large players in the capital market, interest rates will stay high. Private sector expansion will depend on dependable interest rates at a more reasonable level, in my opinion.

Coming back to the question of consultation, honourable senators, I would like to dwell for a moment on the question of federal-provincial relations. This new government has, perhaps, some advantage over the previous administration in that it has representation right across the country. In spite of this, however, the gaining of a consensus will not always be easy. In times gone by, I have heard it said by friends of mine at the federal level that federal-provincial meetings are really a nuisance. You have ten premiers, each with his own agenda and shopping list, coming with no real interest in what is happening in the rest of the country. With that sort of mind-set at the federal level, it is difficult to move towards any kind of consensus, in my opinion. It seems to me, in the first place, that it should not be surprising in a country such as Canada that provincial agendas differ as you move from the east coast through central Canada and across the prairies, over the mountains to British Columbia.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): I am sorry, but provincial agendas do what?

Senator Kelly: They differ. It is quite legitimate to have a diversification of views.

Senator Frith: I was not objecting; I just did not hear what you said.

Senator Kelly: The role of the wise Prime Minister and the wise federal government is to constantly emphasize consensus and not confrontation, and I believe that this is the commitment and will be the on-going commitment of this new federal government.

Finally, on the question of consensus as opposed to confrontation, I would like to say a word about this chamber. I read and re-read the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition in this chamber on November 13, in which he said—and it sounded like a warning to me:

We do have numbers on this side; we have a strong Liberal majority.

A little later, he said:

Every legislative assembly in our system operates on the majority principle, and the Senate is no exception. The majority will decide; the majority will prevail.

Please understand, honourable senators, that I recognize that, as a junior senator, I may still have some childish illusions. Nevertheless, I am still obsessed with the view that this chamber was meant to be, can be and hopefully is, in fact, the chamber of sober second thought.

However, I read on in the Debates of the Senate and felt once again reassured to read the remarks of my own leader describing his view of how the Senate carries on its affairs. I would also like to quote him, in part, when he says:

What we did was not done in a spirit of political rancour, but in a spirit of what we call sober second thought to try to improve legislation that came before us. We made constructive suggestions to make things better. Who can object to that? To do so is the role of the Senate in these days, under this Constitution, and in these circumstances. Ours is an advisory role, and an advisory role only.

I am very proud to serve under that leader, and I am very much looking forward to the days ahead in this chamber.

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, may I begin by adding my voice to those of my colleagues who have congratulated Senator Charbonneau on his position as Speaker of the Senate. I want also to congratulate the Deputy Speaker and wish you both a happy reign in the Chair of this chamber.

I congratulate also the Leader of the Government in the Senate and his colleagues, and look forward to a productive exchange of views over the next few months.

On this side of the chamber, I welcome with great warmth all the new senators. I know that our new colleagues bring with them to this chamber not only distinguished public and professional careers but also a concern for the ordinary Canadians on whose lives legislation passed here has the most impact. I know that they will pursue tenaciously these interests and concerns.

I particularly welcome the new senator who is my own leader in this chamber, with whom I have worked on many occasions in the party policy committees and for whose judgment and experience I have the highest of regard.

I am concerned here today with that section of the Speech from the Throne entitled "Social Justice". That section of the Speech deals extensively with the inequalities faced by women in Canadian society, although it does not deal exclusively with that important social group. Indeed, a great many subjects are touched upon in this section of the Speech—the concerns of women, the family, the disabled, issues of retirement, community-based health care, excellence in the arts, culture and athletics. These are all important concerns of special groups of Canadians, and all are issues which have been addressed by the previous government. Indeed, I am encouraged to see that many of the ideas developed by the previous government, such as amendments to the Divorce Act, and to the Indian Act, the enforcement of maintenance payments, equal pay for work of equal value and new reforms in pensions, health care and the Criminal Code are listed in the Speech from the Throne. I am only sorry that the government missed our proposals for support for housing for single parents, our youth employment projects and our commitment to the creation of new basic research knowledge.

Honourable senators, social justice is a ringing phrase. It was said only last week in the Globe and Mail of the late Senator Thérèse Casgrain that she fought for social justice all of her life. Many Canadians honour her because of that.

Social justice, as a phrase, can be found in the writings of Karl Marx and Lenin, and remains a phrase that is claimed by their various branches of followers, down to the Sandanistas in Nicaragua in the present day. Social justice is discussed at length by the distinguished Canadian philosopher and socialist, Brough Macpherson.

However, this is a phrase the use of which is not confined to those on the left of the political spectrum. Social justice is also claimed by those on the right, including the contemporary U.S. libertarian and conservative Robert Nozick in his book Anarchy State and Utopia. Social justice and equality are also of concern to those in the middle of the political spectrum: John Stuart Mill, Daniel Bell, Amy Gutman, and many others all deal, from a liberal perspective, with issues of social justice.

The government, therefore, will certainly not divide us over the phrase "social justice", but they most certainly will divide us, and perhaps bitterly, over what is meant by that phrase, how one achieves it and particularly what role the state has in achieving it, and how it is to be measured along the way.

• (1550)

Because we have a new government, and because we are not certain what their political philosophy on social justice means, it is important to ensure that their meaning is separated from the liberal or socialist meaning of the term. The ends and the means differ in each case.

From a practical point of view, then, one wonders what ideas the new government has about social justice, and in particular, one wonders what are the views of the new Prime Minister. One cannot assume that his ideas are necessarily the same as those of Mr. Diefenbaker or of Mr. Clark. One assumes or hopes that his ideas are not the same as those of the Conservative Party members polled at their last national policy convention, which recommended getting out of almost every social program or element of collective social justice in our system. Perhaps it is those views which will prevail.

As I have just pointed out, social justice is discussed almost everywhere, but one place it is not discussed is in the published writings of Mr. Brian Mulroney, who appears to have discovered the phrase quite recently, perhaps with the prompting of some of our colleagues opposite, just in time for the Speech from the Throne.

Now, it may be that I have not uncovered the secret lodestone of Mr. Mulroney's thoughts on this subject which would allow us to anticipate what lies behind this review of social programs, but I have examined Mr. Mulroney's book Where I Stand. The preface to his book states:

Those who read this book will be under no illusion as to where I stand.

He then goes on to list his beliefs, to wit:

- governments should balance budgets;
- industry must be kept turning;
- initiatives should be rewarded;
- labour relations should be civil;
- research and development are the keys to our national well-being;
- the essence of federalism is co-operation and consensus;
- men and women will stand on their own two feet, when given half a chance;

I think the "half" is important.

- government must show concern, even tenderness, in dealing with the less fortunate among us; and
- only free men and women are able to sever the knots tied by government bureaucrats;

I might just point out as an aside that the political assistants Mr. Mulroney has brought into his office are hardly free; they are the most expensive in the history of the country. No one would suggest that they are free to act in the interest of severing knots of any kind; some of the biggest knots they have are in the gags over their mouths.

But to return to Mr. Mulroney's list of concerns, I have listed them in the order in which he put them in his book.

Encouraged by a chapter entitled, "Service to Others", I read it with special care hoping to find some reference to social justice; there had been no such reference in the previous ten chapters. This turned out to be a combination of speeches given to graduating classes of Memorial University in 1980, and St. Francis Xavier University in 1982. Mr. Mulroney urged the graduates of Memorial University to work hard and be innovative; to have a sense of tolerance, humility and humour; to be appreciative of family and friendship; and to behave honourably.

When we get to his description of what constitutes service to others, it is as follows, and I quote:

One has only to reflect on the history and culture of Newfoundland and its prospects to appreciate the opportunities for service that await one. There is an industrial base here that one day will be the envy of many—hydro power, oil and gas, fisheries, mining, pulp and paper, tourism—it is all here.

In other words, service consists of getting out there, making money and serving the big hydro and oil interests.

Is this the prevailing view of social justice?

When we turn to his address to the graduating class of St. Xavier University, we find that Mr. Mulroney led the fundraising campaign, very successfully I must say, and is handing on the results as his way of thanking the university for:

your contribution both to the principle of academic excellence and to the betterment of conditions for the less privileged in our society.

At last we have a reference to the fact that there is a considerable number of less privileged in our society, but there is no reference in his book at all to any policy or coherent set of ideas remotely related to social justice, or even social programs.

It is clear that Mr. Mulroney's preoccupation, as evidenced by the selection of his speeches that he chose to publish last year, did not include any aspect of social justice; certainly not a concern for social justice for women or minorities.

Fortunately, a transcript was published of the August 15 debate on women's issues sponsored and organized by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. During that debate the preoccupation was, of course, with the way in which the policies of any government might have an impact on economic justice, on criminal justice, on family life, on the economy, on Indian women, on the handicapped and on visible minorities—mostly social and economic justice issues and all of importance to women and to men of Canada who are concerned at all about the prevailing injustices and inequalities.

In response to a series of questions, Mr. Mulroney made a series of commitments. It may be useful for my honourable colleagues to note these commitments in order to have a benchmark for understanding what Mr. Mulroney perceives to be social justice in action. When the legislation is introduced, we will want to compare it closely to those commitments.

Pensions was a question raised. Here Mr. Mulroney singled out homemakers and women 60 to 65 years of age. He stressed with respect to homemakers, that the all-party parliamentary task force indicated how to accomplish this without the cost being unbearable. There are savings to be realized, he said.

More significantly, he stressed that it is an obligation of the state to make sure that we provide more than "just subsistence against poverty". It would be a high priority in the next session of Parliament, he said.

Equal pay for work of equal value was another question discussed by the leaders. Mr. Mulroney was quite clear about this. Asked if he was ready to "protect the equality rights of women by including the provision of equal pay for work of equal value in contracts granted by government to the private sector", he replied, "I am ready to go still further."

He objected to the fact that those who believed they were being unequally paid must grieve. It would be imperative, he said, that clear directions be given to Treasury Board to change this in the federal government. This is exactly the system to which the private sector objects most strenuously, I might point out.

With respect to employment opportunities, Mr. Mulroney indicated that he favoured getting more women into decision-making positions, and indicated that he would use "strong persuasion" with the chartered banks to encourage making credit more accessible to women.

On the question of amendments to the Indian Act, Mr. Mulroney said that the Conservative Party approved last year's bill "in principle" and would bring back this bill to Parliament as an "emergency bill".

With respect to affirmative action, Mr. Mulroney called the issue a "moral problem", but also a "high priority". He will have another chance to clarify his views on this this afternoon because Judge Abella's report on this question will be tabled in the House of Commons today.

But on a question about technological change, Mr. Mulroney committed his party to a combination of government and private enterprise. He said, "We must stop those cuts of jobs where women are congregated." He declared himself in favour of pro-rated benefits for part-time workers, was silent on the question of child care, and was opposed to violence against women. Asked if he would make adequate funds available to the provinces to fund transition houses for battered women and rape victims, Mr. Mulroney said, "Yes. My government will provide moral leadership and matching funds and financial leadership intervention." He went on to declare that this should be the first thing on the order paper, and that he would convene a national economic summit to establish new goals and deal with these (i.e. rape and battered women) and other problems. It was the top of the order paper for the entire country, he declared. He declared he would include gender under the hate literature section of the Criminal Code, but perhaps his most important summary statement came in relation to cutting social programs.

The question was this:

We have already seen in British Columbia how budget trimming has been used to slash programs for women and children—everything from child abuse, education to human rights. Mr. Mulroney, can you assure us, that in your effort to reduce the deficit, or hold it where it is, and meet all your promises, can you assure us that you won't cut any social programs?

Mr. Mulroney replied:

Yes, I can give you the assurance that no social program at all, affecting anyone in need, shall be touched by a Progressive Conservative government. I can give you that (assurance) without any hesitation.

He went on after an interruption to say:

We want to give the Canadian people an indication of which way we are going so there are no secret agendas that will be produced after an election.

In summary, Mr. Mulroney appeared to see the matters put before him in terms of state intervention and rapid parliamentary action.

In the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Mulroney and his government did, indeed, mention many of the issues raised during that debate, but how were they mentioned, and how clearly did these references relate to the commitments made on the evening of August 15 last? Although in August he mentioned women aged 60 to 65 as needing pension support, unfortunately, the Throne Speech reduces this to widows and widowers. The NAC question had to do with the guaranteed income supplement and removing the elderly from poverty. Many such impoverished people aged 60 to 65 are single, that is to say never-married Canadians. If they are women, they are likely to be much poorer than most, because they have never earned enough to accumulate a pension fund that some men and married couples have. Although homemakers were specifically raised by Mr. Mulroney in the debate, in the Speech from the Throne I suppose they are included under the general phrase of a "general overhaul" of the Canadian pension system including pension coverage of women. When this overhaul appears, we will recall his commitment to homemakers' pensions, his support for the all-party parliamentary task force chaired by Doug Frith, and we will look for those recommendations. We will remember Mr. Mulroney's injunction that it is an "obligation of State to make sure we provide more than just subsistence against poverty."

Equal pay for work of equal value is mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, but there is no mention of the August commitment that the new government would give "clear directives to the Treasury Board to correct the internal problems of the federal government as an employer." Alas, far from the man of social justice and social action, Mr. Mulroney has turned contemplative. His ministers are to "enlist the co-operation of women and men in the public and private sectors in seeking to define further and to implement this concept." You will recall that Mr. Mulroney agreed with the concept of enforcing equal pay for work of equal value everywhere including in contract compliance with private sector suppliers. A good idea in August is a dead idea in November. Mr. Mulroney's ear has probably been reached by some of the private sector lobbyists. Equal pay for work of equal value is a matter of great justice. It would be one of the important redistributions of income in this country and all Canadians would be much the better for it. But one can hardly expect the Canadian business class to do other than oppose it. Perhaps there is a secret agenda. Perhaps, as Mr. Mulroney promised us, directives have gone to the Treasury Board to ensure that the equal pay concept is enforced in the federal government and crown corporations. Perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate can enlighten us about that. Have such promised directives gone forward, as Mr. Mulroney said was imperative? If not, when will they be going?

Amendments to the Indian Act were described by Mr. Mulroney as urgent. He said they would be brought in as an emergency bill. Several bills have been introduced in the other place, but no bill relating to section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act. When will this emergency bill be forthcoming?

With respect to Mr. Mulroney's promise of funding for transition houses for battered women and rape victims, the Throne Speech promises "action to provide additional assistance to the victims of family violence"—not quite the same thing, but perhaps we should wait to see exactly what moneys are offered and where they go. The economic summit is to take place on Valentine's Day. We anticipate the issue of rape will appear on that agenda as promised.

Child care questions were not answered by Mr. Mulroney in the debate because of the circulation of questions, but they were mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. Another study will repeat the study already under way by Dr. Katie Cooke, a distinguished former federal public servant. Mr. McLean, the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, in a press release dated November 14 makes the best he can of that embarrassment that he has been presented with in the Speech from the Throne—a parliamentary task force. Although the Cooke task force has received approximately 150 briefs and 7,000 letters from across Canada, and will present recommendations to the government for action in mid-January next, poor Mr. McLean has to set out to seek advice yet again from across the country on exactly the same questions. His discomfort is palpable in his press releases.

Of the nine absolutely clear commitments made by Mr. Mulroney in the August 15 debate, none is mentioned in the same way in the Speech from the Throne, although many of the subjects are touched upon. In addition, other matters of social justice not mentioned during the debate, such as the inclusion of the physically and mentally handicapped into the "productive mainstream of Canadian life," increased support for community-based health care, pension increases for Canadian veterans are in the Throne Speech as are other commitments. So what can we say about the concept of social justice after the Speech from the Throne? It is a good list but a watered down one in comparison to the earlier commitments.

Since the Speech from the Throne we have had two means of judging Mr. Mulroney's meaning and commitment to social justice. The first, of course, is the economic statement and the cuts simultaneously announced by the President of the Treasury Board. The second is the answers which Mr. Mulroney has given so far to questions posed to him in the other place.

[Senator Marsden.]

In the economic statements, in the cuts and in the questions posed by the new direction for Canada, there are many ill-defined areas. I should like to touch on only two points. The glove is coming off. You will recall Mr. Mulroney's unequivocal assurance to the people of Canada during the NAC debate on August 15. It was again "I can give you the assurance that no social program at all, affecting anyone in need, shall be touched by a Progressive Conservative government. I give you that (assurance) without any hesitation." Mr. Wilson announced the touching of all social programs to, as he put it, "gain fiscal flexibility." Mr. Wilson said: "In the coming months we will have to examine all government programs, to streamline those that can be made more effective in meeting economic, social and national security objectives and to eliminate those that no longer serve a vital public purpose."

This statement has led to a great deal of satisfaction in some quarters—among the rich, the libertarians and those who prefer the poor to be dependent and on welfare as opposed to having dignity and entitlements. Regardless of how the government finally comes down on such basic programs as unemployment insurance, family allowances, old age pensions and special assistance programs, they have opened the door not to adjustments but to the type of review that would undermine those least able to defend themselves and their interests. This process of consultation to which the government is committed will be watched with intense interest by all of us to see whether those who would lecture the poor, the unemployed and the minorities on "self-reliance" as Mr. Mulroney did the graduates of Memorial University, will have pride of place in the consultations, or whether the National Council on Welfare, the knowledgeable representatives of the minorities, the poor and the politically weak will be prominent. I would remind those who see more than a trace of the Reagan recipe in this economic statement that the Urban Institute in the United States recently reported that "from 1980 to 1984, the typical middle-class U.S. family's income rose . . . about 1 per cent. The average income of the poorest one-fifth of all families declined . . . by nearly 8 per cent, whereas the average income of the most affluent one-fifth increased . . . by nearly 9 per cent."

Between the evidence of British Columbia, the evidence of the past four years, and the ominous review statement by Mr. Wilson, honourable senators will perhaps appreciate why there is doubt in the minds of many Canadians about how genuine was Mr. Mulroney's statement to the nation on television during the NAC debate when he assured us "that no social program at all, affecting anyone in need, shall be touched by a Progressive Conservative government." More alarming, however, are the contradictions in the areas of social justice between the sentiments in the Speech from the Throne and the cuts administered by the President of the Treasury Board.

One cut in particular makes nonsense of Mr. Mulroney's reference to those with physical and mental disabilities being included in the productive life of Canadian society. You will recall the famous Obstacles Report tabled in the House of Commons in 1981. One of the outcomes of this study and of the study entitled "Equality Now" concerning visible minorities and racism in Canadian life was the proposal to include in the 1986 census questions which would have provided for the first time in Canada social planners, economists and provincial governments with basic information required to develop programs to include such minorities in the productive life of Canadian society. At the present time we do not know how many handicapped people or members of visible minorities there are in Canada. These data would have had many uses and benefits, but above all, they are the only way we would know if there was any social justice for these groups. It is all very well to include the individual handicapped person who happens to live down the street or the visible Canadian who shows up at the employment centre, but what does that tell us about how many such people there are and how many are being missed? What does that tell us about social justice? Indeed, this government, by cancelling the 1986 census, which it has done, has destroyed the evidence by which its plans and programs can be both built and assessed.

The cancellation of this census has other effects of great importance to Canadian society. The plan for the 1986 census indicates that about 40,000 Canadians would have been employed, either part-time or full-time, in every village and town across this country. That amounts to almost 6,000 person-years. That is not insignificant, especially outside the industrial heartland.

These data from the census are part of the formula for calculating federal-provincial equalization payments. One can imagine the handicap which provincial ministers will have in coming to the table to discuss the new formula which will now have to be developed for these transfer payments.

I remind honourable senators that demographers will be hired to make intercensal estimates and to conduct special surveys to get some of these data. This will be done at great public expense—some estimate at a greater expense than the census itself—and the data will be of doubtful value. When an intercensal estimate of this kind was made in the United States, the estimates were so far out of line that the government was actually sued. School systems and hospital systems require these data for their planning, as do housing industries and many other manufacturers.

The cancellation of the 1986 census saves $17 million in the first year and $100 million overall; but I wonder if the Auditor General will be asked to calculate the expenditures of provincial and municipal governments on special surveys to replace the census. Will Canadians ever know of the amount saved or the amount lost or the amount spent by the private sector and special agencies? Will citizens now be bothered 20 or 100 times for data about themselves as opposed to being interviewed once? Will the government be embarrassed in international circles—as I know our scientists will be—by a gap in the historical series, a lack of information about the migration across the country of Canadian workers, and the many other negative effects of this cut?

At page 84 of An Agenda for Economic Renewal, Mr. Wilson said:

There is no hidden agenda for expenditure cuts. The areas for change have been noted. We must now consult widely, fully, and with the realization that the government alone cannot solve these problems.

Already, I suspect, Mr. Wilson is reading that prose with embarrassment. The cut of the census is not hidden or secret, but there was no consultation with the provinces, municipalities, minorities or many others who will be affected. There was, one must suspect, a great deal of simple ignorance.

How is the government going to make federal-provincial transfer equalization payments? How are they going to—to quote Mr. Wilson from page 69 of the same document—"ensure that certain groups who have been disadvantaged in the past are given the occasion to become equal partners in a fair society"? He lists native peoples, women, visible minorities and the disabled—the very groups whose conditions will be hidden by the cancellation of the census and whose chances of participating fully in Canadian society, as advocated by both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, will be dramatically reduced by these actions.

What, then, is the evidence which Canadians can use with respect to this government's attitude towards social justice? First, at least as far as the Prime Minister is concerned, there is precious little evidence that he ever gave it more than a passing thought before becoming leader of his party or, if he did, he did not think it worthy of inclusion in the book he published and which is a statement of where he stands. Second, there is evidence that he was prepared to make all kinds of commitments during the election campaign on specific social justice questions. Third, there is evidence that these were considerably modified and watered down when it came to the Speech from the Throne. Fourth, there is the overwhelming evidence that he is prepared to overturn not only some of his commitments through the mouth of his Minister of Finance, but is prepared to get rid of some of the evidence through the cancellation of the census. Finally, we have the evidence of the Prime Minister's own words dealing with the Speech from the Throne in the House of Commons.

Pursued by Sheila Copps, on November 6, Mr. Mulroney failed to explain why he has changed his mind about equal pay for work of equal value. On November 7, in a very long response to Mr. Turner's speech in the debate on the reply to the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Mulroney failed to say a word about social justice issues. On November 8, it was Mr. Broadbent's turn to pursue the Prime Minister about his commitments to women and economic equality. Again, there was no response of substance. Equality of women, he said, was at the top of his list, but first we had to deal with the economy. That economic statement, as we know, hardly contributed to the equality of women in this country.

In summary, honourable senators, on the evidence to date, social justice has almost no content in terms of what would lead to benefits to those less fortunate amongst us. Indeed, a false dichotomy is being created between economic recovery and the rights and needs of less fortunate citizens.

So far, the evidence suggests that the government, patterning itself, perhaps, after the Reagan government, will impose its version of state discipline on the unemployed, the recipients of government entitlements, will threaten existing programs and fob off all action on new programs until several months from now at the earliest. This is, apparently, Mr. Mulroney's notion of social justice.

Honourable senators, women in Canada, minorities, the unemployed and the poor will not accept this approach under any name, certainly not in the name of social justice.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator Bielish, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lafond, seconded by the Honourable Senator Thompson:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to hear evidence on and to consider matters relating to national defence;

That 12 Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the Special Committee;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada, and to such places abroad where members of the Canadian Armed Forces may be stationed;

That the Committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate;

That the Committee be empowered to retain the services of professional and clerical staff as deemed advisable by the Committee; and

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject before the Committee during the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the Committee.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Stand.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wonder if my honourable friend would object to my making a brief comment in his place this afternoon since I am prepared to say a word or two on this matter. He may then adjourn the debate if he wishes.

[Senator Marsden.]

Senator Frith: The reason I asked that it stand is the same as that for which I adjourned the debate earlier. As I said then, I wanted to consult my colleagues, and the meeting does not take place until this afternoon. It is purely a question of chronology. I, therefore, welcome the intervention of Senator Roblin.

Senator Roblin: I do not quarrel in any way with my honourable friend's intention to stand the debate; that is up to him.

I would simply like to say that on this side of the chamber we are disposed to support the motion because we have observed the operations of the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence for some time, and it is generally agreed in this chamber that the committee does a pretty good job. The work has required a great deal of concentration and dedication on the part of members. Since I have been a member of the committee, perhaps I should tread lightly on this theme, but, nevertheless, I want to make it perfectly clear that I think the committee has done a good job of work.

However, I should observe that the wording of this resolution is very wide indeed and contemplates, I suspect, that the committee will continue to do a great deal of further investigation in this field. That may well be justified, but I would just enter this caveat: I support the resolution primarily because it will enable the committee to complete the report it is working on now. I think that report should be completed and made available for public discussion. However, I point out that it is the intention of the government to introduce a paper on defence very soon, shortly after the beginning of the year. Following that paper, there will be a white paper which will crystallize the policy of the administration in this field.

I raise the matter for this reason: One of the signal findings, indeed one of the early findings of the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence, was the need for a restatement of government policy on defence. It was found that there was a need for a statement as to what we are expecting our men and women in the services to do; how we expect them to do it; and what implements we would provide to them to carry out their jobs. The central theme of a good deal of what this committee has been saying to us is: We need a new white paper on defence.

I have to say that I have always agreed with that finding of the committee, so I am happy to say that it looks as though it might come about. If it does, it may alter the perception of the committee as to what it should do next. Although it would be premature to make any judgment on that point, and I do not attempt to do so, I merely say that, in supporting this resolution, I do so because I want the committee to have an opportunity to deliver the report that is now almost completed. I also want the committee to have an opportunity to consider the statement of the government respecting a white paper, so that it may be guided by the implications of that statement when it decides where it wants to go next.

While it is by no means a caveat that I am trying to suggest at the moment, it is, indeed, an observation as to what I think the committee's future might be. It may be that the committee members might wish to limit themselves in some respects, if they think that the white paper looks as though it will produce the results we are all after.

Honourable senators, I support the committee, I support the resolution, and I make these observations about the policy of the government.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, November 21, 1984

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Martial Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, in the Chair.

Prayers.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, a number of committee organization meetings will be held tomorrow morning. The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance will meet in room 256-S at 11 a.m.; the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs will meet in room 356-S at 10.30 a.m.; and the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs will meet in room 256-S at 9.30 a.m. Notices are being distributed to honourable senators this afternoon.

On Tuesday, November 27, there will be an organization meeting of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments at 9.30 a.m. in room 112-N; and the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages will meet on the same date at 9.30 a.m. in room 307, West Block.

HUMAN RIGHTS

NOTICE OF MOTION FOR EXPRESSION OF SYMPATHY TO PRIMATE OF POLAND

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Thursday, November 22, 1984, I will move:

That the Senate of Canada express to the Primate of Poland its deep sympathy on the recent brutal murder in Poland of a patriot-priest, Reverend Jerzy Popieluszko, which has shocked the conscience of the world; and

That the Senate of Canada, condemning this act of violence, call upon signatory countries to defend human rights, pursue justice, and ensure respect for freedom of speech and association, in compliance with the provisions of the Helsinki Final Act.

YOUTH

NOTICE OF MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday, November 27, 1984, I will move:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to examine, consider and make recommendations on the problems and issues facing Canadian youth between 15 and 24 years of age;

That 12 Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the Special Committee;

That the Committee have power to report from time to time, to send for persons, papers and records, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada;

That the Committee have power to retain the services of professional, clerical and stenographic staff as deemed advisable by the Committee; and

That the Committee present its report no later than October 1, 1985.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BENEFITS—PROPOSED CUTBACKS

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It is prompted by a headline in this morning's edition of the Globe and Mail, which reads: "Crackdown likely on older jobless abusing system."

Honourable senators, the article reads, in part:

Thousands of long-term unemployed people will be among the prime targets of federal cutbacks in the unemployment insurance system if the Government is true to its own statements and to its bureaucrats' conclusions.

It states further:

The statement was echoed by Finance Minister Michael Wilson earlier this month when he unveiled a list of spending cuts that included $200 million to be carved from the benefits system in 1985-86.

Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate plead with the Minister of Finance and with his other cabinet colleagues—who seem to have a determined phobia about the deficit, which I am prepared to admit is serious—to try to cut this deficit by means which will not affect the poor, the unemployed, the sick and the aged?

Honourable senators, in the province of New Brunswick in the winter months, I understand, although I do not have the figures in front of me, that up to 40 per cent of the population, which is composed of inshore fishermen, depends upon unemployment insurance benefits for its survival. I do not assume from this newspaper article that these fishermen will be cut off, but what I know, from having spoken with them over the last few weeks, is that they are frightened to death that the only means of existence available to them during the winter months—benefits to which they feel they are entitled—will be affected by these cutbacks. They also fear that they will be hounded into proving that they are entitled to their unemployment insurance benefits.

Honourable senators, I repeat my question: Will the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate plead with the Minister of Finance and his government to leave those poor people alone?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have read the same article as my honourable friend. Of course, I can by no means confirm that the information given there is correct. In fact, in the story itself, if the honourable senator reads it carefully, he will find that it is stated to be a speculative story and not one based on hard fact. I share with my honourable friend his concern—there should be no mistake about that—because there are unemployed people not only in his province but also in other parts of this nation who deserve sympathetic consideration.

The matter was raised in the other place, and if my honourable friend will take the trouble to read House of Commons Debates, he will find that the Minister of Employment and Immigration made a statement respecting the policy that the government would be following, in general terms. But until we have the report of the Employment and Immigration Commission—which is the body that sets out the regulations under which the UIC is administered—he will not really have a clear picture of the probabilities. I repeat that in the other place the minister concerned stated that those who cannot find work would not be cut off.

Senator Thériault: As a supplementary, will the Leader of the Government assure us that, in fact, the government will not proceed with hiring approximately 780 additional people and, as I read, placing them in every district of this country, to ensure that no one is getting unemployment insurance benefits who does not qualify for them and to make sure that work is not available for them?

I would feel happier if I were satisfied that the Minister of Employment and Immigration had the last word on this subject, but I am afraid that she is under the gun from “Yukon Erik” and the Minister of Finance and she will have no choice but to follow the instructions laid down by the Minister of Finance. That concerns me and frightens the poor people in my province.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I can give my honourable friend no assurance of the kind that he requests, because I believe it is incumbent upon the government to administer this act in a decent and economical fashion. After all, the funds that are used in connection with the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Commission come from a wage tax, and that tax is paid by every worker in the country. It is also paid by employers and has some effect on their capacity to offer jobs. That fact has to be borne in mind. It is necessary to administer this act with fairness to the unemployed, but it must also be administered with a sense of reasonable economy. I do not believe that honourable senators would disagree with that.

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government. Will he also look into the allegation that approximately 170,000 jobs are available because unemployment insurance benefits are too high? Some advocates, who are confidants of the Progressive Conservative Party, believe that by lowering the level of UIC benefits those 170,000 jobs could be filled.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I suspect that the honourable senator is referring to the study made by the Canadian Organization of Small Business. I see that he nods, and therefore we are on a common footing here. It is therefore quite clear that I cannot make myself responsible for that figure. It is their figure and it is one that they will have to deal with in due course.

IMMIGRATION

QUALIFICATIONS FOR ENTRY

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government, the only representative of the cabinet in this chamber to whom questions can be put. Do I understand correctly that it is this government's policy, in connection with immigration, to give priority to rich entrepreneurial immigrants with capital, or, as one journalist phrased it, to business-class immigrants? Is this the beginning of the phasing out of approving applications by working class immigrants, the kind of immigrant who built this country, the kind of immigrant who brought the work ethic to Canada and who may not have had much of a formal education but who had the determination to succeed?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I can assure my honourable friend that such is not the case. The people he referred to are desired as immigrants to this country, particularly having reference to the economic situation in which we find ourselves from time to time. However, it would be unwise for us to refuse admittance into the country to other people who might have other attractions or qualifications that might serve the nation. If the honourable senator wants me to confirm to him that there is no policy bias here that will seriously distort our previous immigration policy, he can be assured that there is no such bias.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. In the blue book put out by the President of the Treasury Board entitled “Expenditure and Program Review” at page F.2, the last sentence reads: “The cost of immigration... will be recovered through fees." I understand that a fee will be charged to anyone who applies to come to Canada and that this fee is in the neighbourhood of $15 to $20. To a working man in Canada $15 or $20 may not be very much, but to a poor man in a foreign country it could be a detriment, a real hardship in applying to come to this country. In light of what I have just said, does it not indicate that this government's policy on immigration gives most emphasis to immigrants who are business people?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I do not think so. My honourable friend is probably aware that fees are not charged to those who come to this country as refugees or in indigent circumstances. Therefore, the fee does not become the kind of burden that he has in mind. I am sure that he will feel better if I tell him that in the introduction to the new quotas to which he is referring, the government has allocated approximately $2.5 million in extra funds in order to assist those who have come to this country under difficult circumstances to find their place among the citizens of this nation.

Senator Bosa: I commend the government for taking such a positive initiative in providing the provinces with additional funds for assistance to people who come to this country who, up to now were assisted primarily by funds provided by the provinces. However, I was not referring to refugees, who are usually admitted to Canada for political reasons. I was referring to working class immigrants who apply to come to Canada. These immigrants will be faced with having to pay a fee merely for filing an application to immigrate to Canada. Is not this policy on immigration on which the government has embarked elitist?

Senator Roblin: I do not think the matter is as significant as my honourable friend does.

STATISTICS CANADA

CANCELLATION OF 1986 CENSUS

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I address my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In view of the problems of extrapolation of statistical data, I am very much concerned, as I am sure are other honourable senators, over the announcement that the mid-decade census will be abandoned. This cancellation will have a tremendous impact on marketing plans, particularly those of small companies and those that do not have large marketing departments or research staffs. My honourable friend must realize that it is also important in light of the changing mosaic in Canada. The 1981 census gave us some great surprises and I suggest that the 1986 census, if it is done, will do likewise. Can the honourable gentleman tell us whether or not before the decision was made, in accordance with the commitment of his government to cancel the mid-decade census, it did consult with the provinces and with business, both large and small?

● (1420)

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Senator Bosa.]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall take my honourable friend's question as notice.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: I knew you would be careful.

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Following the normal practice, after the tabling of the document on annual levels of immigration into Canada, the yearly consultation of business and labour people has been taking place, both yesterday and today, in the Chateau Laurier. I understand that both labour and business are concerned about low levels of immigration into Canada, especially with respect to the types of immigrants my colleague referred to in an earlier question. I understand many of them are looking for a comprehensive demographic policy to be established by the government. In order to respond to this request, will the government restore the 1986 census, without which no demographic policy can be developed?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I should tell the honourable lady that, as she is well aware, the government is conducting a general study of the whole question of immigration in order that the question of immigration quotas may be re-examined. When that study is complete and if it calls for a change in policy, I am sure this house will be made aware of it.

Senator Marsden: Honourable senators, my question concerned the taking of the 1986 census. The review of policy, for which I understand no guidelines have yet been established, really cannot be conducted without that census. Will the taking of the 1986 census be restored in order to assist in that review?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I do not agree with the premise of my honourable friend's statement. I feel there may be sufficient information available which would render a study useful. In any event, I can give her no information about reinstating the census.

CITIZENSHIP

INCREASE IN FEES

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, in view of the decision of the Minister of Finance, expressed in a news release from the office of the Secretary of State, announcing an increase in citizenship application fees from $15 to $40 for adults and $8 to $25 for minors, which adds up to $130 for a couple with two children, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate be kind enough to convey to his cabinet colleagues our deep concern and great disappointment with respect to this decision? Would he also request them to rescind these exorbitant increases, as they would act as a financial burden and a serious and unhappy disincentive for people wanting to become Canadian citizens, with the accompanying privileges and obligations of Canadian citizenship?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I can undertake to convey my honourable friend's opinion to the minister. However, I can go no further.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Would he also convey to his cabinet colleagues similar representations on behalf of poor and disadvantaged Canadian citizens who are faced with other large increases in the fees for proof of Canadian citizenship?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I can only convey to my colleagues my honourable friend's expression of opinion.

STATISTICS CANADA

CANCELLATION OF 1986 CENSUS

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Yesterday, in the other place, Judge Rosalie Abella's report entitled "Equality in Employment: A Royal Commission Report" was tabled. We on this side of the house are most enthusiastic about Judge Abella's report and its many important recommendations.

Given the requirement for census data to be provided every five years, for which the Abella report demonstrates the need very clearly, will the government now restore the taking of the cancelled 1986 census?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I have already answered that question, honourable senators.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

LEBANON—GOVERNMENT AID

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Lebanon has been one of the countries which has suffered most in recent years. For months on end, we were witnesses to the bombings in that country.

In light of that and for humanitarian reasons, the Canadian government decided to contribute $5 million to help relieve sufferings in that country.

I have learned, Leader of the Government in the Senate, that in spite of Cabinet instructions that the money be paid out, CIDA has been unable to find a way to contribute that amount, either directly or through the International Red Cross or other agencies set up by the Lebanese government to receive assistance from donor countries such as Canada.

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate not only to enquire about this, but also to make sure that the commitments of the Canadian government will be honoured by the bureaucrats without further delay.

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am quite sure that the obligations of the Canadian government will be respected by the bureaucrats. I would also like to assure my honourable friend that I shall take this question as notice.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INDEPENDENCE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Dan Hays: I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate relating to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

However, if I may take a moment of the time of honourable senators, I would like to say, on the first occasion of my speaking in the Senate, how grateful I am to the former Prime Minister the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau, for appointing me to the Senate. I would like to say how happy I am to be here.

I also take this opportunity to congratulate His Honour the Speaker and the Speaker pro tempore, as well as the Leader of the Government, the Deputy Leader of the Government, the Leader of the Opposition and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. I hope that wishing success to the last two is not something that is mutually exclusive.

My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is: Can he assure us that the committee which was appointed by the Minister of Communications, referred to in an announcement of November 15, will in its activities not in any way violate, impugn or interfere with the independence of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

The independence of this corporation is a principle that has been observed throughout its history. I think it is an important principle, and one that was in keeping with the attitude of the opposition party, as reflected in its support for Bill C-24, after it was agreed that a section would be dropped that allowed the minister, with the approval of cabinet, to give directions to a crown corporation. I am sure honourable senators will agree that it is unacceptable for a minister to have the right, through a committee or in any way, to make decisions on behalf of the corporation. The interface between the minister and a Crown corporation should be the board of directors and president of that corporation, or chairman if the corporation has one.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I was interested in my honourable friend's rather unorthodox preamble to his question today, and I shall risk the censure of my colleagues in responding to it by saying that if he makes as fine a name for himself in this chamber as his father did, he will make a great contribution to our deliberations.

Respecting the thrust of his question, I can tell him that he need not fear that undue influence will be brought to bear with respect to the direction of the CBC.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Why should he not fear?

Senator Roblin: I shall explain, if honourable senators will give me an opportunity. My explanation is that Mr. Juneau, the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, declares himself to be not seriously concerned by the activities of this advisory committee, and if it is good enough for him it should be good enough for others.

Senator Steuart: Two wrongs don't make a right.

Senator Hays: Mr. Juneau, as head of the corporation, is perhaps in a position in which he is compelled to make things work. However, I have a little concern and would very much appreciate it if the Leader of the Government in the Senate would express, at the very least, my concern over the potential for harm that may arise as a result of the work of this advisory committee.

Senator Roblin: I do not mind conveying my honourable friend's opinion, provided that it is clearly identified as being his opinion.

• (1430)

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): It is ours, too. It is the opinion of the members on this side of the house, too.

CUTBACKS IN SERVICE

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question which, in a sense, is supplementary to the previous question in that it relates to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

I ask for assurances from the Leader of the Government in the Senate that cutbacks in CBC service will not work disproportionately to the disadvantage of the smaller communities of Canada, and that Canadian artists, performers, technicians, writers, producers and other personnel in the regions are not going to be sacrificed unfairly on the altar of alleged economy and political expediency.

Honourable senators, I remember the days when we suffered the ultimate humiliation in the province of British Columbia. The CBC news service was so centralized that at 8 o'clock every morning the British Columbia weather forecast was read in Toronto by a Toronto announcer and broadcast back in British Columbia. That was the ultimate humiliation for a west coaster.

Many of us are very disturbed about recent reports such as that which appears in the Globe and Mail of today:

—sources say [CBC] managers have already been told that northern radio and television services will be "decimated" and regional programming will be hit hard.

The article goes on to say that Corner Brook and certain other regional stations, including at least one in British Columbia, will be closed.

However, construction of a new Toronto production centre will proceed.

Some Hon. Senators: Shame.

Senator Perrault: The regions have been striving for years, honourable senators, to bring about the decentralization of the CBC and other national institutions in order to make them institutions which serve Canadians from coast to coast.

Three advisors have been selected by the government to counsel the government about the CBC. At this time, to some, they appear to be a "triumvirate of terror" recommending a disproportionate reduction in regional services—a cutback—a retreat to fortress Toronto and to fortress Montreal. The advice seems to be, "Don't worry about Newfoundland and other places. We can always ship information by wire, with announcers, performers and newsrooms in Toronto instead of Corner-Brook, Prince Rupert and Prince George." Many Canadians are frightened and tired of that approach.

Surely to heaven, for a government which has been given a national mandate, with support drawn from every region of the country the members elected to the House of Commons from the Conservative Party and its supporters in this place should have more influence in caucus than to allow this kind of reported centralization to take place.

We want assurances that these cutbacks are not going to decimate unfairly broadcasting's creative community in Canada, which is not confined merely to Toronto and Montreal.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): As a stump speaker, my honourable friend has few equals. It is a pity that his talent is wasted at Question Period in the Senate of Canada.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Not wasted.

Senator Roblin: I was particularly touched by the reference to those people in the CBC who read the weather forecast in Toronto for the edification of his friends in British Columbia.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: The weather has already changed by then.

Senator Roblin: My friend, Senator Steuart, is usually right on matters of this kind, but I should like to tell my honourable friend that I think I had better make a note of this for the people who run the CTV, because every time I listen to Canada AM I find that the weather forecast for Manitoba is being read from Toronto, and that the weather forecast for British Columbia is being read from Toronto. So, I grieve for him at this grave dereliction of duty of the public broadcasting system with respect to his province.

I should like to see the Liberal Party get together on this. We have heard about the problems they have with leadership; I am not going to talk about that. Senator Steuart is in a class by himself. I do not know with whom he gets together, but I am sure that that would be a formidable duo.

I have just been told by the Honourable Senator Hays that we should not interfere with the CBC. Now I get a passionate injunction from the Honourable Senator Perrault that we should interfere with the CBC.

Senator Frith: He was telling the same people not to interfere.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend says that we should not interfere with the CBC, yet he wants the Conservative caucus and the Conservative government to do exactly what my honourable friend over there says they should not do.

Senator Frith: He wants you to interfere with your terrible three, not the CBC.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend always tries to improve the questions of his colleagues. I do not think he can improve on them very much; therefore, he should let them ask their own questions.

Senator Frith: Even the Leader of the Government in the Senate—I try to improve him at all times too.

Senator Roblin: I will simply say to my honourable friend that as a westerner, as one who does not live in the city of Toronto but who shares at least to a limited extent his desire to see that the CBC recognize completely the other regions of the country, I will convey to the minister concerned that I have had very impassioned and—

Hon. C. William Doodie (Deputy Leader of the Government): Hysterical?

Senator Roblin: Hysterical? No, I wouldn't say that.

Senator Frith: Because it would not be true.

Senator Roblin: I have had very impassioned appeals that this function of the CBC be recognized. I hesitate to do so lest I be accused of interfering with what they are going to do.

Senator Perrault: No one is disputing the possible need for economies in the CBC. It may well be that reductions can be effected which are fair to all of the country. That is all we are asking. We are saying that the regions should not make a sacrifice disproportionate to the sacrifice made by the major population centres. There is no incompatibility between the question asked by the preceding questioner, Senator Hays, and the question that I asked. We do not want Newfoundland and the other regions to be sacrificed. We do not want a disproportionate consolidation and centralization of CBC programming, power and influence in central Canada. That is all we are asking. I would think that the Leader of the Government would be sympathetic to the nature of the question.

Senator Roblin: I have to tell my honourable friend, perhaps to his surprise, that I do not find that an unreasonable proposition. It is couched in reasonable language and language that I am able to assimilate and understand. Therefore, I will do my best to promote the view that he is advocating.

Senator Perrault: And we do not want outside political "hit men" to be making decisions about where these CBC economies should take place. That is what we are asking.

Senator Roblin: He is right back where he started from. He wants somebody to interfere but not the "hit men".

Senator Frith: We want you to interfere with the hit men.

EMPLOYMENT

DECENTRALIZATION PROGRAM

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, you can say all you want about having the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation recognize the various regions of the country, but I should like the new government to recognize the needs of Atlantic Canada, particularly the area that I represent.

My question has to do with decentralization, a program which was introduced very successfully by the previous government and which has to do with bringing the government closer to the people of the various regions of the country and creating new jobs in areas of high unemployment. Under that program approximately 125 jobs have already been transferred to Sydney, Nova Scotia, my home area, from the citizenship branch of the Secretary of State. There was a second phase to the decentralization program, which was the transfer of 75 to 85 jobs also to Sydney from the income securities branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare. However, the new government, in its wisdom or lack of, chose to cancel the income securities branch transfer, resulting in a loss of 75 to 85 much needed jobs in one of the very high unemployment areas of the country.

Will the government leader explain why this decentralization program was cancelled and, in the process, who was consulted? Was the premier of the province consulted? Was the member of Parliament for the area consulted? Were my two distinguished colleagues from the area, Senator Macdonald and Senator Muir, consulted? Was the mayor of the city of Sydney consulted?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is a good thing that he did not ask me whether Senator Richard Donahoe had been consulted because, as a representative from Halifax, he might have a somewhat different view of this matter than the one presented by my honourable friend. He has asked me some questions with respect to consultation, or notice or whatnot, and I cannot answer them today. I will have to take that matter as notice.

Senator Graham: I have a supplementary question. Whether Senator Donahoe or any other member of this place from the Halifax region would take exception to what I am saying, because there must be some overtones or undertones in what the Leader of the Government has said or suggested, the unemployment rate in that part of Canada in August of this year was 16.2 per cent. In two months since the new government took office it has risen an unprecedented four percentage points—an unprecedented rise, as far as I can determine, since they started keeping unemployment or employment statistics in this country. The present unemployment rate in Cape Breton officially is 20.3 per cent and, unofficially, it is over 30 per cent.

Was the impact on unemployment or employment taken into consideration when the decision was made? What happens to those people who have given up other job opportunities to go into training for this particular part of decentralization?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): With an unemployment rate of the extent my honourable friend has quoted, I certainly sympathize with him and understand the reasons for his raising the matter, but I shall have to take the question as notice.

Senator Graham: As a final supplementary, when the Leader of the Government is asking for the reasons, I believe he should bear in mind that we must also take into consideration the cancellation of tenders on a proposed new building to house the decentralization; a new building which is much needed in the deprived downtown core of the city of Sydney; a new building which was going to provide, during its construction, some 100 construction jobs; a new building which would cost in the neighbourhood of $6 million to $8 million.

For the honourable gentleman's edification, I would point out that tenders for that new building were called on August 31, to close on November 14. The tender call was cancelled the week previous to the date for the closing of tenders. What is the status of the new building?

In all of this, is it possible for the decision with respect to the Income Security Branch and the new building to be changed? Can we salvage something from this?

Finally, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate undertake to discuss this matter with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is responsible for the Income Security Branch, and, indeed, the Deputy Prime Minister, who is all-powerful and has a great responsibility in this particular area. Will he arrange a meeting with these two gentlemen, the member of Parliament for the area concerned, my colleagues, Senator Macdonald, Senator Muir and Senator McEachen, who had a great deal to do with the decentralization program, my humble self, and others who may be interested in decentralization, to determine just what can be done on behalf of the people of that area, who are in dire need, to salvage this particular program, that is, both the decentralization of the Income Security Branch and the proposed new building?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has asked me a very large number of questions, and honourable senators know that it is not appropriate to ask a question of that nature in an oral Question Period because it does not lend itself to any kind of proper reply. All I can say to my honourable friend—and this applies to everything he has said to me this afternoon—is that I will read Hansard carefully to pick out those questions to which I think answers can be found, and I will give him the information when I can. However, I am going to treat this in the order of a written question.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

GARRISON DAM PROJECT

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government in the Senate and follows on what I said yesterday. I feel this matter should be clarified because of the importance of the Garrison diversion to Manitoba and the problems which could result in that province.

Yesterday, relying on memory, I attempted to outline the importance of the report of the committee which is now working on questions pertaining to the Garrison diversion. I tried to convey to the Leader of the Government that, at this particular moment, representation should be made to that committee and not to Congress. I am now in a position to refer my honourable friend to the guidelines which were put in place when the committee was set up. The guidelines state:

[Senator Graham.]

Under the guidelines laid down by Congress, when it authorized formation of the commission, the recommendations are to be binding and must be set in motion by the secretary.

That is the Secretary of State in the United States. The guideline goes on to state:

—until the commission has finished its work and its findings sent the secretary are made public, nobody will know in what form, if any, Garrison will emerge.

Honourable senators, I should like to re-emphasize what I said yesterday. The Government of the United States has a binding responsibility to act on the recommendation of that committee. Therefore, I feel it is of the greatest importance—and it will not affect our budget or other matters which were discussed—that joint representation be made by the Government of Canada and by the Government of Manitoba to that committee. As I pointed out yesterday, the last meeting is to be held on December 13 in Minot.

To be perfectly clear, honourable senators, I wish to emphasize the seriousness of this problem to the Leader of the Government in the Senate although I am sure he is aware of the various details. I was not quite certain whether he was aware of the importance of that particular committee, and my question is posed to re-emphasize the matter today and ask him once again to ask his government to make representation to that particular meeting in Minot.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I want my honourable friend to be quite clear about the fact that I understood him very well when he put the matter to me yesterday, and I understand it very well today.

The process taking place today in Washington is not connected with Congress; it involves the Secretary of State of the United States, and, through that channel, the views of Canada and Manitoba will be made available to the committee that meets in North Dakota before it completes its final report. I think we have a reasonable assurance that our views will be considered.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

REPORTED STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I would ask the Leader of the Government to dissociate himself from the statements attributed to his colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Honourable Sinclair Stevens, as reported in the Gazette of November 21, which states:

Job-creating foreign investment was rejected by the previous Liberal government "on the simple basis they didn't like foreigners.

He is reported to have further said:

They (the investors) just happened to be Germans or Japanese or something and they didn't like them—it's amazing.

He went on to say:

No more will we hear the lament of investors who say that they tried but could not invest in Canada.

I'm, every week if not more often, coming across things (foreign investment proposals) scuttled by the previous government on the simple basis that they didn't like foreigners and these foreigners were told there was no place for them in Canada.

I just can't believe it. Here you've got hundreds of thousands of people who could be put to work and these fellows (the Liberals) were playing some kind of a game of we don't like foreigners.

I am sure the Leader of the Opposition and my colleagues on this side know that this is a statement totally unworthy of any parliamentarian, regardless of party. The statement is mischievous, ludicrous and utterly without foundation. As someone who, at one time, was involved in the FIRA review process as a member of cabinet, I feel that Mr. Stevens' alleged remarks constitute "malice in Wonderland." The only criterion established by the previous government was whether or not a potential investment would be in the interests of Canadians, which is a rather worthy goal, I suggest.

I challenge Mr. Stevens, through the Leader of the Government in the Senate, to produce the details of one single FIRA decision decided on the basis of racial or national prejudice or any of the other biases cited so incorrectly by the honourable minister.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not quite sure whether the challenge was to me or to the Honourable Sinclair Stevens.

Senator Perrault: It is to the minister through the honourable senator, because our chamber is not graced with the minister's presence.

Senator Roblin: No, and probably that is just as well, because I am sure he would give my honourable friend his reply face to face.

No, I will not undertake to involve myself as my honourable friend's amanuensis in this matter. If he wishes to challenge Mr. Sinclair Stevens, he can do so in his own time and at his own pace, but he is certainly not going to do it through me.

What the minister says outside Parliament is a matter for which the minister himself is responsible. I must tell my honourable friend that he had better make his case directly to Mr. Sinclair Stevens.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, by way of a supplementary question, that is one of the weakest replies given in this chamber thus far by the Leader of the Government.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): I have heard weaker ones.

Senator Perrault: Here we have a colleague who made this charge initially in the House of Commons. He went on the steps of Parliament to repeat the charge. I believe there is such a thing as cabinet solidarity in that, when a speaker speaks in the other place and publicly makes serious charges of this kind—that, in effect, the previous government was made up of racists—surely there is a responsibility upon the Leader of the Government in the Senate to answer for that kind of irresponsible chatter by one of his colleagues. After all, the honourable senator from Manitoba has the responsibility to answer for this government directly to those in this chamber.

Senator Roblin: I apologize if my honourable friend does not like my answer or thinks that it is weak. Perhaps other senators would find a weaker answer if they were really pressed. If other honourable senators think that my answer leaves something to be desired—and no doubt some do—then I have to admit there is a possibility that my answer does not please my honourable friend. But that is the only answer he is going to get.

Senator Perrault: As a supplementary, may I ask, then, whether the Leader of the Government shares the views and sentiments of the Honourable Sinclair Stevens? Let him stand up and say whether he agrees or disagrees with the statement allegedly made by his cabinet colleague.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend knows perfectly well that the purpose of Question Period is to elicit facts, not opinions. I have already made it clear that I will not respond, in this house, to requests for my opinions on subjects.

TRANSPORT

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, strangely enough, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Do you not remember sitting on this side of the chamber?

Some Hon. Senators: Order!

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Will my colleagues give my honourable friend a chance to put his question? I should like to hear it.

Senator Robichaud: Yes, I wish honourable senators would give me a chance, because it is a very pertinent question—much like those that have been asked thus far, both yesterday and today.

I will provide honourable senators with a preamble to my question. We are all aware that the Prime Minister, during the election campaign, bitterly criticized the government for the overuse of airline privileges by cabinet ministers.

Some Hon. Senators: No!

Senator Robichaud: We all know, too, that members of the present government are using those aircraft much more than did members of the previous government.

An Hon. Senator: There are more of them!

Senator Robichaud: Recently an announcement was made to the effect that the government air fleet, which was formerly administered by the Ministry of Transport, would no longer be so administered. It was suggested that these services would be provided by some kind of fusion of the Department of National Defence and the Ministry of Transport. We are also aware that certain pilots have criticized the present government, saying that this was a means by which to hide the fact that it uses government aircraft much more frequently than did the previous government.

My question is: Will the present government in this case follow its policy of muzzling cabinet ministers and officials of various departments? Will the government try to muzzle those pilots? If so, what method will be used to muzzle them? I should like to know the date on which this will take place. I would also like to be provided with a copy of the memo that will be sent by the minister concerned in an attempt to muzzle those pilots.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I thank my friend for his candour. He told us that he was going to give a preamble to his question. In spite of the fact that rule 20B states that preambles are out of order, he went ahead and gave one.

Senator Frith: Just as you did.

Senator Roblin: I do not blame him, because everyone else on his side of the chamber has done so.

Senator Frith: Who has done it more than you?

Senator Robichaud: I am just following in your footsteps.

Senator Roblin: My friend says that he is following in my footsteps. If he did so a little more closely, he would be closer to following the rules.

At any rate, Senator Robichaud wants to know about muzzles. Well, I cannot tell him anything about muzzles because I do not know anything about them—no one has tried to muzzle me. But I do know that, some time on Friday, the Prime Minister will be dealing with the question of guidelines with respect to information available to the press and to the public. I recommend that my honourable friend observe what takes place, not in the hope that it will satisfy him, since I do not think he is in the mood to be satisfied, but at least to give him some idea of what the guidelines will be.

THE ENVIRONMENT

SOIL CONSERVATION

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate who suggested yesterday that I should follow our Parliamentary rules when asking questions.

However, if I compare my question with those asked yesterday and for many years in this House I find that it meets fairly well all the criteria, and while Parliamentary rules may be important, I believe that precedents also count for a lot in Parliament.

However, out of respect for the Government Leader, I shall put my question to him immediately.

The Hon. Senator will know that the Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry tabled its report on the very serious problem of soil erosion last summer. This committee therefore deserves the congratulations and gratitude of farmers everywhere in Canada.

This subject is very familiar to me, as I became interested in it even before coming to Parliament. I therefore have some expertise on the subject.

The Committee recommends that:

—soil erosion be placed on the agenda of the next meeting of First Ministers—

This recommendation is first and foremost among those made by this committee, which has certainly done excellent work.

We are all aware, as is the Government Leader in the Senate, that an important conference of Canadian First Ministers has been called early next year. I would therefore ask the Government Leader whether this recommendation which had the support of all the members of the committee, will be considered by the Government and will indeed be on the agenda of the next first ministers' conference.

I know that the Government Leader cannot evade the issue as he is a member of the Cabinet. He is therefore certainly in a position to tell us whether this recommendation has already been considered. If not, will he assure us today that he will submit this recommendation to his Cabinet colleagues?

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I want to tell my honourable friend that I have not given up on him yet. If he really tries, he can reduce his question to that short, sharp, succinct manner which is prescribed as being desirable in all of the rules of Parliament. Although he has given us two very good examples of how not to proceed, I have not yet given up on him. I think I will be able to count on him to speak to a question in a way that is more in keeping with our parliamentary traditions.

I point out to him that, in the Senate, Question Period did not initially take its present form. I ask those honourable senators senior to me to reflect on the validity of my remark, in the context that it was not until we had four cabinet ministers sitting in the Senate that Question Period became what it has been. Before that time, it was quite different.

Honourable senators, the point I am trying to make is that the circumstances under which Question Period now takes place—namely, having no portfolio-carrying minister in the Senate—make a difference. I think that, in due course, honourable senators will come to appreciate that fact.

Coming to the point—

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Good.

Senator Roblin: —I think that my honourable friend is generous and quite correct in saying that a good report was produced by the committee of the Senate dealing with soil deterioration and associated matters. I do not believe that it has yet been tabled in this chamber, although honourable senators can correct me if my memory is wrong. I hope that before long Senator Sparrow, who was the chairman of the committee at the time the report was written, quite apart from whether or not he is the chairman of the new committee, will have what I think is the well-deserved privilege of presenting that report to this house. As to whether or not the subject matter should be referred to one of the conferences that are planned, that is an interesting suggestion. I am not able to say what consideration has been given to it as yet, but I see no reason why he cannot float this idea to see whether some satisfactory action can be taken.

● (1500)

Senator Corbin: I really wonder why I, as a new senator, have been singled out to be lectured to as to how to put questions in this institution. I am a parliamentarian with 16 years experience and I thought that I was providing the Leader of the Government with useful information—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Corbin: —with useful information in establishing the foundation for my question, so as to afford him a reasonable opportunity to give me an intelligent answer; and also to facilitate his own comprehension of my preoccupations and the preoccupation of farmers right across this country. However, if I am to be continually lectured in this fashion, I would recommend to the Leader of the Government that he establish a school for new senators, if he so wishes. But I would ask him to stop intimidating me.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I promise not to comment in future in an adverse way on my honourable friend's parliamentary technique. I will simply leave it up to him to do what he thinks is right.

[Translation]

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary.

I shall get down to the substance of my question right away, because I remember someone telling me, two minutes after setting foot in this Chamber, that people were more relaxed in the Senate. Frankly, despite all the velvet, I can feel the iron fist.

So to get back to my question concerning soil conservation, I am not satisfied at all with the answer I got from the Leader of the Government just now. Whether or not the report was tabled or considered, it seems to me that the Canadian public and certainly Canadian farmers would agree, especially considering the fact that the report was discussed in the press and received very favourable editorial commentary in all Canadian newspapers as far as I can tell, that the time has come to act as the Government promised.

I therefore repeat my question and my request that the Leader of the Government undertake today to put this item on the agenda of the first conference of Canadian First Ministers.

This was recommended unanimously by the committee, in other words by his own colleagues here in the Senate. I would like to know whether he is willing to make that commitment today.

[Later:]

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I want to tell Senator Corbin that I made an error in replying to his intervention earlier today about the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture following its study of soil conservation. I tabled this report on November 6, and it was brought to my attention by the Clerk of the Senate to whom I am grateful, but I wanted to correct the record in this respect.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, on that same topic, I believe we authorized the committee to publish the report even though the Senate would not be sitting. Therefore, that completes the record because they published it before it was tabled. I believe it was published a month or two ago, and now, as Senator Roblin has said, it has been tabled.

[Translation]

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I appreciate the comments made by the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I want to assure him of my full co-operation. I was aware that the report had been tabled.

Perhaps I may be allowed to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate—considering his comments on my question—whether honourable senators will have an opportunity to examine this report at a later date.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Anyone may do so.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): If I am not mistaken, to consider the report we must first table a notice of inquiry.

Senator Flynn: Anyone may do so.

Senator Frith: Yes, anyone may table such a motion.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

On the Order:

Resuming the Debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, seconded by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to Her Speech at the opening of the session—(Honourable Senator Bielish).

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, Senator Bielish is unavoidably absent. In a telephone call she asked me to speak in her place and, with your permission, I am prepared to speak now.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Yuzyk: Honourable senators, following the custom in this chamber, I should first like to congratulate Senator Guy Charbonneau—who today is absent from the chamber—on his elevation to the speakership of the Senate in this the first session of the Thirty-third Parliament of Canada. Having known him for several years as a diligent member of this house, I am confident that he will perform his duties with zeal, fairness and impartiality. I extend my congratulations also to the Speaker pro tempore, Senator Martial Asselin. I congratulate also the new Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen, a new senator who has had a distinguished career in the other house and in former Liberal governments. His vast experience will, I am sure, bring a new dimension to the debates in and the work of the Senate.

I am happy also to congratulate Senator Duff Roblin as the new Leader of the Government in the Senate. His is a heavy and responsible task which I am sure, he will carry out at a high level, conscientiously, fervently and constructively in the best interests of our great country. His experience as a former premier of Manitoba will be a great asset in conducting the affairs of the upper chamber. If I can be of any assistance, I should like to offer him my cooperation and, of course, my best wishes. I believe it would not be out of order if I acknowledged that my nomination to the Senate by Prime Minister John G. Diefenbaker in February 1963 was the result of Premier Roblin's recommendation.

Hon. Jack Marshall: A good choice.

Senator Yuzyk: Consequently I look forward to a friendly association with Senator Roblin and the fulfillment of many of the objectives of the Progressive Conservative Party; hopefully also some of my dreams.

Honourable senators, with the Speech from the Throne of November 5, 1984, the government of Prime Minister Brian Mulroney has presented, in broad outline, an ambitious program based on commitments made during the election. With an overwhelming mandate from Canadians, the government has announced "the beginning of a new era of national reconciliation, economic renewal and social justice". The mandate gives the government a magnificent opportunity "to build a renewed national consensus". Canadians have great expectations which I believe will be gradually realized.

It is my intention in this debate to focus on culture, a subject that affects the lives of all Canadians, but which usually does not receive much priority. I am happy to note that the Speech from the Throne states:

The purpose of my government is to renew the confidence of Canadians that Parliament is truly the voice of the people, that government is their servant, and that federalism is the means to harmonize and preserve the splendid diversity of this land.

The federal government has committed itself to co-operate with the provincial governments "in supporting official language minorities and in fostering the rich multicultural character of Canada".

Only a few senators today may remember the thrust of my maiden speech delivered in this chamber on March 3, 1964. My theme was that Canada was a bilingual and multicultural nation and that the policies of the federal government must reflect that reality. At that time it was a voice speaking in the wilderness. Since then we have witnessed the passing and implementation of the Official Languages Act of 1969, recognizing French together with English as official languages in the federal parliament and the federal services.

On October 8, 1971, Prime Minister Trudeau announced a federal policy of multiculturalism, which was unanimously endorsed by the leaders of all parties and the Parliament of Canada. In 1972, the government established a Ministry of State responsible for multiculturalism. Dr. Stanley Haidasz, now Senator Haidasz—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Yuzyk: —was the first minister to hold that portfolio. Later Senator Joseph Guay held the position. The new Canadian constitution of 1982 has entrenched multiculturalism, thus recognizing that Canada is a bilingual and multicultural nation. We have proven to ourselves and to the world that by democratic means and goodwill we have achieved unity in continuing diversity.

Canadians became aware, and I believe with pride, of our unique status in the world when Pope John Paul II, the spiritual leader of nearly 1 billion Catholics, during his visit to Winnipeg in September, praised Canadian federalism, bilingualism and multiculturalism. The thrust of his message was unmistakable when he said:

The historical experience of the two founding peoples of Canada who bound themselves to live in mutual respect for the unique cultural identity of each other has providentially created that atmosphere of respect for cultural diversity which characterizes Canada today . . .

In her own multicultural interaction, Canada not only offers to the world a creative vision of society, but she also has a splendid opportunity to show consistency between what she believes and what she does.

The Pope noted that Canada developed as a country of immigrants and urged Canadians to continue to show love to immigrants and refugees. Here is his exhortation:

Remember, O Canada, that the greatest richness of your multicultural character is to be able to reach out and help others—your brothers and sisters in need.

This was a great tribute to the freedom and democracy that we practise in Canada. It also reminds Canadian governments and our people of the tremendous responsibilities that face us in upholding these sacred principles and ideals.

Honourable senators, it is my firm belief that the Mulroney government is now establishing a new direction for the development of bilingualism and multiculturalism. There are several persons of non-British and non-French origin who hold important cabinet posts in the new government. The Minister of State for Multiculturalism, the Honourable Jack Murta, stated that he will be guided by the recommendations of the Conference on Multiculturalism which was held last June in Toronto and in which approximately 500 delegates representing most of Canada's over 70 ethnocultural groups participated actively. There the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, Brian Mulroney, and other spokesmen declared that "multiculturalism is part of what it means to be a Canadian."

Recently, in his address to the Federation of Chinese Canadian Professionals in Toronto, the Honourable Jack Murta outlined government policy in this field. He asserted that "multiculturalism means that no Canadian will be relegated to the status of a second-class citizen and the goals of multiculturalism are the achievement of equality, justice and freedom for every citizen irrespective of race, colour or creed."

The government intends to pursue the following initiatives: Convene in the near future a federal-provincial conference to achieve a national understanding and agreement for the implementation of its multicultural policy; consider and implement the recommendations of the Parliamentary Task Force on Visible Minorities; redress past injustices to ethnocultural communities such as the Japanese Canadians who suffered during the last war; set up an internal committee to sensitize all government departments to multicultural concerns; appoint competent and qualified men and women who reflect our diversity to positions on government boards, agencies, crown corporations and senior public services; ensure fair representations and depiction of minorities in all government advertising; undertake to help Canadians understand their roots through heritage language training and cultural retention studies in the belief that fluency in heritage languages is a tremendous asset, both to the individual and to the country; and facilitate education as the key to better understanding and to the eradication of racism, hate propaganda and ignorance.

It is evident that the federal government is committed to the "creation of a genuine and substantive multicultural society." The minister stressed that in order to succeed there must be a partnership between government and community to pursue these objectives.

Honourable senators, I believe that the government will gradually implement this section of the Speech from the Throne that refers to the support of official language minorities and the fostering of the rich multicultural character of Canada. I hope and believe that Canadians will co-operate in this broad program to develop a sensitive, compassionate and just society to make Canada a better place for all her citizens.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, my first remark is to congratulate our Speaker on the vital and significant appointment he has received. It is an assignment which he will carry out in the fine tradition of his illustrious predecessor, my friend Senator Riel. I trust that my friend, Senator Asselin, the Speaker pro tempore, will convey my good wishes to his honour.

The government leader in the Senate is at once an old friend and political rival. I am sure he knows that I have always respected his ability and his commitment to our country, to his province and to his party. I wish him well.

In congratulating my own leader, I include all new senators. I met the leader in 1961 when we both worked for the Right Honourable L. B. Pearson, who was and still is our gentle mentor and our continuing inspiration. Since those days, Senator MacEachen's career has really been the stuff of legends. He is a priceless asset to this chamber and certainly to the Liberal Party.

This is my first speech in this chamber in some years. I am, in fact, prepared to describe myself as a born-again senator. An intense degree of my political activity over a number of years culminated in my direction of the final four weeks of the 1984 Liberal campaign. It is therefore incumbent on me to salute the Right Honourable the Prime Minister on his massive victory. We were, to understate it, routed. Candidly, I can think of a number of reasons why we lost that election, but none would be as important as the reason the Tories won the election, which, of course, is the remarkable campaign skill of the right honourable gentleman. Honourable senators, in this spirit I trust you will allow me the luxury of several partisan observations about this new Tory government. I propose to start with the cabinet, the largest and most over-stocked cabinet in Canadian history. In this chamber we are supposed to represent our regions. My designation is York, the historic former name of Toronto. The population of Metropolitan Toronto now exceeds 3 million and on September 4, it sent about two dozen Tory MPs to Ottawa. Successive generations of Liberal governments have traditionally given Toronto six ministers. So, what have the Tories given us? First, not one minister to represent our teeming multicultural population—not one. Then, honourable senators, can you possibly believe this? They have given us just three ministers in total—two from Bay Street and the other one, who is the only one who knows anything about Toronto, David Crombie, they have sent off to Inuvik, Aklavik and points north.

Quite properly, the cabinet has an elaborate committee structure. Miss MacDonald sits on five committees, as does Mr. Crosbie. Mr. Wilson sits on four committees, as does Mr. de Cotret. Believe it or not, the lonely David Crombie, the once upon a time tiny perfect mayor of my city, who knows and understands Toronto at least as well as he knows and understands the far north, sits on just one committee. Of course, none of this is news. Mr. Crombie was shortchanged by the Clark government and he is now no doubt paying the price for running at the last Tory leadership convention—that is, running over to John Crosbie.

Be that as it may, I made my way over to the other place on leaders' day and I could not have been more delighted. I watched John Turner turn in a flawless performance.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Davey: To quote Richard Gwyn he was "funny and feisty". It was a solid beginning for Mr. Turner. Honourable senators will now ask: What about the Prime Minister? I do not want to make a partisan observation on this occasion so, instead, let me quote Jeffrey Simpson who wrote in the following day's Globe and Mail:

If Brian Mulroney had performed in the televised debates as he did in the Throne Speech debate, the election might have been a lot closer. Mr. Mulroney was at his worst yesterday—hammy, full of himself, larding cliché, rehashing all the themes of his marshmallow campaign, sounding to all but his adoring MPs like a parish pump politician who has suddenly arrived in the big time.

It was a first speech quite unworthy of a new Prime Minister to the House of Commons.

All that applause Mr. Mulroney will get from the 211 Tory MPs is going to sound wonderful on television and radio. Put simply, if they'll give him a standing ovation for a speech like yesterday's, they'll cheer anything. Mr. Mulroney would do well to remember, however, that others too are listening.

In my opinion, honourable senators, the single most important reason why the Tories won the election was the active intervention of the "big blue machine".

I would like to digress for just a moment. I think it is possible to feel sorry for William Davis who is, in my opinion, the only statesman the Tories have produced in a generation. Mr. Davis could have won the country, but he could not win his own party's convention. To me that says something about the Tory Party.

John Turner was 100 per cent on mark when he described Prime Minister Mulroney as a "let's pretend Liberal". He was. After all, it was expedient politics. This is still a "small" liberal country.

We heard a great deal from Mr. Mulroney in the campaign about "jobs, jobs, jobs". We heard him speak about universality as a sacred pledge and about the virtues of a mixed economy. We heard precious little about the deficit, about privatization and about the glories of Ronald Reagan. However, make no mistake, honourable senators, to the inevitable and eventual chagrin of Canadians, we are discovering each and every day that a Tory must be a Tory.

Honourable senators, I wish to say a word about universality, a topic about which we are apparently going to have a protracted public debate. My own position is clear. I am and I will be 100 per cent in favour of the universality of all social programs. Conceivably, some existing programs could be replaced in total by new and improved 100 per cent universal programs. But we do not want to see any means tests or any trickle—down Tory charity. We are not about to turn our backs on 25 years of Liberal social programs. We are not about to abandon programs which demean no one, least of all lower and middle class Canadians.

One of my immediate concerns is the Prime Minister's understanding of a sacred trust. He told Canadians that universality was a sacred trust. Those were not my words, nor were they the words of John Turner. Those were Mr. Mulroney's words first used, I believe, on August 18 last when he said, and I quote "... a sacred trust not to be tampered with." Early in November he again confirmed in a press interview that universality was a "sacred trust". We are now told that this new government is prepared to do exactly what the Prime Minister pledged it would not do, that is, to tamper with universality—some "sacred trust"! The Prime Minister's shocking disregard for his own sacred trust is worrisome in the extreme.

There is yet more on the same subject. In an interview which appeared in last Saturday's Toronto Star the Prime Minister was asked about the sacred trust, to which he responded:

It's not be be interpreted literally because it's not applied literally except in certain limited circumstances.

Honourable senators, welcome to the new era of 1984 Tory doublespeak.

A few days after the Speech from the Throne, the Minister of Finance offered Canadians further evidence that these, after all, are the same old Tories. Already in this chamber, and also in the other place, my leaders have questioned the need for protracted consultation and that secrecy—and we had all better realize it—which has already become the hallmark of this government. In the best Tory tradition Mr. Wilson focused on deficit reduction, not "jobs, jobs, jobs". When Informetrica Limited, a private economic forecasting firm, reported this program of cuts would cost the economy 50,000 jobs next year the Minister of Finance said that he was not impressed. Perhaps he was not impressed, but I would suggest a great many Canadians were.

This Tory turn to the right has, of course, delighted the country's big business establishment. This big business establishment, as honourable senators know, has its very own lobby right here in Ottawa, the so-called Business Council on National Issues. I would like honourable senators to listen carefully to the following quotation from the November 13 issue of the Toronto Star:

The first page in the new Progressive Conservative economic guide to the future looks like a leaf inserted by the Business Council on National Issues.

The initial steps taken last week by Finance Minister Michael Wilson ... were first outlined in early September by the blue-ribbon business lobbying organization.

I find it passing curious that this government gives the lowest possible priority to competition legislation. This is in spite of the fact that corporate concentration in Canada is increasing at an alarming rate. I would like to quote from Alexander Ross's introduction to his fine new book The Traders, in which he states:

Consider the structure of corporate Canada: There are about 750,000 incorporated businesses. About 700,000 of them have annual sales of less than $2 million—we're mostly talking here about variety stores, dress shops, Chinese restaurants, and men trying to make a living with a backhoe or a dumptruck. Another 21,000 companies have annual sales of between $2 million and $20 million.

There are only about 2,000 "big" businesses with annual sales of more than $20 million. Needless to say, many of the largest companies are foreign-owned, and many of them won't sell shares to Canadian investors. (General Motors Canada is a sadly typical example.) What we have, in other words, is a woefully lopsided structure. On the bottom, hundreds of thousands of inherently small businesses, with very marginal prospects for future growth; on the top, a small number of quite large companies. The largest firms tend to prosper not through innovation, but by swallowing smaller companies.

Honourable senators, so much has been written and spoken about the cuts in expenditure announced recently by the Minister of Finance. I would like to draw your attention to only two of these cuts which delightfully illustrate Tory priorities and the Tory mentality. First, foreign aid. All those pious platitudes about Ethiopia ring hollow when placed up against Mr. Wilson's foreign aid cut, a cut, incidentally, which was too much for even the Globe and Mail. Let me quote their editorial:

Mr. Clark announced at the UN: 'Our new Government intends to maintain Canada's commitment to reaching 0.7 per cent of the GNP by 1990 in Official Development Assistance.' He should have checked first with Finance Minister Michael Wilson, who overrode him in his economic statement last week.

The Finance Minister, who plays to Bay Street rather than Addis Ababa, announced that, due to the 'serious domestic economic situation', the 0.7 per cent level would be deferred until 1995. Canada's development assistance would continue to rise as a proportion of GNP, but not as rapidly as previously promised.

This is an unfortunate retreat from a worthy commitment.

Then, honourable senators, every bit as short-sighted and possibly even more mean-spirited is the dramatic increase in fees for those seeking to become Canadian citizens. The fees will increase from $15 to $40 for an adult and from $8 to $25 for a minor. Honourable senators, are we no longer anxious to attract more and more new citizens? We should be removing roadblocks, rather than increasing fees for struggling immigrants who want only to become Canadians. What mindless logic! What false economy! What generosity of spirit!

In closing, honourable senators, I want to say a word about political appointments. Few in this chamber can take umbrage at political appointments which are very much part of our political system. Certainly, my own Senate appointment was political, as I suspect was even that of my honourable friend, Senator Flynn.

However, honourable senators, I owe an apology to my honourable friends opposite because, while appearing on CTV's Question Period shortly after the election, I pointed out that forty years of Tory patronage appointments in Ontario had not interrupted forty years in power. At that time, I went on to suggest that the federal Tories would make as many or more political appointments as had the Liberals, but I was wrong and, worse still, I was unfair. It was, after all, New Democrat Stephen Lewis who went to the United Nations; it was Liberal Lloyd Francis who went to Portugal. Clearly, it is the dawn of a whole new era; a political Age of Aquarius with the Tories prepared to let the sun shine in.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Don't hold your breath.

Senator Davey: I have heard the rumours about the 500 Liberal lawyers who were replaced by Tories. I just do not believe that; I think that is a Press Gallery rumour. In my naiveté, honourable senators, and yes, in my cynicism, I had actually imagined a veritable flood of New Tory senators: Findlay MacDonald; Norman Atkins; Dalton Camp; Eddie Goodman; Michel Cogger; Bill Morrison; Frank Moores; Bill Neville; Paul Curley; Hugh Segal—I could go on. But I was wrong. These appointments are not going to take place.

Senator Steuart: Soon; maybe not tomorrow, but soon.

Senator Davey: We are into a new era of non-political Senate appointments, for which I suppose the great credit goes to the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau who, after all, sent us such non-political appointees as Royce Frith, Michael Pitfield, Michael Kirby and Colin Kenny. Therefore I say to the new Prime Minister, congratulations; bring on the poets, the artists, the academics, the architects, the clergymen, the ballet dancers—

Senator Steuart: The NDP.

Senator Davey: Incidentally, I say to the Prime Minister that there is no need to worry about all those Tory war horses I listed earlier because they have each opened their own political consultancy, in any event. It is far more lucrative than the Senate, and all you need is a Progressive Conservative membership card and a government telephone directory.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I was in Belgium with a group of veterans marking the fortieth anniversary of the liberation of that country by the Canadian army when the Throne Speech was read in this chamber. However, I secured a copy from the Canadian embassy in Brussels and read it carefully at that time. I would now like to make a few comments on the Speech from the Throne this afternoon.

First, however, I must not neglect the formalities which, while they are customary, are nonetheless sincere and extend my congratulations to Speaker Charbonneau and to you, Senator Asselin, as Speaker pro tempore. The selection of the government leader in the person of Duff Roblin is very pleasing indeed to me. I have known Senator Roblin from the time that he was Premier of Manitoba and I think I could say without exaggerating that we have become friends.

By the same token, I have known Allan MacEachen, the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, for many more years than that, and I welcome his addition to this chamber, as well as that of the other new senators. May I venture to say to the new senators that if you become working senators—and by what I know of the careers of nearly all of you, I feel confident that you will become working senators—I think you will be surprised at the usefulness of the work done by this chamber, especially in the committees of this chamber. You will discover the work to be much more useful than you probably acknowledged when you were occupied with your duties in the other place.

Tributes have been paid by previous speakers to Senators Cook and Donahoe who have retired from the Senate and, more sadly, of course, to Senator Dan Riley whose death removed him from the Senate just a few weeks ago. I join in the sentiments of regret, and particularly in the sentiments of condolence to Senator Riley's family.

Since I had not been in attendance here in recent days, honourable senators, I also read the speeches of those who preceded me in this debate, and I want particularly to make reference to the speech of Senator Macquarrie, the mover of this address, and to that of Senator Arthur Tremblay. These two able men acquitted themselves in the manner in which I would have expected them to have done, as have the others who have preceded me in this debate.

I do want to point out one thing, however, which occurs to me as a result of an observation made by Senator Macquarrie and which is to be found on page 16 of the Debates of the Senate when he talked about the imbalance in this chamber and said:

—a situation which has not been so extreme, I think, since Confederation—

I would like to point out that that is not quite true. As a matter of fact, in 1897, at the end of the Sir John A. Macdonald era, only 18.5 per cent of the members of the Senate were Liberals. At the present time, even with the addition of the ten new senators, we have 22.2 per cent Progressive Conservatives in this chamber today. I have all the figures before me, having obtained them because of some remarks made by the late Senator G. I. Smith some years ago. I never had a chance to refute those remarks but, at that time, I pointed out that the last Liberal Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau, appointed to the Senate more non-party supporters than all of the rest of the Prime Ministers of Canada put together from Confederation up to the present time.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Just imagine what would have transpired if he had not done so.

Senator Hicks: That is true, of course. I acknowledge that.

The comprehensive fiscal and economic analysis contained in the speech of Senator Gigantès on November 20 was, in my view, extremely interesting, especially his references to the deficit and his cautions that we should not become unduly obsessed by that deficit. I, personally, am opposed to the making of inroads into the universality of our social, health and welfare programs in order to reduce the deficit of Canada. I hope that we will proceed with great care when we address ourselves to these problems.

Now let me make specific reference to some paragraphs in the Speech from the Throne. The first paragraph is found on page 3 of the official text that I have before me. I was delighted to see that there is an intention to appoint a Parliamentary Task Force to reform the House of Commons. After all the talk we have had to put up with over the past several years about reforming the Senate, while at the same time observing the inefficient manner in which the House of Commons operated in comparison to our chamber, I am delighted that the new government is going to select a task force to address itself to reforming the House of Commons. We shall watch its activities with the greatest possible interest.

I have already made some reference to the deficit and to the paragraph that says that we must deal urgently with the deficit and that that is beyond dispute. I think that that is beyond dispute, but I think that we have to be careful as to how we allocate funds in order to reduce the deficit without doing damage to programs that, in my opinion, are vital to the well-being, economic and otherwise, of our society.

In the very next paragraph to that reference to the deficit is this statement:

Second, my government will pursue approaches to improve the efficiency and flexibility of our capital markets; to improve job opportunities for Canadians through responsive market-oriented training programs; and to increase investments in research and development to improve our productivity.

Those were the words that were put into the mouth of the Governor General of Canada, but what are the facts? The facts are that there are all kinds of statements being made by the new ministers of this government to the effect that they are going to do just the opposite.

Indeed, in the Globe and Mail of November 16, an article appears which starts as follows:

The decision of the federal Government to axe three new technology research institutes is perceived as flying in the face of earlier Tory promises to double research and development expenditures and improve the linkages between government labs, universities and industry.

It seems to me that in the modern technological society in which we are living, honourable senators, Canada cannot afford to fall further behind in research and development activities. I said "to fall further behind", after careful reflection, because unfortunately in high technology activities Canada is not in the forefront among the nations of the western world. We were at the end of World War II, but we have fallen behind, and this is not the time—and, indeed, over any reasonable period of time it does not make good economic sense to cut back on research and development activities upon which future industries and the future economy of this country will depend and with which they are going to be very, very closely linked.

There is another interesting paragraph—and I hope the government can do something about it—which states:

Third, my government will introduce for consideration during this session proposals to enhance risk taking, innovation and reward among entrepreneurs, especially in the small and medium-sized business sector.

I will skip a few pages now and come to this particular paragraph which struck me as being rather peculiar. It refers to discriminatory clauses in the Indian Act. That says, in part:

—amendments to the Divorce Act, and measures to control pornography and sexually abusive broadcasting.

Then in the same paragraph it says:

—to establish a national system for the enforcement of maintenance orders.

I do not know how maintenance orders got tied in with pornography, but the author of this Speech put those words into the mouth of our Governor General.

I have a caution on this; we have to be very careful in trying to legislate against pornography. A great deal of that is a matter of taste and, perhaps, a matter of morality. As such, can it be dealt with by legislation? I think that we come very near to stifling the freedom of the press and the freedom of expression when we begin to legislate in that area. I shall watch with interest what is done here.

As for introducing a national system for the enforcement of maintenance orders, I would certainly welcome that, if it is possible to do so. I think that that will require more than action by this government here in Ottawa; I think it will require the co-operation of the provinces of Canada as well. I hope that that may be forthcoming.

I read with interest the paragraph on social security, which states:

Canadians value and support the comprehensive social security system that has been put in place over many years by the federal and provincial governments. Many areas of this system must be strengthened to respond to the changing nature and needs of our society.

Well, talk about abandoning the concept of universality certainly does not jibe very well with that paragraph, and I hope that the sentiments expressed in this paragraph in the Speech from the Throne will be the sentiments that prevail.

In a further paragraph the following appears:

My Ministers will introduce measures to improve the financial situation of Canada's war veterans.

Certainly none of us can oppose that. I certainly do not want my remarks which show some reservations to incur the wrath of Senator Marshall, who, quite properly, never misses an opportunity to speak on behalf of Canada's veterans. I, myself, have visited, over the past two years, battlefields and graveyards where Canadians fell in Europe, in Dieppe, and more recently in the Walcheren Peninsula area of Belgium and Holland.

At the same time. I do not think we Canadians should be ashamed of the way we have treated our veterans. I, myself, am a veteran. Fortunately, I came through the war relatively unscathed, and have not been dependent on the Department of Veterans Affairs for assistance other than assistance to purchase my first home under the Veteran's Land Act.

In any event, we Canadians have a good record as to the way in which we have treated our veterans. While there are always ways in which this treatment can be improved, we should not take a backward position in respect of the treatment of our veterans. If we are hard pressed for money, I suggest that there are other social security and welfare programs which, in my opinion, would have to weight above the programs for the treatment of the veterans of Canada's two World Wars.

The next paragraph, which I was delighted to read, states:

As a country rich in human resources, Canada owes much to those who have dedicated themselves to cultural, artistic and athletic endeavour. In a variety of areas, my government will be addressing itself to the challenge of encouraging those individuals who inspire Canadians to new levels of excellence.

Hence, a cut of some $3 million from the budget of the Canada Council! I suppose that that follows logically from that paragraph!

At the top of page 12, the following appears:

Most abhorrent to a nation respectful of the law are acts of violence against guardians of the law whom we have appointed to protect us. The recent murders of several policemen in Canada have shocked our people. Parliament shares the sense of sadness and loss felt by the families and colleagues of those policemen who died on duty.

I suspect that this is too narrow a reference and ought to apply to persons other than police officers in the performance of their duties.

Again, these are fine words, but we will be watching to see what action the government proposes to take. Will we be given the opportunity to debate the whole question of capital punishment again, for example, as many people think should be done? Many people think that parliamentarians should address themselves to that problem.

That constitutes the individual paragraphs of the speech that I wanted to make reference to. We will watch the performance and judge the performance against the words contained in this address and expressed by ministers of the new government in several fora throughout this country.

I wish the new government well in the interests and on behalf of all Canadians, but I want to say this: Because they have made excessive promises and commitments during an election campaign, that will not induce me to let them off the hook when they say: "Oh, well, we can't really do that", and turn their back on the promises which were the basis of their election to power in this Canada of ours.

On motion of Senator Murray, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lafond, seconded by the Honourable Senator Thompson:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to hear evidence on and to consider matters relating to national defence;

That 12 Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the Special Committee;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada, and to such places abroad where members of the Canadian Armed Forces may be stationed;

That the Committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate;

That the Committee be empowered to retain the services of professional and clerical staff as deemed advisable by the Committee; and

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject before the Committee during the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the Committee. (Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this motion was discussed at a caucus of the members of the opposition in the Senate yesterday, and while some senators expressed reservations at the breadth of the terms and, in particular, felt that the committee perhaps would only need to be established in order to complete the report that is now under way, we know from answers to questions that I asked Senator Lafond that his intention is not to limit the authority that is given to him in this motion. Despite the fact that there were some reservations about that, and some honourable senators on both sides may wish to express similar reservations, it is not our intention to ask for an amendment of the motion to that effect, but simply to record our concern. When the question comes up of continuing the committee's activity after the report, there may be other views expressed. We do not intend to move an amendment to the motion nor do we intend to oppose it.

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, November 22, 1984

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

TWENTY-FIFTH MEETING—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday, November 29, 1984, I will call the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-fifth Meeting of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, held at Dorado, Puerto Rico, from March 8 to 12, 1984, and to the report of the said meeting.

REPORT OF CANADIAN DELEGATION PRINTED AS AN APPENDIX

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: The Clerk is in possession of the report in both official languages, and I should like to have it printed as an appendix to Debates of the Senate of this day so that senators will have the opportunity to examine it in order to participate in a discussion on it.

As honourable senators will see when they read the report, the meeting dealt with a great many subjects which were of considerable interest to both Canada and the United States. I hope that we will have an opportunity for a good discussion on it.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix, p. 132).

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, November 27, 1984, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: If honourable senators would like to know what is on the agenda for next week, I would be only too happy to oblige.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before voting on the motion, I will oblige my friend, the Deputy Leader of the Government, by asking him what is on the agenda for next week.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I understand that on Tuesday and Wednesday we shall continue with the Throne Speech, those being the final two days of that debate. We have several pieces of legislation coming from the House of Commons. We anticipate Bill C-4, which is the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Bill, and Bill C-6, to amend the Saltfish Act.

There are several other bills that we may receive, among them a borrowing bill which may not come until later, but, in any event, Bill C-4 and Bill C-6 we are fairly sure of receiving.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CABINET

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate arising out of some questions I posed earlier on the subject of this government's growing addiction to secrecy. At the time that I asked the question, Senator Roblin stated that I was really only presenting him with opinions of journalists. So, let us deal with facts—and there are several parts to this question.

Part of my earlier question was that Mr. Dye, the Auditor General, had complained that he would not be getting cabinet papers to help him do his job. Perhaps we will be able to change this headline so that it reads: "Roblin Says Cabinet Papers To Be Furnished As A Fact". In any event, we shall see. Is it a fact that the government will not furnish cabinet documents to the Auditor General? That is the first part.

Further, on the question of information, is it a fact that the Minister of Finance has urged the media to be careful when writing about changes to government social programs, in order that they do not alarm people who are dependent on those programs.

Further, is it a fact that the Prime Minister has dressed down our Secretary of State for External Affairs for alleging the existence of some conspiracy among members of the press to bring down the government?

Further, is it a fact that, although the Minister of Communications has said that the cuts that are to apply to the CBC—which were the subject of a question yesterday—are simply being reviewed and are not in effect; that, in fact, several regions have been told that they must cut down their local programming by 18 per cent, which, when coupled with the protection that they must give network programs originating from those regions, will mean cuts of something in the neighbourhood of 30 per cent and; that this move will seriously threaten any regional programs in places such as Vancouver and Winnipeg?

The last part of my question is: Is it a fact that, although during the campaign, speaking on the question of patronage, the Prime Minister said that he would transfer the whole subject of patronage to a parliamentary committee, he has now given the patronage question over to the Ritz-Carlton “gang of three”—in other words, that three of his cronies will, in fact, be monitoring and looking after patronage appointments?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, these questions are not such that they lend themselves to a one word answer, such as yes, no, or even maybe.

I can tell my honourable friend that the Prime Minister will be making a statement on that subject tomorrow morning, I believe, and members of the media have been invited to attend on that occasion. At that time, the question of the channels of communication as between the press, members of the general public and members of Parliament with the government and the public service will be addressed. I think that I had better postpone any comments on that subject until the Prime Minister has addressed the matter, because he will be giving an up-to-date and authoritative statement on the government's position. There is nothing I can add to that, as I am quite sure my honourable friend knows.

The dressing down of the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Senator Frith: Could that at least not have been done in secret?

Senator Roblin: If it had happened, it would have been done in secret, but I do not think that that ever happened. I cannot accept any responsibility for the rumours that appear in the press, and my honourable friend knows that. Therefore, I will not make any comment on that rumour, although I am tempted to.

On the question of the “Ritz-Carlton Club”, this is the first I have heard of that one. That is a very interesting situation.

Senator Frith: I can tell you more.

Senator Roblin: I do not know about patronage, but there are some gentlemen sitting on the other side of the house who can give me lessons in spades on patronage.

Senator Frith: We could never give a Tory any lesson on that.

Senator Roblin: You cannot give the Tories lessons on anything.

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Frith: Those of us who come from Ontario have studied at the feet of the Tories.

Senator Roblin: But on patronage in the federal sphere, I yield to my honourable friend's expertise in the matter. So, I am afraid I am unable to satisfy his curiosity to any further extent.

Senator Frith: Anything I know I learned from Bill Davis.

Hon. David Walker: He doesn't know you.

RULES OF THE SENATE

RULE 20—ORAL QUESTIONS—SUGGESTED AMENDMENT

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he would like to modify a statement he made on November 20, 1984, at page 81 of the Senate Hansard, where he stated—and I only wish to quote a few sentences so that the meaning is clear—the following:

If you expect replies from the government, only persons authorized by the government can make those replies. Under our present Constitution that is limited to ministers of the Crown or, in some cases, to parliamentary secretaries—

My concern is that the deputy leader, the house leader, has made gallant attempts to reply to questions and he, of course, is neither a minister nor a parliamentary secretary.

If the description given by the Leader of the Government is going to stand with respect to who may reply to questions, that circumscribes some of the gallant efforts made by the deputy leader.

I may say, offhand, that in many cases his attempts have been more entertaining than informative, but we appreciate his efforts in any event and, therefore, I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate would like to modify his qualification somewhat so that his deputy could reply, especially on the days when the leader is not present in the Senate.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend raises an intriguing point which one of our colleagues has mentioned. Senator Godfrey raised that point, and that was the first time I considered it, to be quite frank.

When I am not present, my honourable colleague—who has done a good job of fielding questions—is not just the deputy leader, but is the Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate. Whether that makes any difference to his status or to his capacity to answer questions, is something that I have not really considered. All I can tell my honourable friend is that I will consult some authorities on this matter and see if I can resolve it any further. If I am not here, and if the strict interpretation of the dogma that I enunciated is correct, and I have to admit that I am not always correct when dealing with such a complicated matter on the spur of the moment, then he is sort of restricted to taking everything as notice, which is perhaps not the best system. I will do my best to get some information on this matter and reply further to my honourable friend later.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I am somewhat surprised at that reply because the honourable gentleman was very sure as to the position of the deputy leader, and I notice that he has commented that there is a promotion of the deputy leader to acting leader on those days when the leader is not here. But when he was on this side of the house he was very sure that the then Acting Leader of the Government in the Senate was expected to reply to questions which he himself put. I suppose that it would not be unreasonable to expect that he would adhere to that same philosophy now.

Senator Roblin: I remember the words of Oliver Cromwell when speaking to some parliaments. He said:

I beseech you, in the bowels of Christ, think it possible you may be mistaken.

I apply that reference to myself in a former capacity.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): That is a pretty gutsy answer.

NATIONAL REVENUE

SUGGESTED CONSUMPTION TAX

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It has to do with what all Canadians are watching with a great deal of interest, namely, the attempt of the Minister of Finance to wrestle the deficit to the ground. He is quoted in yesterday's Citizen as follows:

If equity is perceived to be there in the system, there will be less of the economy going underground.

He said this in support of a minimum tax on the wealthy.

My question is this: If the honourable minister and the government are interested in equity and in the billions of dollars in the underground economy, will they give consideration, in the name of equity, to putting in a tax on consumption rather than on production?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I detect faint echoes of a former prime minister of this country who told us he was going to wrestle inflation to the ground.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): And he did; he sure did.

Senator Roblin: Well, the only problem is that it took him ten years to do it.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: He didn't say it was going to be easy.

Senator Roblin: I am not prepared to pin any medals on him.

Senator Frith: Be fair!

Senator Roblin: I just hope that my colleague in the other place did not say that he was going to wrestle the economy to the ground. I think he wants to build it up and not wrestle it to the ground.

Senator Perrault: We have a tag team match here.

Senator Roblin: The question is an interesting one because it has to do with a fundamental reform of the tax system, as my honourable friend knows, and there is a good deal of interesting argument to the effect that a consumption tax would be better designed to meet the needs of the economy than other forms of taxation. All I can say to my honourable friend is that there are going to be very extensive consultations with other governments and with the private sector before the budget comes down on the whole question of taxation. I think there would probably be an opportunity for him at that time to submit his views, if he wishes to pursue this matter further.

Senator Sinclair: I should like to ask a supplementary question. I note that reference is constantly made to a minimum tax on the rich. I recall to my honourable colleagues in the Senate a statement that was made by one of the great law lords of England, namely, that it is the duty of every citizen to so arrange his affairs as to attract the least amount of tax.

My question is this: If you are interested in efficiency, why do you not attack the programs that result in zero tax, rather than putting in a minimum tax?

Senator Roblin: I recollect the quotation my honourable friend has mentioned, but I do not think the honourable law lord went on to say that it was the duty of the government to make it easy for them. I think that is another angle of the same discussion. All I can say to him, again, is that, as he is aware, the tax structure is under consideration; that the minister has undertaken to hold wide consultations with all sectors of the community before the budget is finalized; and that that is a perfectly appropriate subject to be addressed to him in that respect.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

INDIA—DETENTION OF CANADIAN NATIONAL

Hon. Jacques Flynn: If I direct this question to the Leader of the Government, honourable senators, it is because of the unfair and irresponsible comments which the Leader of the Opposition made last Thursday, with the support of Senator Gigantès, while seeking information on the problem of Jonathan Mann in India.

To put the record straight, for the sake of truth, and to clear any wrong impression future generations might get reading the Debates of the Senate, could the Leader of the Government table the letter which Mr. Mann has written to the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

[English]

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Have you given him notice of this question?

Senator Flynn: I gave it.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: You brought your music with you.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): It is true. I have to admit that, as I came into the chamber this afternoon, my honourable friend warned me that he was going to do what he has just done.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): And you are prepared to proceed on such short notice.

Senator Roblin: He did more than that; he provided me with a copy of the letter.

Senator Perrault: He even wrote the answer for you.

Senator Roblin: No, the letter was written by Mr. Jonathan Mann. I know my honourable friend is interested in the subject, so I will read the letter to him, and it will then appear in Debates of the Senate and will form the basis of an answer to the questions raised by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, Senator Gigantès and some others.

The letter reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Clark:

Please accept my deepest and most heartfelt thanks for the work you and members of your department did to secure my quick release after I was arrested for illegally entering Punjab.

During the six days I was in police custody, I was in regular contact with David Edwards, Second Secretary of the Canadian High Commission in New Delhi. Mr. Edwards reassured me that every effort was being made to bring about my release.

These efforts were discreet and little publicized. Few Canadians know of the considerable, though quiet and careful, diplomatic activity of the High Commissioner, William Warden, during those six days, nor of your own work to see me free.

I suspect that, because of that, some people who were concerned about my welfare had come to believe that you and members of your department did not share their concerns.

Senator Frith: And his wife.

Senator Roblin: The letter continues:

The fact that I was released six days after my arrest for an offence punishable by three years in prison is proof enough of the wisdom of the success of the course you chose to follow.

I really cannot thank you enough.

Sincerely,

Jonathan Mann.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Steuart: How come his wife didn't know about these wonderful secret negotiations?

Senator Perrault: And his mother?

Senator Roblin: My friend raises an important question. When I read the questions posed to my honourable colleague in this chamber, I began to think that some people here thought we could browbeat or twist the arm of the Government of India, an independent country, no longer a colony, a member of the Commonwealth, to do something perhaps it was not disposed to do. It is obvious to me that it is the part of wisdom, when dealing with independent powers such as the Indian government, to approach matters with some concern for their dignity and for their obvious rights to deal with the subject, and that a quiet, diplomatic approach is probably the right way to go. It was successful on this occasion.

I let my honourable friends speculate as to the feelings of Mrs. Mann on this subject. I think she is probably well pleased.

Senator Frith: I am sure she would wish to express her thanks to those on all sides. The story has a happy ending, and that is what counts.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE ON THE ENVIRONMENT

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

Question No. 2 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Maurice Riel:

Concerning the Interparliamentary Conference on the Environment which is to be held in Nairobi, Kenya, from November 26 to December 1, 1984, (a) as of November 6, 1984, was there an official executive of the Canadian Group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union; (b) who were its members; (c) had the said Conference been scheduled for some time and if so, since what date; (d) was the matter discussed with the Speaker of the Senate and the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration; (e) was attendance at the said Conference by the Senate or Parliament discussed with the Speaker of the Senate or the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and if so, when; (f) what are the estimated total expenditures to be incurred by Parliament and the Canadian Group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union, including return air fare, living expenses and incidentals for each delegate; (g) is the cost of the above-mentioned expenses included in the budget of the Canadian Group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union or that of the Parliamentary Relations Secretariat; (h) is it a policy of the Canadian group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union to attend conferences on the environment in foreign countries; (i) what are the purposes of the Canadian Group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union; (j) was Environment Canada consulted by the Canadian Group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union about this Conference and if so, did Environment Canada approve the Canadian Group attending this conference and did it send observers and brief our delegates; (k) did the Minister of the Environment or his Deputy Minister give consideration to the agenda or content of the said Conference or to the participating and organizing countries, in other words to the quality of the said Conference; (l) on the economic level, were the subject-matter of this conference, its usefulness and potential benefits for Canada ever examined by any parliamentary committee; (m) was the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs or the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry consulted in relation to the said Conference and if so, what were their reports and would the subject-matter of the said Conference not fall within their respective areas of expertise; (n) what is the priority of the Nairobi Conference on the Environment among other activities scheduled in 1984-85 for the Canadian Group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union; (o) what is the agenda of activities scheduled in 1984-85 for the Canadian Group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union and who determines the Group's priorities and activities for 1984-85; (p) what is the total 1984-85 budget of the Canadian Group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union and what is the budgetary breakdown for each activity on the Group's agenda for the said 1984-85 fiscal year; (q) how many Members of the House of Commons and the Senate, spouses, personnel or employees of the Group or the Secretariat are scheduled for that trip at Parliament's expense?

Reply by the Minister of State—Government House Leader:

The subject matter of this question falls within the responsibility of the Speakers of the Senate and of the House of Commons and hence falls outside the jurisdiction of the government.

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, seconded by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to Her Speech at the opening of the Session.—(Honourable Senator Murray).

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators, I begin by extending my warmest congratulations to the mover and the seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Although I never had the opportunity to attend any of the universities at which Senator Macquarrie lectured, I may say that I have been his student for more than 20 years—sometimes, I think, an apt pupil; sometimes what he might call an obtuse student; nevertheless, always an appreciative one.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: A student for 20 years—there's a slow learner!

Senator Murray: I appreciate very much the contribution that Senator Macquarrie has made to Prince Edward Island and to Canada in both houses of Parliament. As a friend and as a Conservative, I was proud of what he had to say and of the way he said it on moving the motion for an Address in Reply.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Senator Murray: I was Senator Tremblay's disciple, especially in the area of federalism and the practice of federal-provincial relations.

Hon. Royce Frith (Acting Leader of the Opposition): The sponsorship of those two professors is quite significant.

Senator Murray: Senator Tremblay's appointment to the Senate in 1975, his entry into the Conservative caucus brought us a wide experience in public administration, and a valuable contribution to our policy development, especially in the constitutional field.

I want to commend Senator Tremblay for his recent appointment as special advisor to the Prime Minister on constitutional matters. This once more reflects Brian Mulroney's wisdom.

Honourable senators would also allow me to express my congratulations to our Speaker, the Honourable Guy Charbonneau, and to the Speaker pro tempore, the Honourable Martial Asselin. We could dwell at length on the merits of those two senators, but they are well known in this House.

I would like to add that we are doubly favoured with being able to avail ourselves of the presence at their sides of such talented wives. I know Mrs. Charbonneau and Mrs. Asselin. Both are very capable ladies and can make a very special contribution to the functions performed by our Speaker and Speaker pro tempore.

Honourable senators, it will always be a subject of great pride to have sat in the Senate for five years under the leadership of the Honourable Senator Jacques Flynn. His sharp and penetrating intelligence sheds light on the most complex issues. His loyalty and devotion to Quebec, his deep knowledge of political history, his idea of Quebec's place within Canada—

Senator Frith: Enough of these comments, I have to answer!

Senator Murray: —have inspired him with proposals of the greatest wisdom.

[English]

Senator Frith: I will go that far.

Senator Murray: Let me go on to say how pleased and honoured I am to serve under the leadership of Senator Roblin, the new Leader of the Government in the Senate—that most diligent and conscientious of parliamentarians.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Murray: I think all honourable senators are aware that Senator Roblin favours an elected Senate. Meanwhile, I believe he is the best possible advertisement for the Senate as it is. He has put together, in a troika, the leadership of the government in the Senate in the persons of our friends, the Honourable Senator Doody, the Deputy Leader of the Government, and the Honourable Senator Phillips, our new whip. In my judgment, both honourable senators are excellent choices for those positions, and I trust that honourable senators opposite will not mistake their affability and believe that either of them is an easy mark.

● (1430)

Senator Frith: Don't worry about that.

Senator Murray: Senator Macdonald was to me, as he was to many others in Cape Breton a long time ago, a political godfather. One of the fine things about Senator John M. Macdonald is that he has always been, and still is, a splendid source of encouragement to young people taking part in politics, in particular in Cape Breton, which he represents in this house.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Murray: I told Senator Frith earlier that I would understand perfectly if he had to leave before I finished my remarks today, because I know that he has a very important engagement tonight. In Lanark County, where I live, Senator Frith is known as "The Singing Senator from Perth". This evening, at the Perth and District Collegiate Institute, he is starring in the title role of Gilbert and Sullivan's "The Mikado".

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Murray: In a recent edition of the Smiths Falls Record News, that circulates in Almonte and Carleton Place, there is a four-column article on the front page entitled "The Singing Senator from Perth", and containing on the front page a photograph of the Deputy Leader of the Opposition in full costume as the Mikado. I will leave that publication in the reading room of the Senate for the benefit of honourable senators. It contains some interesting material, including the announcement that now that Senator Frith has more leisure time in opposition he will be available for legal aid cases. I would like him to know that I will do my best to advertise throughout the length and breadth of Lanark County his availability for that purpose, and will even send him a paying customer or two if I can find them. He also says, with typical Liberal modesty, concerning this week's production of "The Mikado", "No doubt it will be sold out again this year."

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, on a point of privilege, last year I would not have been accused of optimism but of arrogance.

Senator Murray: There is a very fine line and only a few feet between "arrogance" and "optimism," and I presume it is measured in the distance between the government and opposition benches.

Senator Frith: Whoever may be on which side.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I warmly welcome the 10 new senators who have taken their seats in this chamber. I must admit that it was a somewhat depressing sight on opening day to see 10 Liberals march down the aisle. I console myself with the thought that we shall not see its like again for many years. I must confess that some of the new senators have been friends of mine for some considerable time, and I welcome them knowing that they have a tremendous contribution to make to this chamber and to public affairs.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Murray: The new Leader of the Opposition, Senator MacEachen, is a friend of many years standing who offered me many kindnesses and hospitality when I first came to this city 23 years ago as a young ministerial assistant, and I am glad to acknowledge his kindness and hospitality to me those many years ago. I am particularly glad to see him here, when I consider how close we came to losing him altogether. I believe it was on June 28 that Senator MacEachen announced that he would not be re-offering himself in his constituency of Cape Breton Highlands-Canso. Immediately Senator Graham put out a press release, which was carried in all of the Nova Scotia media, hailing the end of a brilliant career. That very afternoon, Senator Muir, a fellow Cape Bretoner, was on his feet here grieving, prematurely as it turned out, for the end of Allan MacEachen's career. Senator Marsden was on her feet keening and lamenting that we would be losing Allan MacEachen, and talked of how much we had all learned from him. I must confess that I was not here that afternoon. I was at home. I like to be alone with my grief on such occasions. I was trying to put a few words together that I thought might do justice to the occasion when word came to me that Mr. MacEachen had accepted a summons to the Senate. Lo, the very next day he was back in the cabinet. I noticed on that occasion, just after he was sworn in, what Mr. Turner, the then Prime Minister, told a press conference about Mr. MacEachen. He said, "I have known him for a long time and discussions with Mr. MacEachen are the ultimate intellectual challenge." I think we saw something of that on the day the leaders spoke on the Speech from the Throne. I hope that I can rise to the challenge as well as our leader, Senator Roblin, did on that occasion.

Honourable senators, the throne speech sets out some of the truly noble goals that the new government has set for itself; what it wants to achieve for Canada—national reconciliation instead of alienation, confrontation and the divisions that we have known in this country for too long—

Senator Perrault: That is ridiculous.

Senator Murray: —economic renewal in the place of underachievement—the economic stagnation that we have known.

Senator Frith: More Liberal bashing!

Senator Perrault: Keep it non-political.

Senator Murray: There was a commitment to social justice—that social justice should keep pace with the changing conditions and changing needs of our country. I want to come back later in my remarks to that question of social justice, because it has been raised here by the Leader of the Opposition, by Senator Marsden and by Senator Davey in their remarks in the course of this debate.

In achieving these goals, the new government is going to have to exercise leadership. It is going to require discipline. It is going to require perseverance. The new government will need the co-operation of other levels of government, of the public service, which has a great deal to do with helping any government to achieve its political objectives, with the private sector, with Canadians generally, including the government's own political supporters. I believe people will respond to the leadership of a new government if the effort of the new government is serious, if the new government perseveres and if its actions are seen to be fair and credible. I think—and Senator Kelly referred to this the other day—that one of the most arresting and ambitious ideas in the Speech from the Throne is that the new government would engage the private sector and other governments in a process of consensus building on economic goals, economic policy and economic decisions. This is an enormous challenge in a country like ours. It is certainly a challenge for the long term.

If the government succeeds, even partially, in meeting that challenge, it will have effected a radical transformation in our way of doing things in this country. I think that the new Prime Minister may be uniquely qualified by reason of his own skills, temperament and background, and by the nature of the mandate that he has received, to lead in that undertaking. In any event, the government is making a good start. It is making a start with the national economic summits or conferences that are to be called, one after the other, and with the agenda which was described in a general way in the Speech from the Throne. The economic statement made by Mr. Wilson on November 8 sets out the immediate steps that the government has to take to get the fiscal house in order and to begin the process of deficit reduction. It enumerates and discusses briefly some of the issues that have to be resolved in this country in the coming months, and the role of the government in fostering growth and investment.

Much of the criticism of the Speech from the Throne and the economic statement from our friends in the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party—and I must say the criticism comes almost exclusively from our political adversaries and not in general from the people of Canada—

Senator Frith: Not from the business community!

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: But your adversaries are now a majority.

Senator Murray: I disagree. The last time I looked at the Gallup poll, the Progressive Conservative Party was shown to have the support of 60 per cent of those polled, which is a pretty good majority.

In any case, much of the criticism from our adversaries assumes that there is some contradiction between policies of deficit reduction and policies of job creation. We heard it from Mr. Turner; we heard it yesterday from Senator Davey. What they are saying, and I am paraphrasing, is, "You promised us jobs, jobs, jobs, and you are giving us cuts, cuts, cuts."

● (1440)

Honourable senators, virtually every serious analysis that has been made of our economic problems in recent years has emphasized that the road to recovery must begin with an attack on the deficit. It does not end there but it must begin there. Virtually every serious analysis that I have seen has made the point strongly that continuing high deficits and continued growth in the public debt leads to higher interest rates, inadequate private investment and higher unemployment. A statement made by the Chairman of the Royal Bank not too long ago put it very well:

A government deficit in a country's national accounts is not necessarily a bad thing at all times and in all circumstances. It is its present size relative to GNP, and its persistence year after year, that make it a very bad thing in Canada's current circumstances.

Then Mr. Frazee went on to list the three major problems with a deficit of the size we now have in Canada. First, he said, it sharply limits the government's manoeuvrability. Second, he said, it puts upward pressure on interest rates. He then said, and I quote:

The third, and perhaps most important reason of all, is that entrenched deficits permanently divert Canadian savings away from productive private sector investment—the mechanism that is essential for job creation and future growth.

A representative from the same Mr. Frazee's bank, in making a presentation to the Donald Macdonald royal commission said:

There is a large structural deficit built into the federal government's current fiscal position that must be addressed if Canada is to provide adequate room for private investment and other credit-dependent spending to expand by using domestic sources of saving.

A little further on he says:

The government structural deficit must be reduced in coming years if Canada is to fulfill its economic potential.

The Business Council on National Issues, which Senator Davey excoriated yesterday, and which is headed by a former assistant to the Right Honourable Pierre Trudeau, said in a recent summary of a paper on expenditure reduction:

Continued, rapid deterioration in the state of public finances in Canada makes deficit reduction an urgent priority over the next several years. . . The view held by some, that by increasing the already huge deficit the federal government can succeed in boosting growth and cutting the unemployment rate in Canada, is simply not borne out by the facts.

I would draw this statement to the attention of Senator Gigantès who spoke in this debate the other day:

The massive Canadian deficits recorded since 1981, amounting to 5-7 per cent of GNP, demonstrably have failed to generate needed jobs, while in the United States, which has total public sector deficits far smaller than Canada's on a per capita basis, unemployment has been declining rapidly and economic growth remains buoyant.

When the Conservative Party was in opposition its attacks on the mounting deficits of the Liberal government always emphasized that the burden of debt and servicing the debt was pushing interest rates up and was limiting government's room to manoeuvre. We said that in the face of repeated commitments on the part of the Liberal government to reduce the deficit their failure to do so was eroding confidence and discouraging investment and job creation. That was the burden of our attack then. It was our position then, as it is our position now—there has been no change.

As opposition leader, Mr. Brian Mulroney, time and time again underlined the connection between deficit reduction, lower interest rates and job creation. This is what he had to say on April 11, 1984:

... a Progressive Conservative government will rebuild the Canadian economy on four pillars.

1. Lower interest rates through a stronger dollar and deficit reduction;

On April 12, 1984, he had this to say:

We can lessen our dependence on U.S. interest rates over time, without causing an exchange rate crisis, if we put upward pressure on the dollar, through a strong export performance and an inflow of job-creating equity capital; through a realistic plan for deficit reduction...

And, most importantly, through the election of a Progressive Conservative government.

We must reduce our annual deficit, so we can begin to invest in our future, and stop paying the price for the mistakes of the past.

We must ensure there is a capital shift from the public to the private sector, and that our savings are invested in equity, not debt.

So that's our approach to interest rates—lower interest rates through a stronger dollar and deficit reduction.

To those who would say that the present government in undertaking a program of deficit reduction is somehow turning its back on the commitments it made to the Canadian people in the election, I could quote many, many statements by the present Prime Minister. However, I will place one brief statement from August 28, 1984 on the record. That was just a few days before the vote.

No responsible Canadian anticipates for a moment that all our programs—with their costs and attendant benefits—would be introduced within the first day or month or year of a new government.

Our policies—with their costs and benefits—are designed for introduction over a 4-5 year period, the normal life of a majority government.

Those statements from the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney which I have placed on the record are perfectly consistent with a paragraph which we find in the Speech from the Throne:

[Senator Murray.]

That we must deal urgently with the deficit is beyond dispute. If allowed to continue to grow out of control, it will consume our available financial resources, undermine our capacity to respond to new opportunities, put increased pressure on interest rates, and inhibit investment and growth in our economy.

Honourable senators, I must say that even the Liberal Party has always professed its belief in this link between deficit reduction and job creation. Nobody ever said it better than the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen when he was Minister of Finance presenting his budget of June 28, 1982, when he warned us—and warned us severely—of the dire consequences that would follow from continuing to increase the deficit and the debt. I would like to quote just a couple of sentences:

Some say the government should print more money.

Others say it should let the deficit rip.

But that would fail miserably. Inflation and unemployment would get worse. Interest rates would rise even more. Canada would price itself out of world markets. Recovery would be postponed.

I must say parenthetically that on the very night the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen made that statement he was obliged to forecast that the deficit for 1982-83 would rise from $13 billion, as it had been the year previous, to $19.5 billion. I must also add that in the event what happened is that the deficit went not from $13 billion to $19.5 billion but from $13 billion to $24.6 billion in that very fiscal year. However, it was obviously not due to a failure of rhetoric; it was not due to a failure of analysis; nor was it due to a lack of good intentions. It was due to a failure of policy; it was due to a failure of will; it was due to a failure of follow-through; it was due to a failure of performance that dogged the Liberal government the whole 15 years it was in office.

In 1968—do honourable senators remember 1968?—the Right Honourable Pierre Trudeau, travelling across the country saying "No more free stuff." That was the slogan. He said that they would keep government spending under the rate of growth of nominal GNP. Almost every year thereafter, they promised the same thing. Expenditure control. How many programs of restraint did we hear announced by Edgar Benson and by every finance minister after him; programs of expenditure control, restraint, deficit reduction? Every year they promised it and every year they failed to deliver. I could quote every Liberal finance minister from Edgar Benson to Marc Lalonde with Messrs. Turner, Macdonald, Chrétien and MacEachen in between. I could quote the same determined rhetoric and, sadly, I would have to record the same dismal results.

In referring just to recent years, here was Pierre Trudeau on the eve of re-election in 1980 saying:

We will hold the line on government expenditure growth to under the rate of GNP... The deficit will be reduced in a phased and orderly fashion... Any new expenditure programs to meet the evolving needs and requirements of Canadians will be financed by re-allocating existing expenditures or by increases in revenues. We will not add to the deficit by adding new programs.

That was January 12, 1980, just before the Liberal Party was returned to government. In their very first budget, Finance Minister MacEachen, as he was then, under the heading: "The Economic Strategy of the Government", said:

Its elements in brief are as follows:

The maintenance of government expenditures within the rate of growth in the economy to ensure that the federal government does not take up an ever-growing proportion of the flow of income;

Hon. Jack Marshall: He should have been nominated for the Pulitzer Prize for Fiction.

Senator Murray: Again, in 1981, Finance Minister MacEachen came to bat:

This budget has three themes: . . .

The first is the need for restraint on the part of the government and restraint on the part of all Canadians.

A little later:

Most fundamentally, we are committed to restraining the growth of our spending over the next few years to less than the growth of the economy as a whole while still exercising our responsibilities for leadership and for caring.

Senator Frith: You are living in the past, the whole bunch of you.

Senator Murray: That was Senator MacEachen when he was Minister of Finance.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Not the same Senator MacEachen, surely.

Senator Murray: In 1980, the then Minister of Finance said:

We plan to reduce the rates of growth of our spending to 12.8 per cent in 1981-82 . . .

Let me put between parentheses that it reached 19 per cent.

. . . to 10.5 per cent in 1982-83 . . .

Let me put between parentheses that it reached 15 per cent.

. . . and to about 10 per cent in 1983-84.

He was a little closer for that year. It came in at 11 per cent.

The previous government almost never succeeded with these commitments to lower the deficit and to keep the rate of government spending within the rate of growth of the economy. I shall not take the time of honourable senators, but I have the list here of every year from 1969 onward with the nominal GNP increase in one column and the government spending increase in another, and I say that on only two occasions in that whole time did they manage to keep the rate of growth of government spending within the rate of nominal GNP growth. That was in 1976 and again in 1979, during part of which time there was a Conservative government in office. Every year they promised it, and almost every year they failed, so the legacy—

Senator Marshall: Read it out.

Senator Murray: Let me just give the last few years. In 1980, the nominal GNP increase was 12.6 per cent; government spending, 16 per cent. In 1981, the nominal GNP increase was 14.2 per cent; government spending, 19 per cent. In 1982, the nominal GNP increase was 5.4 per cent; government spending, 15 per cent. In 1983, the nominal GNP increase was 8.9 per cent; government spending, 11 per cent.

Therefore, the legacy that the new government has had to face—that Finance Minister Michael Wilson and his colleagues have had to face—was not just one in which this year's deficit will be 4 per cent more than Mr. Lalonde had forecast; it was a legacy of 15 years in which the government consistently failed to carry out its annual fiscal plan.

Senator Frith: Don't forget that they reduced inflation below 4 per cent.

Senator Murray: They reduced inflation at a cost of millions of lost jobs in this country.

During the whole of that period, they were horrendously off target. Their growth forecasts were usually wrong; their inflation forecasts were too low; their interest rate forecasts were too low; their revenue forecasts too high, and we see this again in Mr. Lalonde's forecast; expenditure forecasts almost always wrong; terribly wrong. The result was that the people of Canada stopped believing the government. Whether they were investors or buyers of government bonds; people making price decisions or wage demands in the economy—everyone discounted what the government had to say.

Senator Frith: That only took 15 days, in your case.

Senator Murray: People are still skeptical and they will remain skeptical until the present government demonstrates to them that it is possible for a government to make commitments and carry them through. The people of Canada have forgotten, after 15 years of Liberal rule, that it is possible for a government to be as good as its word. People are skeptical. The challenge that faces the new government is nothing less than to rebuild the credibility of government's economic and fiscal policy after 15 years of steady erosion of that credibility.

The new Conservative government has said that drastic reductions in the deficit could not be made until the rate of economic growth had increased considerably, and Mr. Turner and the Liberals have said much the same thing. But surely nobody pretends that the reductions proposed by Mr. Wilson are Draconian. What we are talking about here is approximately $2.8 billion in cuts in forecast 1985/86 expenditures of $106.6 billion. That is hardly Draconian, $2.8 billion out of $106.6 billion, and it is certainly not Draconian in the context in which the Right Honourable John Turner spoke in the leaders' debate on July 24. That was the French language leaders' debate "Face à Face '84". This is what he said:

[Translation]

And I quote:

We have a budget of some $90 billion—

[English]

He was a few billion off there, but in any event:

[Translation]

There are many areas where cuts can be made and duplication eliminated. Programs which have become obsolete or irrelevant. Waste in public administration. I think, therefore, that this reduction in expenditures could save us billions. Still, this reduction would not hinder the extension of certain training and development programs, especially for our youth. That is the way we must look at things, for we are now burdened with a $180 billion public debt which will greatly handicap our country for many generations to come. I have seen this debt increase from $30 billion in my time to $180 billion.

[English]

That was a little self-serving statement that he threw in there.

Senator Frith: When do we come to the part of the statement that includes what Mr. Mulroney said?

Senator Murray: I have already put the relevant statements from the Right Honourable Prime Minister on the record, and I heard no complaint.

Senator Perrault: It is your job, now.

Senator Murray: In any event, here was Mr. Turner the next day—

Senator Frith: We are having the campaign over again.

Senator Murray: —They caught him in a scrum in the Langevin Block, and one of the reporters asked him:

[Translation]

Mr. Turner, on what do you base your statement that billions of dollars could be recuperated through the elimination of overlapping federal programs? What is the basis of this assertion?

[English]

Senator Frith: You can't get him in a scrum now.

Senator Murray: And Mr. Turner responded:

[Translation]

Our budget is now $90 billion or more. We could save what, one billion, two billion, three billion here and there. There is a wide margin to re-affect funds to more relevant programs. That is what I said.

[English]

That was Mr. Turner talking about the billions of dollars—the billions of dollars—that were available to be saved in the federal budget.

● (1500)

Senator Perrault: You are re-fighting the election campaign.

Senator Murray: In that context, surely the budgetary reductions announced by the Minister of Finance cannot be considered to be so Draconian.

Let me give honourable senators an example of the kinds of cuts that are being introduced by the government. I want to refer to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, because the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate specified that department the other day. I am pleased to see with us two recent ministers of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, the Honourable Senator Roméo LeBlanc and the Honourable Senator Pierre De Bané.

[Senator Murray.]

The Honourable Senator MacEachen, the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, said the other day that it was unbelievable—unbelievable—that the government proposed cuts of $30 million in the forecasted expenditures of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans for 1985-86.

The blue book indicates that in 1984-85 the expenditures of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans would be some $690 million. I think it is a safe bet that in 1985-86, after taking into account supplementaries and so forth, we will be talking more than $700 million for that department. With a budget of $700 million, I do not think that a cut of $30 million is terribly excessive. I would find it unbelievable if one could not find $30 million in cuts in a budget of $700 million. The Leader of the Opposition in the Senate may want to try to persuade us that the previous government cut everything to the bone, but I hope he does not expect us to believe that.

Where are these cuts coming from? They are going to save $18.1 million by deferring or cancelling a number of capital projects; they will save $11.7 million in various programs.

Let us take the $18 million they will save on capital projects. That breakdown is as follows: A saving of $6.8 million by deferring for one year construction of phase three of the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Centre at St. John's, Newfoundland. That is a $50 million complex that is, as I understand it, almost completed. What they are proposing to defer is additional office and laboratory facilities, a computer centre and cafeteria. That is hardly going to bring the fisheries industry to its knees.

They then intend to save $2.2 million by deferring a new fisheries laboratory in West Vancouver, a new laboratory building with indoor and outdoor aquarium facilities, including the renovation of two small buildings that will be deferred—not cancelled, but deferred.

They will save $1.4 million by deferring for one year a new district fisheries building in Shippegan, which would have housed various units of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans under one roof.

An Hon. Senator: Shame.

Senator Murray: My honourable friend says, "Shame". I understand that a case can be made for the new building in Shippegan, just as a case can be made for many of these projects. However, the salmon are not going to stop running because these projects have been deferred for a year or two.

They will save $5 million in 1985-86 by deferring for four years the Scotia-Fundy Fishery Centre in Halifax. That was to be a new laboratory and office building to house the department's regional headquarters; they are going to demolish some old buildings. However, they are going ahead with the reconstruction of the wharf and renovation to existing buildings at a cost of $9 million plus.

They will postpone the mid-life refit of an enforcement vessel on the west coast, defer construction of a research vessel, and will not proceed with the addition that they had planned to the biological station at St. Andrews, New Brunswick.

Under the program cuts, they will take $2.6 million out of a five-year development program in Quebec for which the total estimated cost is $136 million. That is only $2.6 million out of $136 million.

They are going to take $1.2 million out of a $13 million infrastructure program for coastal Labrador. That means that they have to cancel the building of a proposed marine service centre in Smokey, Labrador.

They will consolidate some research centres and end the generic advertising campaign in the United States.

As I said, a case can be made for all of these projects.

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Would you permit a question? I am wondering if any of these cuts you are talking about will cost any jobs. Are any jobs being lost as a result of these cuts?

Senator Murray: I doubt that these cuts are going to cost any fishermen any jobs, and I doubt that these cuts are going to have any serious impact on the fishing industry; I say that these cuts will have a minimal effect on fishermen and on the fishing industry.

A case can be made, I am sure, for almost all of those items. If a case could not be made, one assumes that they would not be in the program, but to defer them, to put them off, or to reduce them, does not warrant the kind of apocalyptic comments that we have heard from the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate.

By the way, let me tell you what the government is doing that is of some importance on the positive side for fishermen: It is going to eliminate the sales tax on diesel fuel and gasoline for fishermen; and it will give them a rebate on the increase in the petroleum compensation charge. Those are items that are fairly substantial if one takes into account the overall amounts involved, and they will make some small contribution to helping fishermen in the course of their work.

Together with similar cuts in other departments, these reductions are helping to get the government's fiscal house in order—

Senator Graham: May I ask one further question?

Senator Murray: —to create a climate for economic renewal.

Senator Graham has had a second thought. I will take my seat while he expresses it.

Senator Graham: I apologize for interrupting my honourable colleague, who is also a good friend. I am wondering if he agrees with the cancellation of the decentralization program to Sydney.

Senator Murray: I have seen the statements attributed to various people, including the honourable senator, but the whole question of decentralization frankly is one worthy of a debate in itself, and I would not mind some day engaging in such a debate. I think one should look carefully at the cost benefits involved in terms of employment created by decentralization. I am not speaking just from my bias as a senator who comes from the Ottawa area, because it has often occurred to me that there must be better and more efficient ways to create employment than decentralization, but I am open to arguments and would be glad to engage in a debate on that subject at the appropriate time.

Over the rest of the decade, I am quite sure that there are more changes coming. Starting with next spring's budget, I am sure there will be further changes. Mr. Wilson said, in his economic statement, the following:

Our goal is to reduce the projected level of annual expenditures by 1990 by $10 to $15 billion, inclusive of the measures I am announcing tonight.

I think quite significant of the resolve of the government and the way in which the government is approaching this question is the following statement from the agenda paper, page 67:

Fiscal prudence and flexibility must be restored on the expenditure side, to the greatest possible extent. We must reshape the composition of federal expenditures, while simultaneously slowing their growth, in order to minimize the effects of contraction on the economy. We must also reduce the growth of federal expenditures in a way which is seen to be fair to all Canadians, and which improves the overall effectiveness of federal programs.

What that says to me, honourable senators, is that we are going to see some changes in priorities—certainly some change in emphasis—among government programs and within government programs, and that is surely necessary in order to assist our economy to adjust to change and to achieve its potential. The government is not coming at this task in a slashing fashion; it is not coming at this task with an axe. It is coming at it in an intelligent, rational and compassionate way. A consultative process is beginning. My friend, Senator Davey, yesterday deplored what he called protracted consultation.

● (1510)

I think we know where consultation ends and decision must begin. Consultation was never the way with the Liberal government. The Right Honourable Pierre Trudeau came back in the summer of 1978 from his cruise up the Rhine with Helmut Schmidt, went on television, announced a couple of billion dollars in expenditure cuts, which never amounted to much in the event, but he announced them, without even consulting Jean Chrétien who was the Minister of Finance. That was consultation in the Liberal style.

In 1981, the then Minister of Finance, Mr. MacEachen, eliminated the revenue guarantee—

Senator Frith: What you did to Joe Clark on external aid is really hypocritical.

Senator Murray: I am so happy that the Deputy Leader of the Opposition has brought up external aid because—

Senator Frith: I am always happy to make you happy.

Senator Perrault: You have a copy of the party line in your hands.

Senator Murray: I have an exposé to offer him there as well.

In 1981, the then Minister of Finance, Mr. MacEachen, eliminated the revenue guarantee from established programs financing at a cost of $5 billion to the provinces to 1987. No consultation. In 1983 they applied the famous six-and-five to federal expenditures for post-secondary education. Where was the consultation there? Ask the provinces.

The government is taking a first step in the agenda paper and the documents to define some of the key issues and to raise some of the questions that will have to be resolved in this country in the next little while. I think that there is a great deal of food for thought and discussion in that agenda paper. I was particularly interested in the references to the need to adapt our economy to economic and technological change and to the changes that we know are taking place in international comparative advantage. There are references to helping industry to adapt, wherever possible, but always the priority is to helping the individual to adjust to these changes in the economy. There are good and interesting questions about export financing, about the regulation of financial institutions and the possibility of world product mandates for Canadian companies. All these subjects have been aired at one time or another in the Senate and in Senate committees, and they are going to receive increased attention in the coming months. Consultation is not an excuse for putting off action. The government will take a lead in the discussions and the consultations whether with the provinces which have to be consulted on most of these subjects, the private sector which will have to be consulted on many of them, and with Parliament which will sooner or later have its say on all of them.

At this time, I think there is a desire for everybody to acknowledge the need to reconsider some of the policies and priorities of the past and some of the assumptions behind those policies and priorities. I think there is a need to approach this process with a reasonably open mind and not indulge in alarmist rhetoric just because the process has been launched.

A good example of this overreaction is to be found in the way that honourable senators opposite, from Senator Argue to Senator Marsden to Senator Davey have dealt with this question of social policy. They purport to see the most dire threats to the system. Where does this come from?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Would the honourable senator allow me a question, since he is now going from economic issues to social issues?

[English]

I should like to ask him what the rationale is for cuts in the advertising budget for the Department of Fisheries in the United States in view of the fact that we are going to have a huge increase in the harvesting of cod off the Atlantic coast and in light of the fact that the United States is our major market. If there is not an increase in consumption, there will be a negative effect on prices and that will bring great tragedy to our fishermen. What is the rationale behind slashing this advertising budget in the U.S. market which consumes 60 per cent of our exports?

Senator Perrault: They are looking for a conservative advertising agency.

Senator Murray: I think it is obvious that the minister has come to the conclusion that that advertising campaign would not have been cost-effective and would not have produced the desired effects. The question that is raised by Senator De Bané is discussed in the press release which the minister put out on the day he announced the cuts. I do not have that press release before me, but it was discussed.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Not very well.

Senator Murray: Senator LeBlanc says "not very well," but, nevertheless, the rationale is given. He may think that a $5 million generic advertising program in the United States is the answer to marketing the surplus of cod which he says is coming. The minister obviously does not agree and there are references in the minister's statement to the responsibility of the private sector to conduct advertising campaigns for fish in the United States and elsewhere.

If I may come back to this question of social policy, we see the following paragraph in the agenda paper tabled under the authority of the Minister of Finance, Mr. Wilson. He said:

We will not weaken the basic income support programs that have served Canadians well. Indeed, through stronger economic performance we will seek to provide even greater assistance to those Canadians who truly need it.

The agenda paper goes on to raise a series of questions about the three child support programs—family allowances, child tax exemption and the child tax credit. It raises questions about the various programs of support for the elderly—OAS, GIS, the age exemption and the pension income deduction. It raises questions about the unemployment insurance program.

Hon. Keith Davey: Is there a reference to the sacred trust in the agenda paper?

Senator Murray: I will read for the benefit of my honourable friend who neglected to read it yesterday, an excerpt from the interview that Prime Minister Mulroney gave to George Radwanski.

Senator Davey: I read that interview.

Senator Murray: My honourable friend read selected excerpts from that interview.

Senator Davey: I read one excerpt from it.

Senator Murray: And I suggest that he omitted to read a very important excerpt which I will place on the record in a few moments.

Senator Davey: I am asking you if there is a reference to the sacred trust in the agenda paper. That is a very simple question.

Senator Murray: Of course, there is a reference to the subject.

Senator Davey: To those specific words?

Senator Murray: My honourable friend is hung up on words.

Senator Frith: You might say that words are sacred.

Senator Murray: I will read to him and to other honourable senators statements made by the Prime Minister within the last few days that reinforce the statements about sacred trust that he made in the course of the election campaign, if my honourable friends would bear with me for a moment.

I said that the agenda paper raises these questions which I think are relevant and important. These questions are raised in a socially responsible way. To refuse to consider these questions is the most reactionary and obscurantist position of all—to turn your back on these questions because they have been raised. I must say that I think some of this alarmist hyperbole that we have heard from Senators Argue, Marsden and Davey is inspired by more partisan considerations.

I should like to place on the record something that I referred to a moment ago in my exchange with Senator Davey. The following is from the interview that George Radwanski had with Prime Minister Mulroney:

Q. If the result of this reflection were a decision to move away from universality, would the commitment be that all the money thus saved would be applied directly to giving more money to the neediest?

A. There would be, there could be, no other reason.

Q. It wouldn't be applied simply to the deficit?

A. No, absolutely not. Absolutely not.

A little later the Prime Minister said:

And I can tell you that at no time, and under no circumstances, shall there ever be a means test. That is not in any way the objective. The only cause for taking a look at the concept, excluding medical care, is to ascertain if we cannot improve on the philosophy behind it, which was an honourable concept.

Can we not now, 40 years later, give a new economic situation new realities? Can we make better use of those funds in favour of those who need it most? That's all.

A little later the Prime Minister said:

But there shall be no means test, and our sole concern is not to take money from a program and pay down the debt it is to make a better utilization of limited resources in favour of those who need it the most.

● (1520)

Somewhere in this interview—and I will not try to find the passage now—the Prime Minister also raised the possibility of taxing back these benefits from some people who need them less or do not need them at all. This scenario was raised the other day in this debate by Senator Argue. I must say: I wonder why honourable senators opposite are working themselves into such a lather about this. Why are they flailing away at phantoms? What is this all about?

Senator Davey: You hope it is a phantom.

Senator Murray: What is all this about?

Senator Perrault: It is a Conservative record.

Senator Murray: I see in La Presse on November 20, 1984, the following headline:

[Translation]

Some Liberal members are ready to give up universality.

The member for Sudbury, Doug Frith, who was for a short period a minister in the Turner government, said:

—old age pensions are an example of a program which would not have to remain universal. "If the government wants to remove universality to provide additional help to those who need it most, I agree."

Moreover, the member for St-Henri-Westmount, also a former minister in the Trudeau government who was defeated during the Liberal leadership race and who is now financial critic of the opposition:

—thinks that universality should be replaced by a program based on a guaranteed minimum income, an idea which he advocated during the Liberal leadership race.

As for the member for Shefford and Minister of State in the Turner government, Jean Lapierre, he:

—also feels that Liberals should be more open-minded about the universality issue even if originally it has always been a principle dear to his party. "I have no set opinion yet on the universality issue."

[English]

If my honourable friends are so worried about these questions, it seems to me that they should go to the Liberal caucus and try to settle them there because, I must say:

[Translation]

The positions taken by Mr. Mulroney are much less ambiguous than those just quoted from that article in La Presse.

[English]

Mr. Turner himself was musing aloud last weekend about universality. He said, "Well, it's our position now, but let's see what happens in 1986." He is leaning to the left and he is leaning to the right, and we understand the problems he faces.

The Leader of the Opposition came into the chamber the other day quite alarmed because the agenda paper raises for discussion some of the problems and the potential of the fishery on both our coasts. At page 34 of the Debates of the Senate he said:

In addition to the cuts there is ominous talk in the economic documents about "consolidation of employment" in the fisheries. We know what that is. That is a code word for fewer jobs.

What is all this "ominous talk" the Leader of the Opposition refers to?

At page 59 of the Agenda for Economic Renewal it states:

On the Atlantic coast, the major problems lie with over-capacity in the processing sector and low and unstable incomes in the inshore fisheries. The groundfish industry is still in serious economic difficulty. The operation of market forces has been inhibited and governments may well have contributed to excess processing capacity in a well-intentioned, but possibly counter-productive, effort to maintain and increase employment. New approaches are required on the part of the federal and provincial governments, to ensure that processing capacity matches resource availability.

Government financial rescues are not the solution. If it is to be self-sustaining, the industry must attract new investment both domestically and from abroad, adopt new technology, enhance product quality and consistency, achieve a higher degree of product and market diversification, and improve its overall marketing performance. Government policies must be designed to facilitate these industry improvements, not to hinder adjustment to market realities. In some fisheries, fleet rationalization is also required to improve the economic viability of the harvesting sector. The role of foreign fishing fleets also must be examined.

Planning for an improved Atlantic fishery must take place within the context of an overall approach to economic development for Atlantic Canada. Hundreds of communities depend solely on the fishery and have limited potential for alternative employment. Consolidation of employment in the sector would have to be complemented by public and private initiatives to promote job opportunities in other sectors of the economy, as well as fair and generous adjustment programs for workers in the sector.

The Leader of the Opposition and a number of honourable senators know, from more personal experience of this matter than I have, that there are serious problems in the fishery and in the Atlantic fishery in particular.

A couple of years ago, the Trudeau government appointed Dr. Michael Kirby, before he became our colleague, to head up a task force on these matters. Dr. Kirby described the state of the Atlantic fishery in terms very similar, in fact almost identical in some particulars, to those used by Michael Wilson in the agenda paper. Dr. Kirby talked about a "Canadian fishing industry mired in financial crisis, plagued by internal bickering, beset with uncertainty about the future, and divided on how to solve its problems."

Dr. Kirby said that there was a rural romantic school of thought that tends to view fishing communities as unspoiled paradises whose very existence justifies their permanent survival. He said:

The fishery and the communities that rely on it for their existence both face serious problems. The solution to these problems cannot be found in a static society or in a static fishing industry, forever dependent on the taxpayer for supplements to bring its meagre earnings from the fishery up to subsistence level. Such an answer produces, at best, a shabby dignity for the people of the fishing communities of the east coast. The Task Force therefore rejected the 'rural-romantic' approach to the fishery.

[Senator Murray.]

Honourable senators, is that not what Michael Wilson said in so many words in his agenda paper?

Then Dr. Kirby, in his report, traced the roots of the crisis in the Atlantic fishery. He said that they were:

1. the optimism following the extension of fisheries jurisdiction in 1977, which led to financial over-extension, chiefly over-capitalization, by fishermen and processors, aided and abetted by both levels of government, and whose effects were made much worse by general economic reverses;

2. resistance to change and adjustment—

I would point out, honourable senators, that I am cutting out some of this as I go along because it is rather lengthy. It goes on to state:

3. the current politics of the fishery—federal, provincial and internal to the industry itself—

On the question of consolidation and jobs in the industry, Dr. Kirby said:

The fact that the number of people employed in the fishery should decline slowly over time was recognized both implicitly and explicitly in many of the briefs to the Task Force, as well in a number of other recent studies of the Atlantic fishery.

He went on to say:

The challenge is to devise policies that will not cause the present number employed in the fishery to drop rapidly, but to allow it to decline slowly over time, thus helping to ensure reasonable incomes for those who remain and giving adequate time for other employment opportunities to be found for those who choose to leave. Some decline in the number of plant workers will occur, as some plants will inevitably have to be closed as part of the restructuring of the offshore processing companies, while the institution of a system of quota licences would result, over time, in some reduction in the number of fishermen.

What Dr. Kirby said in considerably more detail in his task force report has been said in less detail and with some reform by Mr. Wilson in his agenda paper. Whether it is on the basis of the Wilson agenda paper or the Kirby Task Force Report—whether it is on the basis of some other propositions made by the Leader of the Opposition or by somebody else—we have to confront the issues. There is no point in running away from them. There is no point in saying, "How ominous, how ominous, how ominous." There is no point in putting our heads in the sand.

Honourable senators, I hope there will be an opportunity in this place to pursue the subject further. As I have said, there are in our midst a couple of former Ministers of Fisheries. We have with us Senator MacEachen and Senator Kirby himself, the author of the famous report. A debate between those honourable senators should certainly afford us the full range of opinions on this subject.

The Leader of the Opposition also charged that in the economic documents there is no attempt whatsoever to identify or to deal with regional development concerns. There is a chapter in the agenda paper entitled, "Growth and Competitiveness—The Regional Dimension." It may not have been written the way Senator MacEachen would have liked; it may not have been written the way I would have done it had I been involved in the writing of it, but it raises the issues that must be raised and resolved respecting regional and national policy. I share the concern of Senator MacEachen and of other honourable senators about regional disparity and regional development. But he accused us the other day of rewriting history. I think that he has ignored a good deal of recent history in what he had to say in this debate, because the fact is that the commitment to attacking regional disparity has waned badly in recent years. It started to wane under the government of my honourable friends opposite.

In the early days of the Trudeau government, DREE was a very important player. The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance noted that it was "a horizontal department, cutting across the policy fields occupied by other departments. DREE was intended to co-ordinate and lead federal economic development efforts within the needy regions." As honourable senators know, the DREE Act of 1969 gave a legislative mandate to the department for this purpose. In later years, when I worked for the government of New Brunswick, I had a personal opportunity to see the work of DREE and, in particular, the general development agreements, the subagreements in such fields as forestry, highways, agriculture and tourism, which were very important to regional development.

The Senate committee said that the general development agreement provided an excellent framework for the planning and development of new infrastructure. But we know what happened. Other departments of government resented the apparently pervasive influence of DREE. There was a period of financial stringency in the country and in the government, and there was this obsession, on the part of the Liberal government, with the possibility that certain provinces—Quebec in particular—were reaping the political benefits from ventures largely paid for by the federal government under DREE. So, in early 1982, as the Senate report said, "the curtain came down." DREE was eliminated. Its policy mandate went to the Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development, which has since disappeared. Its program delivery responsibilities went to DRIE, the Department of Regional and Industrial Expansion.

The Senate committee gave mixed reviews to DREE, but I think it put it very well when it said:

Certainly DREE experienced some profound failures and suffered from a number of weaknesses. But it also had numerous successes and served to reduce at least some of the sources of regional disparity.

The Senate committee pointed out that, with the demise of DREE, there was no longer a federal department with the sole mandate of promoting development in the least developed regions of the country. It removed, according to the Senate committee, the one voice in cabinet committed to the least developed regions. The concern of the committee was that DRIE and MSERD, because they had responsibility for the more prosperous as well as the less developed parts of the country, would pay diminished attention to the less developed parts.

Here is some history for honourable senators, in view of Senator MacEachen's complaint that there was no reference to regional disparity. Here is the Senate committee report, referring to the government's reorganization announcement of January, 1982. I quote from page 82 of that report:

Our concern was reinforced when we failed to find even a single reference in the statement to the word "disparities."

That shows the credibility of our honourable friends opposite. I am merely trying to fill in the vacuum left here by Senator MacEachen when he discussed this matter earlier.

Honourable senators, I think there is a serious question as to whether these ERDAs—these economic and regional development agreements—will be satisfactory as replacements for the general development agreements. In any case, the commitment to attack regional disparities has waned. I have no hesitation in saying that the renewal and restatement of that commitment ought to be—and, I trust, will be—a priority of the new government.

Looking at the 1982 reorganization, the Senate committee recommended that MSERD and DRIE should receive legislative mandates requiring them to pay special attention to the problems and needs of the least developed regions of the country. Well, that will be a start, but it must be followed through. It must be reflected in all of the economic policies of the various departments of government. Otherwise, the least developed regions will lose ground relative to the country as a whole.

There was a reference made by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition a few moments ago to this question of official development assistance. In moving the motion for an Address in reply, Senator Macquarrie pointed out that the Speech from the Throne had dealt with foreign affairs to a somewhat greater length than those documents usually do. I thought that the tone and the approach therein was constructive and well balanced. Particularly well put was the reference to the need for sound, multilateral institutions as providing the best opportunity for Canada to exert an important influence on disarmament, on development, on world economics and on defence.

The Leader of the Opposition takes umbrage at some references to the fact that the tradition of constructive Canadian internationalism was interrupted during the Trudeau years and had to be renewed. With due respect to the positive initiatives that were taken during those years and to the part he played as Secretary of State for External Affairs on two occasions, I must say that many Canadians and foreigners who are acquainted with Canada's record in foreign affairs are convinced that the Trudeau years were not such good ones for Canada on the international scene.

Senator Perrault: Come on now; be fair.

Senator Murray: The Leader of the Opposition comes in here shedding tears about the elimination of a cabinet committee on foreign affairs, implying that this is allegedly diminishing the stature of the Department of External Affairs. When did Prime Minister Trudeau ever listen to any cabinet committee? It is the stuff of legends around here that, in the famous foreign policy review of 1969-70, when ministers were examining a number of documents from the various departments concerned, they came in one day only to find that those documents were gone. On the cabinet table for consideration was a new document prepared by the Privy Council Office.

Senator Perrault: That is not true.

Senator Murray: Pierre Trudeau made foreign policy off the top of his head—Ivan Head. In the early days, he sent Ivan Head around the world to meet various heads of state. There is nothing wrong with that—it was his prerogative. Foreign affairs is primarily the prerogative of the Prime Minister. However, I think it ill behoves the present Leader of the Opposition to come to this chamber complaining about the disappearance of one cabinet committee when foreign affairs is being discussed by the senior decision-making committee of government, the Cabinet Committee on Policy and Priorities. The reason for that is that it is recognized that foreign affairs cuts across so many other activities of government.

● (1540)

The Trudeau years in foreign affairs started with the famous question "Where is Biafra?" He knew where Biafra was. He knew it was part of the federal state of Nigeria. But he could not see his way clear to help feed the hungry. He took the position that because Biafra was trying to secede, Canada could not engage in the humanitarian work of feeding the hungry. It was a narrow, legalistic approach, absolutely devoid of humanitarian consideration. They then proceeded to cut our contribution to NATO. The present vulnerable state of our forces is well documented in the report of the Senate committee and in the study recently undertaken by the Business Council on National Issues.

They flirted with neutralism. Mr. Trudeau went to the Soviet Union and talked about the overpowering presence of the United States on Canada, reflected, he said, in the "growing consciousness among Canadians of the danger to our national identity from a cultural, economic and perhaps even military point of view". What were Canadians to make of that? What were our allies to make of that kind of statement coming from the Prime Minister of the country?

Senator Frith: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Has he by any chance forgotten that his party now forms the government? At times I feel that I have woken up and found that we are again the government in power, that Mr. Trudeau is still the Prime Minister and that we are talking about the Liberal Party. I thought that this was a speech on the "brave new world" of the present government; but all we have heard so far is Liberal bashing, and I know the honourable senator is comfortable on that subject.

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Perrault: Let us hear about the "brave new world".

Senator Murray: It is perhaps unfair to refer to Mr. Trudeau, because he wants to "fade into complete obscurity." He wants to "fade into complete obscurity," and he is so serious about it that he gave an interview on national television the better to convey that desire.

Senator Frith: Is this a debate on the Liberal years?

Senator Murray: I am trying to reply, in an organized fashion, to points made by the Leader of the Opposition on leaders' day, when he took umbrage at what was said in the Speech from the Throne.

Senator Perrault: He confined himself to the Speech from the Throne, and that is what you should be doing.

Senator Murray: He purported to enumerate a number of positive achievements in foreign policy under the Trudeau government. I must say that with the exception of the opening up of our relations with China, which he mentioned, I found that my feelings were ambivalent and I did not find the other items particularly impressive. I am sorry that my honourable friends, who used to be so proud of this record—

Senator Frith: I am proud of it.

Senator Murray: —no longer want to hear any more about it.

An Hon. Senator: He does not want to be reminded.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): You are really getting to them there, when they start to yap like that.

An Hon. Senator: Give them some more.

Senator Frith: We thought we would be hearing about the Speech from the Throne, but you are more comfortable with Liberal bashing than anything else.

Senator Perrault: Déjà vu. It is all passé.

Senator Murray: I do not want my honourable friend to miss curtain time this evening; so I shall proceed.

Senator Perrault: Don't let him strain his voice.

Senator Frith: I don't appear before the second act. Go ahead.

Senator Murray: Mr. Trudeau, on his return from the U.S.S.R., was asked, in a CBC interview, why he had not asked the Soviet leaders about their jailing of Ukrainian nationalists. What did he do? He compared the Ukrainian nationalists to the FLQ. I quote from that CBC interview as follows:

My position in the Soviet Union or in Canada is that anyone who breaks the law to assert his nationalism does not get too much sympathy from me.

I didn't particularly feel like bringing up any cases which would have caused Brezhnev or Kosygin to say "Well, you know, why did you put in jail certain FLQ leaders? After all, they think they are only fighting for the independence of Quebec . . . Why should you put your revolutionaries in jail and we shouldn't put ours?"

A leading Canadian journalist described the comparison between the Ukrainian nationalists and the FLQ as "inept". I must say that "inept" was one of the kinder descriptions.

Senator Perrault: Every little tawdry pamphlet is being put on the record.

Senator Murray: The Leader of the Opposition came here exercised because we proposed to close five missions abroad. The Leader of the Opposition said:

These are not signs of reviving internationalism; they are signs of withdrawal.

In 10 years, between 1968 and 1978, they closed 17 missions abroad. Down with the embassy at Montevideo; down with the high commission in Nicosia; down with the embassy in Santo Domingo.

Senator Perrault: It was an enlightened decision based on economic considerations—and you know it.

Senator Murray: In 1968 the former government sent—

Senator Frith: Let us talk about this government.

Senator Murray: I am sorry that my honourable friends opposite find this hard to swallow. In 1968 the former government sent a bunch of cabinet ministers around Latin America at a cost of $240,000—

Senator Perrault: It was a federal trade mission, and you know it.

Senator Murray: They returned spouting banalities about the important place of Latin America in the world, of the importance of Latin America to us, with which we all agree, and then they proceeded to close three or four missions in Latin America—after junketing around the territory for weeks. Resuming my narrative, they closed the embassy in Phnom Penh.

Senator Frith: You can take the boy out of the opposition but you can't take the opposition out of the boy.

Senator Murray: They closed the consulates in Manchester, Bristol, Leeds, Liverpool, in Ponta del Gadia, in Cologne, in Stuttgart, in Karachi, in Capetown, in Johannesburg, in Bombay and in San Juan. Even Belfast got the axe.

They would say that they also opened a number of missions, and indeed they did. I believe they opened 20 or 21. Therefore they had a net gain of three or four. But so will we. I have every confidence that the new Progressive Conservative government, as time goes on, will open missions for Canada in various parts of the world where Canadian interests dictate that that should be done. Frankly, I find it quite incredible that the Leader of the Opposition should come here bemoaning the fact that the present government intends, as an economy measure, to close five missions in various parts of the world. Not a word was said about the missions they closed.

I refer now to the question of official development assistance, the decision of the new government to postpone for five years—

Senator Perrault: You are quoting Tory speech notes of the last campaign—recycling them.

Senator Murray:—the adjustment of the spending target of .7 per cent of GNP in official development assistance. Yesterday we heard from Senator Davey that this was an indication of the mentality of the Tories. The Leader of the Opposition said:

Here the gap between rhetoric and action is so large that it undermines the whole credibility of the government.

Let me say seriously that I for one, and a great many others on this side of the house, regret the postponement in the achievement of this target. I believe that all of us who are interested in these matters must be vigilant about Canada's performance in this field, particularly with a new government, because I know and we all know that there is always a temptation to make cuts where the politics of it are not as serious domestically. I particularly regret the postponement because it is not the first time it has happened—not by a long shot. I say that Liberal governments have been playing with these foreign aid targets for 15 years. In October, 1969, the Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson, commissioned by the World Bank to do a study on international development, recommended this target of .7 per cent by 1975 or 1980. In June, 1970, the Trudeau government brought out its famous foreign policy review, pledging that the government would move toward the target. Well, they moved all right. They moved up and they moved down, and they moved sideways, as the years went on. In 1970, when they made that promise, Official Development Assistance as a proportion of GNP was at .42 per cent. In 1971 it stayed at .42 per cent. In 1972 it went up to .47 per cent, in 1973 down to .43 per cent and in 1974 up to .50 per cent. Then we come to September, 1975 and the Trudeau government brings out its "Strategy for International Development Cooperation, 1975-1980." At that time the government said it:

—reaffirms its determination to achieve the official United Nations target of 0.7 per cent of GNP and to move towards this target by annual increases in the proportion of Official Development Assistance to GNP.

• (1550)

Senator Perrault: Why don't you go back and tell us about the administrations of Laurier and King now?

Senator Murray: The ink was hardly dry on that undertaking given in 1975 when Official Development Assistance as a proportion of GNP went from .54 per cent, as it was in that year, to .46 per cent in 1976, up to .51 per cent in 1977, to .52 per cent in 1978, down to .46 per cent in 1979, down to .43 per cent in 1980 where it remained through 1981, then down to .41 per cent in 1982 and up to .45 per cent in 1983.

Senator Perrault: For God's sake, you are gumming that issue to death.

Senator Murray: In October 1982, when the Honourable Allan MacEachen had become the Secretary of State for External Affairs for the second time and the Honourable Marc Lalonde was the Minister of Finance—

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): What a team.

Senator Murray: —Mr. Lalonde came into the House of Commons with his budget and announced that Official Development Assistance will be reduced by $245 million from the dollar level previously allocated. That is what Marc Lalonde did to Allan MacEachen and to our Official Development Program.

Senator Frith: It is a good thing that Sitting Bull was not a Liberal or we would be hearing about his administration.

Senator Perrault: We are getting a lot of bull now.

Senator Murray: Once again, I regret the postponement of the achievement of that target. For honourable senators to come in here, two months into the life of the Mulroney government—

Senator Frith: If you can call it that.

Senator Perrault: It is barely living.

Senator Murray: —and attack our credibility, gives new meaning to the old Gaelic word “chutzpah.” I say seriously that they have no right—

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, on a point of order, “chutzpah” is not a Gaelic word. For the record, I merely wanted to correct the honourable senator.

Senator Murray: I must confess that I knew that it was a Yiddish expression. I made that comment simply to provoke my honourable friend who, I thought, was, perhaps, in a state of torpor in his unaccustomed seat in the backbench.

Seriously, considering the record I have just described, it is disgraceful that an honourable senator would come in here, two months into the life of the Mulroney government—

Senator Perrault: And speak the way you have.

Senator Murray: —and begin to attack our credibility on that issue. What did the respected North-South Institute have to say about this in their report, “In the Canadian Interest: Third World Development in the 1980s” at page 31:

From being one of the more promising aspirants to reach the accepted international target of 0.7 per cent of GNP, Canada has become a laggard in the OECD group. The fact that Lester B. Pearson had helped secure international acceptance of the 0.7 per cent target has a special, bitter irony for the world community watching the indecent haste of Canada's retreat from its commitments.

That is what the North-South Institute had to say about the performance of my honourable friend's government when they were in office.

There is one more issue and that has to do with the Gulf of Maine decision by the World Court.

Senator Frith: Good God, are you going to blame us for that one, too? Since it happened in our administration, I guess so.

Senator Murray: The Leader of the Opposition came in here attributing to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and to other, unnamed, ministers statements which, on the basis of the record, I must say, I do not believe were ever made. I have copies of the transcript of the interview that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans gave in Halifax the day the decision was announced. I have copies of press releases put out by four ministers—the Honourable Joe Clark, the Honourable Pat Carney, the Honourable John Fraser and the Honourable John Crosbie—and I see nothing in those statements to warrant the interpretation that was put on them by the Leader of the Opposition here on the day he spoke in this debate. The Leader of the Opposition says that the decision falls short of what we asked for. He was the guy who decided to go to court. He compares the decision with the 1979 treaty with the United States, particularly in terms of the scallop fishery. That treaty is dead and he must have known it was dead, otherwise, why did he go off to court? He is the guy who made a deal with the Americans to the effect that we would accept the decision of the World Court as final and binding. We are stuck with this decision.

Senator Roblin: Who did that?

Senator Murray: The former Secretary of State for External Affairs, the present Leader of the Opposition in the Senate.

Some negotiations may still ensue and I assure the Senate that before taking a hard and fast position on matters that may still be open to bargaining, I know that the government is seeking the views of advisory groups of fishermen representative of the fishing industry. This is the method of consultation, instead of confrontation and litigation which the previous government followed, the results of which the Leader of the Opposition now finds so unsatisfactory.

I return to what I said at the beginning about the importance of multilateral institutions and their importance to Canada in exercising some influence on the course of world events. I will place one final quotation from the North-South Institute on the record which I think is quite important. They are talking about the protectionist patterns of the Government of Canada in its negotiations. Incidentally, I thought the evils of protectionism were referred to quite eloquently in the Speech from the Throne and alluded to quite directly in Mr. Wilson's agenda paper. This quotation from the North-South Institute states:

This protectionist pattern presents a crisis of credibility for Canadian trade policy and raises questions about Canada's commitment to the multilateral liberal trading system and its stake in preserving the rule of law in international trade. In the area of special import policy and the more general trade policy issues debated at the multilateral trade negotiations, there appears to have been an operative assumption on the part of Canadian policy makers that this country alone had been playing by the “rules of the game” and carrying more than its share of the “burden” of low-cost imports—which critics at home refer to as “boy scoutism” and “naïveté”. Informed outside observers, meanwhile, have bemoaned a new Canadian narrowness and reticence to provide multilateral leadership, with one U.S. official stating that a particular Canadian position in the recent GATT talks was "just another example of how Canada refuses to accept the doctrine of equal pain in these negotiations." At the MTN, Canadian representatives were understandably struggling to secure some clear Canadian objectives in bargaining that was dominated by the great trading powers, but observers have suggested that, for the first time, Canada seemed to have lost sight of its stake in the openness and vitality of the trade system as a whole. Moreover, the trade negotiations may be an example of how Canada has underestimated its potential, at least in concert with others, to shape multilateral solutions to global problems.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, in keeping with good Parliamentary practice, would the honourable senator cite the page, the reference of that quotation and the author of those remarks? It is not good enough to come into this chamber and quote something out of context without adequately stating the source. I know that the honourable senator will be willing to do as I requested.

Senator Murray: I assure my honourable friend that this is not one of those yellow, tattered newspaper clippings that he so deplored when he was Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Senator Perrault: Give us the proper references and pages.

Senator Murray: There is a book entitled "In the Canadian Interest: Third World Development in the 1980s."

Senator Perrault: Could we have the name of the author of that report.

Senator Murray: The North-South Institute.

Senator Perrault: Do you have the name of the writer?

● (1600)

Senator Murray: It is an institute in this city which is doing valuable analytical work in the field of international development. The director of the institute, whose name appears in the book in the preface, although I doubt very much that he is the sole author, is Mr. Bernard Wood. The quotation I have just cited comes from pages 50 and 51 of the document in question.

Honourable senators, the ability of Canada to shape multilateral solutions to global problems is what is being talked about in the foreign policy section in the Speech from the Throne. I regret some honourable senators do not like the passage; however, that is what we are talking about and it is something that we have apparently lost in recent years and which we are trying to regain in our foreign policy.

With these introductory remarks, I simply wish to say that I think the government is on the right track. I know that there will be plenty of opportunity and plenty of time for honourable senators opposite—all our adversaries—to criticize the performance. However, I implore them to wait until they see the concrete results of the policies of this government.

Needless to add, I support the motion for an Address in Reply proposed by Senator Macquarrie and Senator Tremblay.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator Petten, for Senator Graham, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 27, 1984, at 2 p.m.

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

TWENTY-FIFTH MEETING, PUERTO RICO

MARCH 8-12, 1984

REPORT OF THE CANADIAN DELEGATION

Delegations from the Canadian Parliament and the U.S. Congress met in Dorado, Puerto Rico for the twenty-fifth meeting of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group. The delegates were divided into three Committees: Committee I discussed trade and economic questions; Committee II dealt with energy and defence issues; and Committee III discussed environmental and border issues. Committees II and III came together later for a joint discussion of two multilateral issues, Central America and the Middle East. A plenary session which dealt with how Canada could make its case most effectively in Washington and a survey of the pre-election political situation in the two countries concluded the annual meeting. The Canadians who co-chaired the Committee meetings with U.S. counterparts were: for Committee I, the Honourable John Reid, P.C., M.P.; for Committee II, David Kilgour, M.P.; and for Committee III, Herb Breau, M.P.

COMMITTEE I - TRADE AND ECONOMIC QUESTIONS

1. The international economic climate
  - a) Prospects for world debt and trade
  - b) US and Canadian economic prospects
2. Bilateral free trade arrangements
  - a) Free trade - across-the-board or in specific sectors?
  - b) Discussion of possible sectors involved: automotive; steel; urban mass transit; petrochemicals; textiles and clothing; telecommunications equipment and computer services; forest products; agricultural machinery and equipment.
3. Specific trade issues
  - a) Communications: border broadcasting; copyright.
  - b) Extraterritoriality issues.
    - Export Administration Act
    - unitary taxation
    - U.S. subpoenas
  - c) Proposed legislation.
    - U.S. reciprocity and services bill
    - reform of dumping and countervail laws
    - reform of Canadian import law
  - d) Specific irritants: fish; asbestos; steel; potatoes.
  - e) Canadian tax on tourist literature.
  - f) Agricultural commodities.
4. Multilateral Issues
  - a) U.S. and Canadian perspectives on revision of the CAP
  - b) U.S. and Canadian trade policy in the Caribbean (Caribbean Basin Initiative)

Discussion in Committee I was spirited and stimulating. Both sides demonstrated particular interest in discussing macro-economic topics, which left insufficient time to cover all the items on the agenda.

U.S. and Canadian Economic Prospects

A Canadian participant opened discussion with a review of salient statistics on the state of the Canadian economy: unemployment at 11.2 per cent, down from a high point of 11.9 per cent; inflation down to about 5 per cent; and a favourable commercial trade balance of $18 billion, offset by a deficit of a comparable size on invisibles. A major concern in Canada was that high interest rates could damage the delicate state of economic recovery. If U.S. interest rates were to rise, Canada would be squeezed. It would be a difficult choice, but to limit the rise of interest rates in Canada, it would probably be necessary to allow the exchange rate to fall still further. In the light of these uncertainties, there was a risk that economic recovery would not match the levels achieved in 1983. The government was projecting growth of 4.8 per cent, but many thought this figure was optimistic.

A Congressman responded with a few U.S. indicators. The Administration expected unemployment to decline to 7.8 per cent and the economy to grow at 4.6 per cent. Inflation was likely to drop to 4.4 per cent. Production was generally increasing, but the housing market was flat. In most instances, private projections were less optimistic than those of the Administration. The trade deficit might amount to $100 billion and could be worse still in 1985. The federal fiscal deficit was likely to reach $190 billion and might grow to $300 billion by the end of the decade. With the federal reserve system continuing to focus on inflation, the "fed" might be inclined to force up interest rates. Americans too were concerned that, if this policy were sustained, it might stop further growth of the economy.

Discussion focussed principally on the size of the debt in both countries and the possibilities for its reduction. A Canadian noted that in relative terms the federal deficit of about $30 billion in 1984 was 50 per cent larger than that of the United States. On top of this figure the provincial governments had moved during the past year to an aggregate deficit position. This situation contrasted with the budgets of the U.S. state governments which were in aggregate in balance.

It was noted that in both countries debt service had become a major budgetary item, about 13 per cent of expenditure in the United States and over 20 per cent in Canada. A Canadian speaker observed that at current high real interest rates, which were heavily influenced by U.S. rates, increased revenue derived from higher taxes was absorbed by the growth in debt service charges. He added that Americans might not be aware how much they affected the world economy, and in particular that of Canada.

While the immense difficulty of bringing down the deficit was recognized, there was widespread support for the view that the executive in both governments had not paid sufficient attention to the adverse effect of the very large deficits. Participants appreciated that inflation had been very substantially reduced in both countries and that this had strengthened the two economies and promoted competitiveness. But it was generally agreed that governments and ultimately the people of the two countries were not fully aware of the potential seriousness of the deficit pattern which has developed. An American participant noted with concern that, contrary to the Keynesian precept that governments should have deficits in depressed years and pay them off in good years, the U.S. government was now in deficit even in prosperous years. This led a Canadian delegate to observe that the Canadian budget had only been in surplus one year since 1970.

U.S. delegates discussed among themselves the prospects for Congressional agreement on tax increases and cuts in expenditure. There was general acceptance that cuts in discretionary expenditure were limited and would have very little effect. This meant that there had to be agreement over some cut in what the Americans call entitlement programs and what in Canada are often known as universal programs. While agreement on tax increases was easier to accomplish, it seemed to be accepted that without a parallel cut in government expenditures, the deficits could not be significantly reduced. The Ways and Means Committee has discussed an Administration suggestion for a tax package which would over three years reduce the deficit by $50 billion, but speakers did not feel this was sufficient. The Administration was being pressed to come forward in addition with expenditure cuts of a comparable magnitude. There were differences of opinion among U.S. politicians and political parties on how much to increase defence expenditure, with the President favouring a larger growth than Democrats. However, U.S. participants in the discussion expressed the opinion that there was a growing realization in Congress that major steps had to be taken to reduce the deficit.

Canadian delegates felt that Canada could not move in a direction different from that of the United States. Canadian interest rates took their lead from U.S. rates. While Canada did not have a defence bulge, the debt was proportionately larger and the government's discretionary expenditures just as limited. Moreover, the economy had responded less well than in the United States and unemployment was significantly higher, which led to higher unemployment insurance and welfare charges against the treasury. In rough terms, about one-half the current Canadian deficit was influenced by cyclical factors, so that a significant improvement in the state of the economy could reduce the deficit substantially. But the prospects of this happening were not great and government action to cut expenditure was unavoidable if the debt was to be reduced.

This broad discussion concluded with an interesting exchange on the difficulties in the two political systems of cutting expenditures. A Canadian speaker noted that the British parliamentary system permits top down direction, concentrates power in the hands of cabinet and allows the government to act with decisiveness and speed if it wishes to do so. He reported that in 1981 Prime Minister Thatcher of Britain had directed the Chancellor of the Exchequer to cut the deficit by 5 billion. A determined government could hold the line on new expenditure, but other Canadian delegates observed how the political system resisted attempts to do this. Recently there had been a rumour in the Liberal caucus of a windfall revenue amounting to $3 billion. Instead of advocating the application of these funds to reducing the deficit, numerous proposals for increased expenditure had immediately surfaced. His Conservative friends had told him that the situation within their caucus was similar.

Another Canadian delegate, while recognizing that the back bench Member of Parliament is more insulated against local pressures than is the Member of Congress, pointed out that political developments were increasing those pressures. Small government majorities and the threat of an unexpected election hung over the political system and made it hard for governments to take tough decisions. At the same time there was increasing emphasis on constituency matters, with MPs persuaded that greater expenditures in their ridings would help them to retain their seats in the next election. The consideration of expenditure in separate committees of the House of Commons meant that Members had no opportunity to consider the larger picture, concentrating instead on expenditures in areas of particular concern to them. Finally the adversary system in the Canadian parliament meant that the government was under attack from all sides, making it extremely difficult to develop a consensus across party lines on expenditure cuts.

A U.S. delegate acknowledged that, while the American system was slow-moving, susceptible to enormous pressure from lobbys and interest groups and offered the individual Member of Congress little protection from these pressures, party differences were not nearly so pronounced. This allowed in times of crisis for the development of bi-partisan policies.

Another American participant commented that the Congress had made it harder to achieve accomodations and develop consensus by opening too many meetings to the public. It was difficult for Members of Congress to agree to a compromise if an affected interest group were present in the audience at the meeting. Politics required compromise and it was easier to achieve consensus in private. There was increasing recourse in committees of Congress to motions to close meetings because this made it easier to take hard decisions.

This first item on the agenda was concluded with a strong statement from a Canadian delegate that politicians must get the message out to the public that deficits are dangerous. Ultimately deficits will lead to the erosion of national competitiveness, which in turn would cause increased unemployment. Cuts in individual programs may be unpalatable, but they could be necessary to restore and maintain the health of the economy.

Prospects for World Debt and Trade

Discussion of this item was preceded by an exchange on the trade situations of Canada and the United States. An American delegate observed that the United States was facing a major trade problem. The importance of trade to the United States had doubled in less than a generation to the point where it represented over 10 per cent of GNP. The economies of the countries of the European Community were flat and the traditional U.S. trade surplus with Europe had disappeared. The troubles of the Less Developed Countries had hurt U.S. exports. Only the Japanese economy continued to perform reasonably well, but the United States had a trade deficit with Japan. The result was a major commercial trade deficit for the United States, a situation which was new for it. All U.S. participants recognized that a decline in the U.S. dollar relative to the D-mark and the yen would be highly desirable and necessary to correct the imbalance which had developed.

Canadian participants noted that Canada had to be particularly concerned over the state of trade with the United States, since 70 per cent of its trade was with that country. The strong recovery in the United States and the weaker performance of the Canadian economy had combined to give Canada a record merchandise trade surplus. However, the deficit in invisibles - services, tourism and debt charges - was of a comparable size, so that the payments account ended up in rough balance.

Against this background, participants focussed on the effect of debts of third world countries - particularly Brazil, Mexico and Argentina - on international trade. An American delegate commented that the United States had suddenly become aware of the link between debts and trade. For the first time in the post-war world, the real value of international trade had declined by 2 1/2 per cent in 1982. Specifically cutbacks in imports by Latin American countries had cost the United States 400,000 jobs annually and resulted in the loss of $20 billion of exports.

The United States and other trading nations had responded to the debt problems of developing countries with a number of 'ad hoc' policies: the International Monetary Fund had been supported in requiring tough budgetary and fiscal measures as a condition for financial support; the governments had agreed to reschedule debt payments, covering both capital and interest; and the banks had been under pressure to reschedule existing loans and make new lendings.

Delegates on both sides recognized that these were immediate responses designed to give the debtor governments time to take corrective measures. In terms of further steps which the industrialized nations could take, delegates spoke in favour of rescheduling debt repayments over longer periods and strengthening the international banking institutions. American participants reported that there was considerable resistance in the Congress to this latter step. It had not been easy to persuade the Congress to agree to a quota increase for the International Monetary Fund. There was a widespread feeling that the objective of doing this was to bail out the banks which had been imprudent in their lending. Ultimately Congress had been persuaded to approve the United States sharing in an increase in the IMF quota. But an attempt to increase the U.S. participation in the seventh International Development Association replenishment had failed, and the current American commitment was smaller than it had been for the sixth replenishment.

A Canadian participant said that it had to be admitted that many banks had been dangerously over exposed and that the International Monetary Fund had been critical in saving the banking system from possible disaster. Canadian and U.S. banks had allowed themselves to become overly levered and over exposed. But there was no way to isolate any penalties which might have been suffered if lending banks had been allowed to collapse.

One participant inquired whether banks should be excluded from making loans to foreign governments. But another delegate countered by asking if the world would be better off if only intergovernmental loans were accepted.

A problem which worried several participants was IMF pressure on debtor countries to restrict imports and promote exports, so as to improve their trade balances. This approach involved costs for industrialized countries in terms of reduced exports and competing imports, developments which were hard to accept when protectionist pressure was strong. But other participants warned that there was no alternative, if the debtor countries were to be assisted to overcome their own economic problems. While their import restrictions would be tough on industrialized countries, Western countries had to take a longer term perspective.

Bilateral Free Trade Arrangements

A Canadian spokesman introduced the subject of bilateral free trade arrangements. Recalling the Canadian policy options of the early 1970s, notably the Third Option paper and the Contractual Link with Europe, he noted with approval the government's discussion paper "Canadian Trade Policy for the 1980s" tabled in 1983. This paper reaffirmed the central importance to Canada of trade with the United States and recommended that the two countries explore the prospects for sectoral free trade arrangements. The U.S. Administration had responded positively and officials of the two governments were exploring the appropriateness of a number of specific sectors including steel, petrochemicals, urban mass transit and information services.

It had been encouraging to note that the cautious approach had not aroused any nationalistic responses of the kind which had killed earlier efforts to move to free trade between the two countries. Nor had it become a partisan question, as it had been in 1911. In the spokesman's opinion, freer trade with the United States offered Canada a chance to make its industry more competitive and gain access to a much larger market. For the United States the primary benefit would be in having a healthy and prosperous neighbour.

Other Canadian participants agreed that Canada's dependence on the U.S. market made it essential that some way be found to shelter Canada from trade-related responses by the United States to unfair competition, which usually hurt Canada more than the country which the measures were specifically designed to counteract. The over-valued U.S. dollar meant that U.S. trade was particularly vulnerable and, combined with high levels of unemployment, was resulting in a large number of safeguard investigations. Although it was widely acknowledged in the United States that Canadian trade practices were in the main quite fair and unobjectionable, Canada, as the United States' largest trading partner, was often the country most severely affected by any safeguard action which was taken.

A U.S. delegate responded by acknowledging that in bilateral terms economic relations between the two countries had never been better. He regarded the Canadian approach as an interesting initiative and commended the U.S. Administration for its positive response. As a multilateralist, he was slightly nervous with a bilateral approach, but he recognized that economic relations between the two countries were sufficiently important to justify a special response.

There was general agreement that agricultural trade involved special problems and should be handled separately. Canadian participants admitted that provincial powers presented some difficulties for Canada, which would have to be faced and resolved within Canada if the negotiations appeared to be leading to an agreement. Canada similarly expected that the implications of any sectoral free trade agreement would have to be accepted in U.S. law and would have to bind the U.S. state governments. From this perspective Canadians were concerned that draft legislation regarding domestic content requirements in the U.S. automobile industry treated Canada as a foreign country and ignored the Auto Pact.

A couple of U.S. delegates asked Canadian participants how they would feel if the Congress were to give the President specific authority to negotiate some kind of free trade arrangements with Canada. The President's residual authority under the Trade Act of 1974 was limited and there was some doubt that it would be sufficient. The time for Congress to act would be immediately following the November election. Canadians replied that they would welcome such a response, providing it was prompted by a reaffirmation of Canadian interest. For political reasons, it was important that the initiative be perceived as lying with Canada.

Participants from both sides agreed that there was a marked shift in attitudes on both sides of the border. The approach of Canadian industry as reflected in positions taken by the Business Council on National Issues and the Chamber of Commerce had evolved significantly, and at this stage it was Canadian labour which was most reticent.

Both sides recognized that this was an area where public attitudes were very important. If opportunities for making progress emerged from the negotiations among officials and the Canadian government was ready to move, it was suggested that at that time a special meeting of the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group might be a useful step.

The committee at this point turned to a number of specific irritants of particular concern to participants in the discussion, including items not on the agenda.

Border Broadcasting

A U.S. delegate led off with the assertion that border broadcasting problems remained an irritant and showed no sign of disappearing. Another New York delegate mentioned that the up state broadcasters in his state had met only two days prior to the Puerto Rico meeting and had reaffirmed their dissatisfaction. U.S. participants expressed their regret that the principle of proportionality had been rejected by Canada, as it seemed to offer a political compromise. They expressed the hope that the next Canadian government would either repeal the legislation or seek an accommodation. Otherwise they expected the Congress to adopt mirror legislation in 1985. Admittedly such a move was unsatisfactory for the United States, in that it would involve some costs. Nevertheless, Presidents Carter and Reagan had both recommended it as the best available U.S. political response. Unfortunately for Canadian-American relations, it would generate some bad feeling.

Canadian participants acknowledged the political dimension of the problem in the United States. But Canadian broadcasters considered it was worth $30 million to them and simultaneous substitution was worth another $20 million. At the same time Americans should realize that Canadian radio and TV stations were the best customers of U.S. producers, spending about $150 million annually on U.S. productions.

The problem existed, they pointed out, because the government regulates the Canadian broadcasting industry and mandates Canadian content rules. U.S. border broadcasters are not licensed to broadcast across the border and are under no obligation to satisfy the Canadian content rules. The problem arose because technically the border cannot be controlled, and so bill C-58 had been devised to overcome the problem. In the circumstances, if the United States decided to impose mirror legislation, Canada could not complain. But, as another Canadian participant observed, it would be important that the United States not act until after the next Canadian election, as it could otherwise become a counter-productive election issue.

Canadian delegates also noted that technical advancements were adding to difficulties in this area. Satellite transmission meant that U.S. signals could now be picked up anywhere in the country, not just in border areas. It would be wise to look at this whole area again after the elections in both countries and try to work out a compromise.

Trucking

Several U.S. delegates expressed their concern at what they regarded as the unbalanced situation which now prevailed. As a result of deregulation of the U.S. trucking industry, Canadian truckers could now operate quite freely in the United States. But U.S. trucking firms wishing to operate in Canada had to secure a provincial permit. Moreover, Canada further controlled U.S. entry through FIRA procedures. Even if a U.S. company met FIRA's conditions, there was no assurance of a provincial permit.

The particular development which led American participants to raise the question was the reported decision of the Ontario Highway Transport Board to reject an application from Yellow Freight. This was a long standing issue, but in recent years, the impression had been conveyed that progress was being made in finding a mutually acceptable resolution. Apparently this impression was incorrect. If this turned out to be correct, the U.S. government would have to consider what action it could take.

Export Administration Act

This topic only received the most cursory treatment as time was running out. A Canadian delegate reminded the meeting of the objections of the Canadian and other allied governments to the extra-territorial features of the Export Administration Act.

A U.S. delegate commented briefly that both Houses of the U.S. Congress had modified certain features of the Administration's draft and in particular had deleted provisions relating to foreign policy considerations. He felt that some months would pass before the bill would be finally approved.

U.S. Subpoenas

Although this subject came up toward the end of the meeting and when little time for discussion remained, it generated a heated discussion and revealed that U.S. delegates held very strong feelings on the subject.

The U.S. side opened discussion by pointing to the magnitude and seriousness of the drug trade, which required that unusual steps be taken to get at drug traffickers. In the past money had been laundered in Florida, but the U.S. government had blocked this avenue and foreign branches operating in Miami which handled these funds had been closed. A U.S. Senator noted that branches had subsequently been opened in Thailand and Pakistan for this purpose. On learning of this, she had personally telephoned the presidents of the two countries and as a result of these interventions, the branches had been closed there. Now a favoured practice of drug dealers was to fly to Toronto and deposit funds to an account in Canadian branches of that bank in the Cayman Islands or in the Bahamas, as the first step in laundering the funds.

Canadian participants responded by complaining that U.S. subpoenas against the Miami branch of the Bank of Nova Scotia amounted to taking a commercial hostage. The Miami branch at no time was ever involved. Moreover, the Canadian authorities tried to cooperate, and were ready to do so within the limits of the laws on disclosure in the jurisdictions in which the branches involved were operating. The action of the U.S. courts, which were federal institutions, was heavy-handed. At the time that efforts were proceeding satisfactorily to secure the agreement of the Cayman authorities to make local bank records available, a heavy fine of $1.8 million had been imposed and there were reports that another 30 subpoenas were about to be issued.

U.S. participants, emphasizing that a major business of the Cayman branch was in facilitating the laundering of drug money, asked if Canada did not have responsibility to police the offshore activities of Canadian banks. Canadians replied that this would constitute the extra-territorial application of Canadian law, to which Canada took exception on principle. The Canadian approach was for the two governments jointly to approach the Cayman authorities and persuade them to change their rules regarding disclosure in the interest of good hemispheric relations.

U.S. Reciprocity and Services Bill

The U.S. spokesman on this item spoke of the concern in Congress over how to deal with subsidies to trade which he described as becoming "more and more sophisticated and less open and less direct." Canada was not a serious problem; its subsidies were open and direct. Japan was very skillful at hiding subsidies and "Mexico and Brazil did not even know what they were supporting". Pressure was building in Congress to stiffen the back of the U.S. Administration, by requiring them to pursue foreign governments which were subsidizing trade and to apply countervail duties where subsidies were confirmed.

The first Canadian delegate to speak expressed some worry over language in the Danforth and Heinz bills, which appeared to give the Administration authority to take retaliatory action wherever they wished; the draft legislation specifically asserted that such action "need not be limited to the product" being subsidized. There was a fear in Canada that reciprocity legislation could lead to unintended new problems. Legislation could have more than one purpose. For example, the Canadian government might draft a bill to promote a cultural purpose (e.g. bill C-58), whereas the United States might perceive it as a restraint on trade. Similarly, regional development grants might be intended to encourage development in economically depressed areas and to make up for economic disadvantages, yet be seen by the United States as a subsidy. Sometimes the problem might occur just because the two countries used different techniques, say, to collect rent on state land where cutting was permitted e.g. stumpage.

The question was asked whether Canadian manufactured goods would be subject to countervail if the natural gas used in their production, as in steel, was sold more cheaply in Canada than abroad. A U.S. participant answered that it would, although he added that the proposed legislation did require that injury be proved.

In general Canadians worried that a new law could have an unintended fall-out. The author of one of the bills to which Canadian participants objected, who was a participant in the meeting, claimed that his bill had been substantially modified and, to make his point, distributed a commentary on the revised text.

Canadian Tax on Tourist Literature

U.S. participants complained about the recent Canadian decision to apply a 9 per cent federal sales tax to tourist literature imported into Canada which had been produced abroad promoting foreign travel. Congressmen were receiving complaints from across the United States over this Canadian regulation which seemed unfair. A "sense of Congress" resolution asking Canada to withdraw the new regulation was being considered, as well as legislation which would levy a similar U.S. tax on Canadian tourist literature.

A Canadian participant explained that the federal government levied an across-the-board sales tax on all manufactured products, whether produced in Canada or imported. Tourist literature had been overlooked in the past, but once it had been included, foreign produced literature could hardly be ignored. He noted that under an ICAO agreement tourist literature produced by airlines was exempted. The tax was in fact having an undesirable effect in Canada, in that many tourist operators who focussed on the U.S. market were finding that they could lower their costs and escape the tax by printing and distributing their literature in the United States. In his opinion the application of the tax on tourist literature was not beneficial and there was some ground for thinking that, on review, the Canadian government might itself decide to exempt tourist literature, domestic and foreign.

Steel

Several Canadian delegates expressed dismay at the actions being taken in the United States both through an International Trade Commission investigation and a quota bill in the Congress which could seriously damage Canadian steel exports. This was disturbing because Canada was a fair trader in steel, producing it without any form of subsidy. Action against carbon steel imports from Canada was hard to understand as the relationship between the Canadian and U.S. steel industries seemed to be mutually beneficial. Canada used U.S. coking coal; the United States was a major exporter of steels to Canada; there was a considerable integration of downstream fabricating with Canadian steel billets often being imported by U.S. producers to even out their production without having to start another blast furnace; a single union represented the workers in both countries and wage rates were comparable; and much of the machinery used for producing steel in Canada was manufactured in the United States. In brief, it was a healthy, symbiotic relationship. If the United States limited Canadian exports, Canada would probably retaliate by turning to Europe and Japan. The only encouraging development was the interest being taken in a sectoral free trade arrangement.

A U.S. delegate, who commented that U.S. steel was the sickest and most highly paid industry in the United States, observed that the problem arose because Article XIX of GATT did not include a safeguards code. An action under section 201 of the U.S. Foreign Trade Act could not be directly targetted; the "chips fall where they may". Steel was not the only such action taken; copper imports were also being pursued, and others. While it was possible that the U.S. legal process regarding copper would not be completed before the November election, President Reagan would be faced with some kind of decision on steel imports before the election.

Another U.S. participant expressed concern about the undesirable effects of import limitations. While some jobs might be saved in the steel industry, all products using steel would become more expensive and U.S. industry would be less competitive. What was worrying was that the U.S. steel industry seemed more interested in dividing up the world market than in producing steel more efficiently and more cheaply in the United States. Hearings had not yet been scheduled in the Congress on the quota bill, and when and if hearings did take place, consumers of steel would be asked to testify as well as producers. Similarly Canadian producers and their customers would get a hearing. Other U.S. participants remarked that this was a busy year in Congress and the quota bill would face a lot of opposition which would delay passage. From this perspective the 201 action was more serious since the timing of each stage of the process was prescribed in law and the President would be called upon to act at a particularly sensitive time for him in the election timetable.

Fish

As the Committee was concluding its discussions a Canadian participant was given a brief opportunity to express his concern about possible limits on Canadian fish sales in the United States. Fish was economically vital to the coastal areas of Canada. He noted that U.S. per capita support of agriculture was greater than Canadian agricultural support, pointing to the disappearance of the food processing industry from the Okanagan valley and the Niagara region.

COMMITTEE II - ENERGY, DEFENCE AND MULTILATERAL QUESTIONS

A. Energy

1. Natural gas
  - a) Pricing of exports; contracts.
  - b) Alaska Gas Pipeline including the Alaskan alternative.
  - c) U.S. and Canadian energy policies.
2. Electricity

B. Defence

1. Bilateral defence
  - (i) Modernization of the North American Early Warning System.
  - (ii) U.S. restrictions on sensitive military/industrial technologies.
2. Multilateral defence
  - (i) Deployment of nuclear missiles; arms negotiations; the Trudeau initiative.

A. ENERGY

Natural Gas

Pricing of exports

Discussions on natural gas concentrated on Canada's pricing policy for exports. The U.S. side urged Canada to abandon the single border price in favour of a system which would be "flexible and competitive" and allow buyer-seller negotiated prices.

A U.S. Senator who is Chairman of the Senate Energy Committee opened the discussion by describing the recently-announced U.S. gas import policy. Responsibility for the new policy will now reside with ERA (Economic Regulatory Agency of the Department of Energy) and FERC (Federal Energy Regulatory Commission). ERA is given the authority to approve gas import contracts. The key objectives in the new policy were "flexibility" and "competitiveness". Specifically, in order to be authorized, new gas import contracts will have to be priced competitively with other fuels on the market and will need to be flexible enough to permit subsequent adjustments.

Referring to the present situation in Congress on the U.S. Natural Gas bill, the Senator recounted that in the Senate the bill had been reported out of Committee by a vote of 11 to 9 with no recommendations and had only just reached the floor. In the House, the bill had been stopped in Committee by Chairman Dingell because the Sharp Sub-committee had moved further toward deregulation than the Chairman had wanted. Pressure had been felt by both consumer and producer advocates during debates on the bill.

The Canadian spokesman admitted that Canada was aware of the pressure from the United States to move from a single border price to a more flexible arrangement. The idea of variable prices for different regions finds support from some areas in Canada as well. She explained that the single border price had been established in 1976 at the United States' request. It was set marginally above the Toronto city gate price.

There were two views among Canadian producers. Some wanted to ride out the gas bubble, but others were fearful that inflexibility in pricing could result in further loss of markets, markets that were already badly eroded. The U.S. market was important to Canada. Although Canadian gas represented only 4% of U.S. gas imports, these exports from Canada represent one-third of total Canadian production. She predicted that there was unlikely to be a major development in Canadian gas policy in an election year, but perhaps next year. It was politically impossible for Canada to sell gas to the United States at a price lower than the domestic Canadian price.

The U.S. Senator seemed surprised and somewhat doubtful that the Canadian single border price had been established at the request of the United States. He explained that under the existing U.S. legislation (the National Gas Policy Act), the price of gas had been held at artificially low levels; Canadian gas was coming in at a price too high to compete, with the result that in some of its main markets the consumers were switching to residual oils. Idaho, for example, was taking only 70% of its normal volumes of Canadian gas and the Puget Sound area, which used to depend almost entirely on imported Canadian gas, was using only 30%. The United States was currently trying to shift its own policy by deregulating to permit a market-oriented pricing system. The situation was currently adverse to Canada and U.S. importers were negotiating lower "take" levels in their take-or-pay contracts and even abrogating contracts entirely.

A second Canadian spokesman emphasized the difficulty of Canada going to a flexible price for exports as long as there is an administered price for domestic use. Even Alberta might agree that this was a problem. He asked the U.S. delegates how the New York or Vermont consumers felt about the abandonment of a single border price. They have benefited from the rolled-in transportation costs of a single border price for Canadian gas and the Alberta producer received only a minimum payback on this gas after the heavy transport changes.

Moreover, continued this participant, Canada had made a price adjustment last year and Canada now had a volume related incentive price of U.S. $3.40 per mcf. (down from U.S. $4.00 per mcf.). He understood this pricing competed very well with the price of certain U.S. interstate gas which he had heard could be well over U.S. $6.00 per mcf. By such measures the Canadian government was trying to show its flexibility.

The first Canadian spokesman considered that Alberta producers would be interested in having a flexible pricing arrangement as they could share in the 'net back' arrangement. "More flexible" does not necessarily mean "cheaper" she said and predicted that North-east Venture gas was going to be very high cost.

In response to an inquiry by a New York Congressman concerning the supply situation for Canadian gas, the Canadian replied that Canada currently had more gas than it knew what to do with. She explained that Canada is currently shipping only 40% of permissible exports. The single border price was one cause of this surplus. The pricing mechanism was set under the bilateral Duncan-Lalonde ministerial agreement of 1980.

The U.S. Senate spokesman said that the United States had welcomed the Canadian price adjustment and the volume related pricing incentive but he thought it was probably a little late. As for the current Canadian gas export marketing problems, he thought that in addition to the Canadian price, the causes of the declining U.S. demand were conservation, the use of alternative energy sources and the fact that U.S. distributors and consumers were using 'old' cheaper gas. 'Old gas' was still available at .50 cents per mcf. There were 68 categories of regulated gas. Very little was unregulated at present.

He noted that the existing U.S. gas pricing legislation had wrongly assumed a short supply situation. It provided that only gas below 15,000 feet could be sold at unregulated prices. The legislation needed to be changed. He thought a decontrolled system of pricing would result in a cheaper price for consumers in the long run. In his opinion the best way for Canada to sell more gas to the U.S.

market was to move from a single border price with its city-gate reference to a system based on the well-head price plus the cost of transportation.

The Canadian spokesman pointed out that Canada had been a stable and secure source of supply for the United States. The Canadian share of the U.S. market had remained pretty constant at about 4% in recent years despite differences over pricing. She inquired how the United States would be able to put good delivery systems in place without a good price.

The U.S. Senator agreed that some certainty in the rate of return was necessary in order to have transportation systems in place. This rate could run as high as 19%. (A Canadian interjected that it would be the consumer who would pay for this.) The Senator also agreed that some new contract purchases were high-priced but there were still some as low as .50 cents per mcf. The weighted average U.S. price was $2.30. While he did not think the U.S. gas bubble was all that permanent, if the United States deregulated, the gas bubble would last longer. While the gas bubble has been caused by the recession, he predicted that even after recovery some effect on demand would be seen due to conservation measures. If the gas deregulation bill were not passed, the Canadian position would probably benefit. But he warned that if the U.S. did deregulate and Canada's price remained inflexible then Canada would lose more markets.

When a Canadian participant inquired how it could be in the U.S. interest to deplete all its low-priced gas and then have to use high-cost Beaufort gas subsequently, the U.S. side did not answer the question very clearly. One delegate spoke of the need of senior citizens and their desire for low prices today while another said that deregulation was the only way to get the "ends" out of producing wells.

Alaska Highway Gas Pipeline

There was a brief discussion of the situation concerning the delay in completion of the Alaska Highway Gas Pipeline. An Alaskan Senator noted the recent U.S. regulatory approval of the four-year extension of Canadian gas imports through the pre-build system. He noted that the Williams Companies had purchased control of the consortia of U.S. companies sponsoring the Alaskan pipeline system. According to this spokesman, private investors were saying that the line was not financeable at present because of gas pricing. The provision for the continued flow of the less expensive Alberta gas through the pre-build was making it unlikely that the Alaska line could be built because Alaskan gas could not be competitive. Canada itself could thereby be said to be in control of the destiny of the Alaska line.

This Senator then described an alternative scheme for Prudhoe Bay gas involving its shipment from Prudhoe Bay to Alaska's south shore where it would be liquefied and sent by tanker to Japan. There were huge reserves in the order of 27 trillion cubic feet (tcf.) of gas and Exxon had just announced a new find. However this spokesman raised the question of whether a violation of contract with Canada might be involved.

The Canadian spokesman related the unhappiness and irritation in Canada over the set-back in completion of the project. She reminded the U.S. side that the bilateral agreement had specified that the rest of the project would be built. Canada had thought it had "iron-clad" guarantees but the United States did not deliver.

Another U.S. Senator said he understood and recognized the legitimate Canadian unhappiness but noted that Canadian negotiators had known the guarantees were being given by the U.S. producers not by the U.S. Government. The U.S. Government had said it would remove the obstacles but the private consortia was unable to fulfill the commitments.

In reply to an inquiry by the U.S. side as to whether the Canadian policy for Canadian gas exports to the United States was likely to change, a Canadian delegate replied that Canada had over 80 tcf. of reserves - vast years of export gas - and it would continue to sell its surplus gas at a competitive price. He drew attention again to the flexibility in last year's pricing of Canadian gas. He also noted that the completion of the Alaska line would bring employment and construction benefits to both countries.

The first Canadian spokesman predicted Canadian policy would change on election day with a new arrangement between consuming and producing provinces but reiterated that Canada would continue to ship gas, including Arctic gas, as long as the United States could pay for it. She speculated that Canada might build its own Arctic line.

Energy Policies

A brief exchange took place over the "back in" component of Canada's National Energy Program (NEP). The U.S. Senate Energy Committee Chairman said he could understand the measures to restrict foreign ownership in the energy field but to the United States the "back-in" provisions amounted to confiscation. The result was that both investment dollars and oil rigs had moved out of Canada into the United States. He mentioned the Congressional attempts to use provisions under the U.S. Mineral Leasing Act to restrict or retaliate for the "back-in". Of immediate concern was the Sable Island development.

A Canadian spokesman pointed out that there was disagreement between the two major Canadian political parties over the "back-in" provision. He explained that the "back-in" was one aspect of a policy designed to increase Canadian control in the oil and gas sector. Under this measure the federal government exercises its right to a 25% Crown interest in all projects in the Canada Lands (the Arctic frontier areas) and off the east coast. This was considerably less than some European countries exercised in the North Sea developments. In Canada, as compared to the United States, the government has traditionally participated in the development and shared in the benefits of frontier energy exploration whereas the United States has used an auction system for leases. In the end, the "back-in" amounted to a sort of taxation not unlike the U.S. windfall tax. The federal government considered it must have more than a 8 or 9% return on the oil industry. Very rich tax right-offs were provided for energy development in Canada, in some cases up to 110%. In general, the Canadian petroleum policy was quite popular both in the eastern and western regions, this delegate observed.

Another Canadian participant agreed that the "back-in" amounted to a production royalty or type of taxation. She said that while the Progressive Conservatives did not oppose such a tax, they objected to its retroactivity. In particular it was wrong to tell the Hibernia producers that they must cede 25% after they had made the discovery and signed the contracts etc. This spokesman acknowledged that the situation was made more complex by the fact that the provinces approved of the "back-in" and Newfoundland even wanted a 40% rate. This participant warned that it would be counter-productive for the United States to threaten Canada with restrictions or retaliation in an election year. She spoke very critically of the divisive impact which the NEP had had on the country as a whole, leaving a deeply felt bitterness in the Western sedimentary basin area. She agreed that the result had been huge capital outflow, perhaps as much as $20 billion accompanied by lost investor confidence.

Electricity

In contrast to previous years, the subject of Canadian electricity exports to the United States evoked considerable interest among U.S. delegates. Discussions covered both possible problems as well as areas for future co-operation.

The Chairman of the U.S. Senate Energy Committee began by noting the recent significant increase in Canadian electricity exports, both from Ontario's nuclear-based plants and from British Columbia's hydro developments, to U.S. markets. In the U.S. Pacific Northwest however, there was currently a sizeable electricity surplus which affected the market for the huge Bonneville Power Company. Bonneville was now resisting the use of its transmission lines for the transport of B.C. electricity to California markets. A related factor was the failure of a Washington State public supply system which had involved very large losses to bond holders. The result was that new power generation in the area would be about five times more costly than the old. Consumers would naturally react negatively and compare the prices to the cheap power B.C. could generate based on Columbia River dams built in the 1930s. Costs of current thermal coal or nuclear generation of electricity were extremely high, particularly the capital investment. The cost of production of electricity itself, once the capital outlay has been made, was almost nothing.

Reacting to the implications of the Senator's remarks concerning B.C. electricity exports, a Canadian participant from B.C. wondered why the United States could not accept, for electricity imports, the same deregulated, flexible price based on market determination which it advocated for natural gas imports. Electricity was a matter under provincial jurisdiction she noted. B.C. had miscalculated demand and has built a huge surplus electricity capacity including the Revelstoke project which would be entirely surplus for the foreseeable future. If there was a problem for Bonneville in allowing B.C. electricity to be transmitted south through its transmission lines, why does Bonneville not buy B.C. electricity and ship it itself to the California market, she asked.

The U.S. Senator predicted that the current surplus in the Northwest would not last and was very sceptical over current projections that the United States would not need electricity. On the contrary he estimated that consumption of electricity would expand more rapidly than for energy sources generally (which is projected at 3% a year compounded). Even with energy conservation measures, the United States may be faced with "terribly long lead-times" particularly in the light of the present U.S. slow-down on nuclear-based generation. A 20% reserve capacity was the optimum situation according to the utilities. This delegate stressed the great need for a U.S. national policy. Another U.S. delegate suggested that in the Northwest, Alberta gas might eventually be displaced by electricity.

A second Canadian participant commented that, in contrast to the Northwest, Canadian electricity exports to the U.S. Northeast met little competition from U.S. utilities. In fact New York state and some New England states seemed to be encouraging the purchase of imported electricity. Exports from Ontario's and New Brunswick's nuclear-generated electricity and Quebec's and Newfoundland's hydro electricity were available for this market and could provide a stable and secure source. Firm, long-term contracts were possible. Moreover, there were huge Canadian potential hydro sources in the James Bay area and Labrador. It was, however, politically difficult at present for Ontario to build another nuclear plant dedicated for export. This delegate inquired whether there were any foreseeable U.S. bottlenecks or regulatory impediments to stand in the way of increased electricity trade. He noted that the sales were usually on a utility-to-utility basis.

The U.S. Senator agreed that New York state and the other north-eastern states seemed comfortable with their dependency on Canadian electricity. However, he wondered how such increased Canadian electrical exports would affect the potential, in northeast markets, for Canadian natural gas exports when the Trans-Canada gas pipeline was completed and when Sable Island gas came on stream.

A New York Congressman confirmed that in his state the authorities, including the Governor, were turning to increased Canadian electricity imports because of public opposition to nuclear-generated electricity. New York state was very dependent on costly imported oil.

A Canadian Senator noted that the New England Governors and Eastern Canadian and Maritime Premiers have been actively discussing increased co-operation in electricity trade for some time. A Vermont Senator added that a Quebec-Vermont electricity agreement had been signed that very morning. Some potential problem areas were mentioned. The Canadian Senator observed that energy could be lost when transmission lines were stretched over too long a distance and the Vermont Senator noted that the path of the transmission lines from Canada through Vermont would go through Vermont's most scenic area. There would have to be trade-off between the environmental concerns and economic growth. When the Vermont Senator observed that Vermont was dependent for energy on imported oil and nuclear generated electricity, a Canadian spokesman interjected that if Canada doubled its electricity to the U.S. Northeast, that area could reduce its oil imports by one-half.

A U.S. Senator from Alaska made the point that there was an important mining industry in states such as Ohio which needed to be protected. He added that Canada could be perceived in the United States to be pressing for U.S. acid-rain controls as a way to increase Canadian export markets for electricity.

On the question of regulatory impediments, the U.S. Senate Chairman said he foresaw no such problems in the United States for increased electricity imports. There was no basis for U.S. federal intervention on imports. Rather, imports would be more affected by state regulatory policies and by economic considerations. There would only be a problem if Canada tried to maximize the situation by instituting a retroactive regime like the "back-in", or a restrictive taxing policy. Very long-term agreements, maybe even treaties, were desirable. The important thing was that the contracts were firm and relatively unchangeable. When a Canadian participant remarked that Canada's taxation policy must be its own and could not be dictated, the Senator replied that the United States could not be put in the position to be held hostage to Canadian exports. Another Canadian commented that the provincial utilities would, of course, be selling electricity at market-competitive prices.

A discussion of the outlook for new nuclear-based generation plants covered the widespread public opposition to nuclear plants as well as the inability of the public to distinguish between nuclear weapons and nuclear power establishments. The Vermont Senator observed that 85% of Vermonters opposed nuclear power yet 60% of Vermont's electricity was from this source. A Canadian Senator cited the growing public opposition to a nuclear facility in New Brunswick, particularly to the idea of its production of electricity for export. On Prince Edward Island, public perception had even stopped an underwater transmission line because the electricity was sourced in a nuclear plant.

Several U.S. delegates who said they were biased nuclear power advocates, deplored the factors which were inhibiting U.S. nuclear power development, particularly, the regulatory procedures which had resulted in exorbitantly high interest rates, in construction costs five times higher than estimates, in lengthy law suits against the companies, and in the fact that U.S. nuclear plants were taking 14 years to complete while France could build the Super-Phénix in 8 years.

Finally, the group speculated briefly on the impact of a possible interruption of Middle East oil supplies resulting from events such as the closing of the Straits of Hormuz, a revolution in Saudi Arabia or blackmail by President Khadaffi of Libya. The U.S. Senator suggested that if the interruption were total, there would be war. If there were a marginal interruption or an incremental slow-down in supplies, the difficulties for the economy could be immense. He could easily foresee the oil price going to $100 a barrel.

B. DEFENCE

Bilateral Issues

(i) Modernization of North American Early Warning System

Discussions on the modernization of the NORAD system dealt not only with the requirements for such modernization and the status of the joint planning but eventually encompassed much broader issues such as the Canadian share of and access to advanced technology, U.S. reactions to Canadian criticisms of the Grenada invasion and the level of Canada's NATO participation.

Opening the discussions, a Canadian Senator reviewed the situation in North American air defence over the past several decades leading up to the current modernization requirements. The DEW and Pinetree radar warning lines had been built originally to cope with the Soviet bomber threat but in the 1960s and 1970s the predominant threat was perceived to be the intercontinental ballistic missile. The effectiveness of the air defence radar systems declined. But the Soviet Union's bomber force was not reduced and Soviet Backfire and Blackjack bombers are now perceived as significant threats. Some observers even consider that the threat from these Soviet long-range bombers is equal to the ICBM threat in that they can provide a surprise element and are more flexible than missiles.

The Senator explained that faced with the present DEW line which only monitors on a line-of-sight basis, Soviet Backfire bombers could come in undetected at 600' altitude, then zoom up to 40,000' and release their cruise missiles destined for U.S. bases and silos before encountering the Pinetree line. He also noted in passing that there were many radar 'holes' between the DEW line and the Pinetree line on the east and west coasts.

Several years of bilateral negotiations have already taken place on how to proceed and to finance the necessary modernization. Included in the overhaul are plans to replace the old vacuum-type radar system on the line with modern solid-state equipment. Over the years, Canada's participation in NORAD in both manpower and funding had been about 10% of the total cost, the Senator said. While the bilateral negotiations are nearing agreement, there was concern in some quarters in Canada that the United States might choose to "go it alone" and that Canada might be left on the sidelines on the DEW-line updating. What level of priority and commitment was being given in the United States to the modernization schedule the Canadian Senator inquired.

A Congressman said he was surprised by the Canadian concerns since he had heard from the U.S. joint chiefs of staff that they were pleased with the negotiations and he understood a joint cost-sharing plan had been worked out. He added that there could be some problems related to the industrial offsets being pressed for by Canada.

Another Canadian Senator asked about the recent statement to Congress by the U.S. Defense Secretary in which he appeared to present a 'go-ahead' on the modernization even without a formal agreement with Canada. She inquired whether Congress was likely to delay approval. In reply, the Congressman said Congress could always present difficulties but he appeared to downplay the likelihood of Congressional roadblocks. A U.S. Senator noted that currently the bilateral negotiations were still in the hands of the President and had not yet reached Congress.

There was no doubt, said another U.S. Senator, that a strong requirement existed to upgrade the North American defence systems. The U.S.S.R. had a "break-out" capability with its Backfire bomber and its ICBMs and SLBMs. Concern over gaps in the radar defence was justified. He noted the U.S. plans to install a sophisticated "over-the-horizon" backscatter radar system which would cover the eastern, western and southern U.S. coast.

The Canadian spokesman noted that the northern air defence modernization plans were only part of a huge $7 billion program to upgrade all aspects of North American defence. Included also would be spending on AWACS (Airborne Warning and Control Systems), possible expenditure to fill in the significant surveillance gaps along Canada's east and west coast and the U.S. satellite surveillance program. In respect to the satellite surveillance system he pointed out that there was actually a school of thought which held that the satellite warning system was so far advanced that an upgrading of the ground warning system against the bomber threat would not be necessary. However he noted the two governments seemed to be in agreement that at present and probably for the next 10 to 15 years, the satellite system would not be able to perform the job required.

The Canadian Senator raised the question of a Canadian involvement in the satellite program. While Canada had had some past experience in satellite technology, he said, there was some concern that it could be left out of the current U.S. military program. Canada would like to co-operate, probably in some specialized projects, and was naturally interested in the spin-off benefits related to the advanced R&D involved. In connection with the sharing of advanced technology, another Canadian Senator commented that Canadians were sensitive to the increase of U.S. limitations on Canada to access of such U.S. technology. Canadians who were trustworthy allies were being treated like major security risks, she said.

The Congressman replied that these restrictions had not been aimed in a discriminatory way just at Canada but against other allies as well. The Department of Defense was very nervous about sharing its state-of-the-art technology even with large U.S. companies.

The U.S. Senate spokesman referred to the Canadian argument that as a trustworthy ally, Canada should not face restriction. "Trust was a seamless argument", he said, and the United States had noted the divergence of Canadian foreign policy from U.S. policies vis-a-vis Vietnam and the U.S.S.R. as well as its criticisms over the Grenada invasion. But the Canadian Senator rejected this argument saying that Canada, as a sovereign state, must have its own independent foreign policy. Sometimes Canada had to express its independence distinctly, even emotionally, but never should this be interpreted as a cause for distrust between the two nations. Vietnam, he said, had been more criticized within the United States than by Canadians. But the U.S. Senator reiterated that the more the United States is questioned in one field, the less forthcoming it was likely to be in another.

Another U.S. Senator commented on the low level of Canada's NATO contributions, lower than all countries except Luxembourg. Friends have to share burdens he said. A Congressman warned that the two countries were "in this together" and the Russian hardware was going to hit Canada first.

The Canadian Senate spokesman responded that comparisons of NATO contributions were difficult to assess correctly. Naturally the United States which had assumed a world-wide responsibility was going to carry a large burden. But the European allies were the countries under the gun whereas Canada was not. Why should Canada maintain the same proportion of troops as West Germany, he asked. While it was true that Canada had gone through a period of declining contributions, this had changed in the past three years. The Senator referred to the Canadian acquisition of patrol frigates, the F-18's, the Aurora patrol plane, the Leopard tanks and other small arms and field tactical equipment. He himself was deeply concerned that Canada should carry its load and he considered it was doing so at present.

But another Canadian delegate disagreed and asserted that NATO looked on Canada as a free rider. He quoted a U.S. commentator on Canada's NATO participation who had written that "collective defence should be truly collective". The delegate himself characterized Canada's contribution as "pathetic", saying it was ironic that there were Canadians who talked independence when they were completely dependent on the U.S. defence efforts. According to polls, 65% of Canadians think Canada should take a stronger role, he said.

The U.S. Senate spokesman reminded delegates that the United States had a deficit of nearly $200 billion and it was spending $300 billion a year on defence, although there could be some future cut-backs. It was estimated that U.S. defence expenditures in Germany alone supported over a million people. Canada should help the United States shoulder the burden he said. But a New York Congressman agreed that Canada had recently increased its defence spending. Very few Western European countries were meeting the 3% growth in spending but Canada was. The recent report of the Canadian Senate subcommittee on National Defence had also spelled out that Canada was beginning to move.

A Canadian parliamentarian compared defence contributions on a per capita basis. Canada's was estimated at $230 per capita whereas Western European countries were listed at $308 per capital. But the latter figure included the expenditures of certain countries on a war footing such as the U.K.'s costs in the Falklands war and the Greek and Turkish defence expenditures in a constant state of tension. Moreover, it must be remembered that Canada had no defence production of its own to speak of except for some special offset projects involved in the F-18 purchase. This meant Canada had to purchase defence equipment. Further, while Canada contributed men and equipment to European defence the only participation of NATO in Canada was to use it as a training ground. His constituents, he said, would favour increased defence spending but he doubted that a change of government in Canada would actually result in much change in Canada's defence spending levels because of the large budgetary deficit. The problem boiled down to what program could be cut back; health? support to senior citizens? He doubted it.

(ii) Restrictions on Sensitive Military and Industrial Technologies

Although this subject had been broached in the preceding discussion on North American air defence modernization, a fuller exchange of views took place subsequently. Canadian spokesmen registered their concerns that Canadian firms were being excluded by restrictive U.S. measures aimed at stemming the flow of sensitive industrial and military technologies to the Soviet bloc. They urged that Canadian firms be given preferential treatment as a NORAD partner in a joint North American defence effort. The U.S. side recognized that there may have been abuses in the exclusion of Canadian firms from conferences or briefings but gave no assurance that preferential treatment for Canadian firms was likely to be forthcoming.

The Canadian spokesman opened the discussion by making the following points. Canada has had a long-time special relationship with the United States in trade in defence and defence-related industrial goods and Canada would like it to continue. At present, trade in defence products was running at over $1 billion a year each way. But the spill-over from recent U.S. measures to restrict technology transfers to Eastern Europe could seriously affect the outlook for this bilateral trade as well as the future competitiveness of Canadian firms in this field. Canada considered its firms were being unfairly restricted from access to conferences and seminars at which prerequisite information for contract-billing was discussed. Canadians were being denied access to and participation in technology transfers and had been restricted from access to classified information.

Specifically in the defence field in respect to the CF-18 which Canada has purchased from the United States for NATO purposes, it has proven extremely difficult for Canada to obtain the required data. There were also problems associated with the purchase of the Towed Array Sonar for fitting on the Canadian patrol frigate and for getting relevant technology associated with the Sea Sparrow missiles.

In the industrial field, continued this delegate, Canada was concerned over restrictions in the very high speed integrated circuit program (VHSIC). These U.S. controls will put Canadian firms at a serious disadvantage as they will be unable to bid competitively against U.S. firms in the electronic field. With its very open 'freedom of information' procedures, this spokesman suggested that perhaps the United States was 'leakier' than Canada in respect to the outflow of military and industrial technologies to the East bloc countries.

A Congressman responded that this issue was legally a very difficult one. It was particularly tricky for the United States to give any one country preferential treatment. U.S. industry spokesmen complained when Canadian firms were seen to have acquired sensitive U.S. technologies. The procedure now was going to have to be on a case-by-case basis. This spokesman recommended that the best approach for Canada was to continue to protest in Washington, to keep the pressure on.

A Canadian member said that as a close ally and neighbour of the United States, Canada should be in a special category and be able to get preferential treatment. Another U.S. Congressman stated that in respect to Canada's complaint that its firms were being excluded under the 'no foreign' designation from conferences and pre-contract briefings, the United States was now recognizing that there may have been unfair treatment. The Department of Defense was taking measures to remedy such abuses. While preferential treatment for Canadian firms could not be assured, he said, each case would be examined to make sure they receive "the access to which they are entitled".

A Canadian Senator urged a 'special deal' for Canada. He emphasized that Canada was a special case in respect to defence-sharing arrangements; that Canada was the NORAD ally of the United States; no other country was in NORAD; that Canada was buying the F-18 for use, among its other tasks, in the NORAD context but it has had an extremely hard time getting the necessary data associated with it. Moreover, Canada had requested to purchase the Towed Array Sonar for its frigate in order to make the joint defence effort more effective. Restrictions on such purchases as these could only hamper a North American defence program.

Multilateral Defence Issues

Arms Control and Deployment of Nuclear Missiles

A lively exchange of views on nuclear weapons deployment and disarmament issues touched on the prospects for the resumption of INF and START talks, the dangers of confrontational rhetoric, the reaffirmation of Canadian support for deployment, the costs of defence efforts in both countries and the need to emphasize that the United States was ready to resume negotiations and was urgently seeking a reduction in weapons.

Opening the discussion, a Canadian parliamentarian said Canada was supportive of the United States in the deployment of nuclear missiles in Europe. But he advised the United States to emphasize, for public opinion, that it was the Europeans who were pressing for this protection. Resistance to deployment had been fanned by mistakes made by President Carter as well as by Reagan's comments in November 1981 concerning a "limited nuclear war" in Europe and these had been detrimental to the solidarity of the NATO alliance.

A U.S. Senator considered that the deployment of the Pershing and Cruise missiles in Europe was a major set-back to the Soviet Union and a victory for NATO. Chancellor Kohl's recent visit to Washington had revealed that he was more supportive than ever and that the German electorate's opposition to deployment was diminishing. The five-year deployment schedule would allow enough time to reach an agreement on the reduction of intermediate-range nuclear forces. He noted that while the Soviet Union had taken a hard line in respect to the INF talks, it had not been as categorical respecting the talks to reduce strategic nuclear weapons (START). The possibility of merging these two negotiations has surfaced but the U.S. Government thinks the discussions could become too complex if combined.

From the Soviet perspective, the question was whether they wanted to give President Reagan a political boost at this time by resuming negotiations on INF and START. But it was inevitable in face of the firm stand taken by the United States and its allies that the Soviet Union would eventually want to come back to the negotiating table. Commenting on START, the Senator said that while the United States was now quite flexible, he thought President Reagan had been slow in returning to the negotiations.

In other areas, the Soviet Union has agreed to resume the talks on mutual and balanced force reduction (MBFR), to participate in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (CSCE) at Stockholm and in the Committee on Disarmament in Geneva. In addition they have made a positive proposal in respect to a chemical weapons free zone, this Senator continued. He was somewhat critical of the Administration's strong confrontational tone, but noted an improvement since January in both the relations and rhetoric and said there were currently new bilateral talks on upgrading the hot line. The United States needed to reiterate that it wanted peace and that it was now ready to negotiate with the U.S.S.R. with confidence.

The Senator noted that while the United States shared Prime Minister Trudeau's deep desire for peace, there were criticisms respecting his 'exotic travels' and he wondered if the whole thing could not have had a divisive effect. Would it not have been more appropriate to map out the peace initiative as a strategy of the alliance he questioned. He inquired what the Canadian public opinion view of the arms race was.

The Canadian spokesman said that a poll in his area had revealed 65% were in favour of Cruise testing, 91% wished to stay in NATO and 90% see a special relationship between the United States and Canada. But he reiterated that President Reagan's statement about a limited nuclear war had caused difficulties. This delegate wondered whether a build-up of conventional forces was not the best way to achieve a balance in Europe at the moment. Canada has had 3,500 to 5,000 troops in Western Europe but he thought there should be more.

Another Canadian commented that defence was costing Canada $9 billion out of a budget of $96 billion and the government was committed to a 3% increase in defence. It would be difficult for any Canadian government to increase its 5,000 troop in view of the large national deficit.

Another U.S. Senator said he thought the press had taken President Reagan's remark on 'limited nuclear war' out of context. Defending the deployment of missiles in Europe, he said the Europeans wanted the Pershing and Cruise missiles because they perceived an imbalance. Moreover, if the United States did not want to reinstate the draft, it had to go to tactical nuclear weapons. And the United States could not say that it would not use them because if it did, they would no longer be a deterrent. This Senator reiterated that the United States was very serious about achieving a resumption of the negotiations and was extremely concerned over the proliferation of nuclear weapons. While one should be critical of treaty violations this should not stop the process, he added.

A Canadian member remarked that Canadian public interest in defence issues had increased substantially because of the nuclear deployment issue. He expressed concern over President Reagan's 'limited nuclear war' remarks as well as the escalation of the Korean Air Lines (KAL) incident, noting Prime Minister Trudeau's attempts to cool the issue. But the first Canadian spokesman strongly deplored Prime Minister Trudeau's terming the shooting down of the KAL plane as "an accident".

A U.S. Congressman was hopeful that there could be 'a new beginning' in respect to negotiations in the wake of the contacts made at the Andropov funeral. However, it was unlikely the U.S.S.R. would want to get back to negotiations until after the U.S. election. He reiterated the United States' desire for less nuclear weapons. He himself thought that although the press had made President Reagan look 'trigger-happy' over the KAL incident, the President had actually cooled the situation.

A Canadian member commented that he thought the Russians would want to negotiate well before all scheduled missiles were in place and a U.S. Senator agreed that deployment could be halted at any time.

A Canadian Senator defended Prime Minister Trudeau's description of the shooting down of the KAL plane as 'an accident', meaning it was not a pre-planned military exercise. The word had to be seen in context. This participant closed the discussions by reminding delegates of the recent horrifying escalation of defence measures such as the use of chemical warfare in Afghanistan and in the Iran-Iraq war. These examples of how far countries would go to defend themselves in the face of external threats should be a warning to NATO and the Warsaw Pact which keep on building weapons.

The Trudeau Initiative

This subject was put on the agenda by the U.S. side. A Canadian described the rationale behind the initiative, its main objectives and some possible results. There was a brief follow-up discussion.

A Canadian Senator began by explaining the background to Prime Minister Trudeau's initiative. The polls in Canada had shown a decrease of Canadian confidence in U.S. leadership in the face of the East-West tensions and the lack of progress in arms control. While there had been a strong commitment to peace at the Williamsburg Summit, subsequent events such as the KAL incident and the near breakdown at the Madrid CSCE meeting led the Prime Minister to fear a strong possibility of a resort to force. These setbacks as well as the date for his own retirement from political life explained the timing of Mr. Trudeau's initiative last fall.

That Mr. Trudeau chose to take action while in office resulted from his observation of the work of other statesmen such as McNamara and Brandt who had tried to achieve progress after they had left office with very limited results. Mr. Trudeau was determined to use the prestige of his office while in power to try to move events forward.

In reference to an U.S. Senator's earlier criticism of Mr. Trudeau's 'exotic trips', the Canadian spokesman said the real purpose of the wide-ranging travel had been to touch base not only with those leaders on 'our' side but as many on the 'other' side as possible. Moreover, he had wanted to galvanize both the Warsaw Pact and NATO foreign ministers into action. Mindful of the fact that each side had enough weapons to destroy each other's cities 50 time over, Mr. Trudeau had wanted to bring the five nuclear powers together, to strengthen the nuclear non-proliferation treaty (NPT), and to get peace at the top of the nations' agendas. He has told President Reagan that his 'message of strength' was not getting through to the other side while to the Warsaw Pact countries he made it clear that no one was taking their harsh rhetoric seriously.

As for results, while Mr. Trudeau did not want to claim the credit for subsequent events, nonetheless some credit could undoubtedly be attributed to his efforts. This was so if one looked at the Commonwealth Conference's endorsement of his objective, the Foreign Ministers' meeting in Stockholm, the NATO declaration, the Stockholm meeting of Gromyko and Shultz, the NATO review for the MBFR meeting of March 16, and the fact that after her discussions with Prime Minister Trudeau, Mrs. Thatcher had gone to Eastern Europe with a changed message from her earlier hard-line approach. Moreover, a new feeling of consensus could be discerned among middle powers that they themselves should get involved and try to exercise their influence on this crucial issue.

The Senator added that three additional proposals had been associated with Mr. Trudeau's talks. They were a ban on testing and deployment of anti-satellite systems; restrictions on the mobility of ICBMs; and a requirement to verify future strategic weapons. In conclusion, the Canadian spokesman emphasized that Mr. Trudeau's main objective had been to try to lower the confrontational decibels and that his initiative in no way weakened Canada's commitment to NATO. A Canadian member re-emphasized Canadian solidarity with NATO. The initiative certainly did not represent an attempt to pacify the Soviet Union and Canada, in fact was testing the cruise missiles in its territory at present.

The Progressive Conservatives supported the Trudeau plan, observed another Canadian delegate, but he said he was critical of the Prime Minister's remarks at the Davos Symposium in which he had appeared to be questioning the validity of the nuclear response and whether the United States would come to the aid of its European allies.

A U.S. Senator commented that there was some misapprehension in the United States that such an endeavour would only heighten the public feelings of fear and crises. There was also the possibility that Mr. Trudeau's initiative was perceived as a type of peace plan which would weaken the West's position. Finally while he welcomed Mr. Trudeau's effort to speak to the Iron Curtain totalitarian countries, he doubted that it would be effective. However, a Canadian member said such visits by a western leader should be seen as a possible way of undertaking the very difficult task of mobilizing public opinion in East Bloc countries. Moreover, discussions with these countries' leaders had evidently had the effect of making them feel they had a responsibility to speak out for themselves on arms control and east-west tensions.

Multilateral Issues

Delegates on Committee II joined with those on Committee III for discussions on two international issues, Grenada and Central America and the Middle East. For a summary of these discussions please see the end of Committee III's summary of discussions.

COMMITTEE III - ENVIRONMENT AND MULTILATERAL ISSUES

I: Border, Environment and Fishery Issues

- St. Lawrence Seaway (Extension of Navigation Season)
- Ross Dam/Skagit
- Flathead River
- The Garrison Diversion
- Acid Rain
- Toxic Wastes
- Cyprus-Anvil and the White Pass-Yukon Railroad
- West Coast Salmon
- Ontario Sports Fishing

II: Multilateral Issues (with Committee II)

- Grenada and Central America
- The Middle East

I: BORDER, ENVIRONMENT AND FISHERY ISSUES

St. Lawrence Seaway (Extension of Navigation Season)

A Republican Congressman from New York State began the discussion by saying he had thought this issue was put to rest when "suddenly it just popped out of committee." He assured Canadian delegates that there was a lot of concern about the proposal in the United States and would be plenty of action taken before it came to fruition. He understood the Canadian concern, in particular at the affront of "big brother taking unilateral action." He went on to say that the proposal was opposed in the U.S. on a number of grounds: it would entail substantial investment, the environmental concerns are "enormous" and there is no economic justification for it. He then listed numerous and powerful interests in the U.S. which have expressed their opposition and concluded by saying: "I don't know who's bill this is but I urge Canada to express its opposition and give the legislation the funeral it deserves."

A Republican Congressman from Minnesota began his statement by saying it was his bill. He referred to a report by the U.S. Corps of Engineers as the basis for the proposal and said that the extension of the season would mean a great deal to agricultural shippers as well as to U.S. Great Lakes ports, including the City of Detroit. He acknowledged there would have to be environmental impact studies but assured the Canadian delegation that the Corps of Engineers was continuing to study various ways to expand the capacity of the Seaway. He concluded by saying that the two sides should cooperate in choosing the most cost-efficient approach.

A Canadian Member responded that Canada was strongly opposed to any extension until after environmental and other studies had been completed. Among other issues, the effect of repeated breakup of ice would have to be studied. He went on to say that there were no Canadian plans to extend the season because the present system was underutilized. Rather, the Canadian focus was on improved utilization of the existing season. The Minnesota Congressman interjected to say that the United States could implement nothing that Canada was unwilling to implement and he agreed that more study was needed.

The Republican Senator from North Dakota next joined the discussion by stating that the critical issue was the rate structure and tolls on the Seaway. He noted that Congress had just forgiven considerable debt on the system and argued that before looking at season extension, there would have to be increased utilization during the regular season. A Canadian delegate agreed with this and went on to point out that Canadian users were opposed to the proposal because, under Canada's user pay approach, they would bear the costs of extending the season. He emphasized that Canada was worried that the present environmental assessment was inadequate, particularly with respect to the effects of prolonged and repeated ice breakup on hydro generating stations. He stated that there was also a concern that winter traffic and additional dredging would stir up toxic wastes in the Seaway.

The U.S. Co-Chairman of Committee III said winter navigation was "pre-eminently a Canadian problem" because five of seven locks in the system were on the Canadian side and Canada had been the driving force behind the building of the Seaway. He suggested there was no pressing economic need for winter navigation and that the environmental and other concerns would first have to be settled. The New York Congressmen who had opened the discussion now closed it by noting that the head of the U.S. Seaway Authority was opposed to the proposal on the grounds that the current system was only working to 40 percent of capacity.

Ross Dam/Skagit

A Member of Parliament from British Columbia opened the discussion by saying that, fortunately, this issue had been resolved. The only remaining concern was ratification of the treaty by the U.S. Senate. He remarked: "We want to impress on you the importance of expeditious ratification." The U.S. Co-Chairman said that he did not know if the treaty had yet been submitted to the Senate and requested U.S. staff to make inquiries. It was reported back that the treaty was expected to be signed by the President in April and to be approved by the Senate in this session (by October).

Flathead River

The Member from British Columbia opened this discussion by saying that Canada agrees the U.S. has legitimate concerns about the proposed development of two coal mines on Cabin Creek near its confluence with the Flathead River (10 km north of the international boundary). He described the plans as involving major strip-mining operations which could have significant environmental impact. The issue between Canada and the United States concerned standards, with the United States demanding "pristine standards" and Canada prepared to guarantee "normal" environmental standards. Having described the issue, the Canadian delegate then stated that the United States really had little to worry about because it was unlikely the project would ever get off the ground. As evidence for this, he cited current soft demand for coal and British Columbia over-capacity as the result of a major new coal mining operation in the north-eastern part of the province.

Another Canadian delegate added that if the project ever did go ahead, Canada would take environmental precautions. The British Columbian Member underlined the point by saying there were very stringent environmental standards in British Columbia, more so than in other parts of Canada. He assured the U.S. delegates that Canada recognized U.S. concerns and would guarantee minimal environmental impact.

The Garrison Diversion

The Canadian Member who began the discussion introduced himself as a Winnipegger who felt that Canada and the United States had come a long way during the past year in negotiating their differences over the Garrison. He described the Canadian concern by using the analogy of a car being assembled, one piece at a time. "As long as the engine isn't put in, there is no pollution. But there is a reasonable belief that installation of everything else is leading up to the engine. We fear that all the parts of the Garrison, when put together, will be of danger to Canada." He suggested that, for this reason, the Joint Technical Committee would prove very useful in monitoring the situation closely and contributing to constructive negotiations.

The Democratic Senator from North Dakota spoke next. He said that he was pleased to hear that Canada was now willing to monitor the Garrison project and remarked that the United States had "bent over backwards" to reassure Canada. He described the concern about biota transfer as "just a theory so far" but, nonetheless the Garrison project would be confined to those parts of the watershed that flow south. The Senator then quoted at length from an August, 1983 editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press which criticized the Canadian side for refusal to accept U.S. invitations to participate in scientific monitoring of the Garrison. The Canadian delegate who had opened the discussion replied that the Joint Technical Committee had been formed and had met since the date of the editorial.

A second Manitoba Member joined the discussion to point out that joint meetings had been postponed at one stage because of Canadian surprise and anger at the U.S. decision in August 1983 to award the Lonetree Dam contract in advance of consultations. Canadians were also upset by the large additional appropriations ($53 million) approved by Congress in 1983. He remarked that it was essential the project move slowly. "The Technical Committee may reassure us or it may not. But every time there is a surprise it is bound to scare us. You must know that." He then went on to remind the U.S. delegation that fishing and tourism was a major industry in Manitoba.

The Republican Senator from North Dakota now joined the discussion by saying that the two sides had come a long way. He remarked: "I don't blame Canadians for being uptight. The environmentalists have ginned up some pretty frightening arguments". He suggested that many of the facts being used were not quite factual and, therefore, the Technical Committee would prove very beneficial. "Never before have you taken us up on our invitation to send scientists to monitor the project. We are glad you have now done so." He expressed confidence that solid scientific evidence would allay Canadian fears, citing a report of highly qualified engineering consultants which had concluded that water quality would be improved by the project. He noted that the IJC report on the Garrison had said only that if there was foreign biota it might be transferred, it did not say there was such biota. He pointed out that Americans were as concerned as Canadians not to foul their own water. "We think it is safe but we will proceed phase by phase. Let your scientists come and see for themselves." He concluded his remarks by saying that North Dakota needed the project and the stream flow enhancement it would bring. "This project has been justified for a long time. We are happy that Canadians are now satisfied with our assurances."

The two Canadian delegates who had spoken earlier now impressed upon the U.S. delegations that not all had been solved by the appointment of the Technical Committee. Canadian apprehensions and fears remained. They stressed that in joining the Technical Committee, Canada had only agreed to a forum in which concerns could be identified and, hopefully, resolved. The Republican Senator from North Dakota concluded the discussion by saying that if the Technical Committee raised a red flag "we will be the first to stop."

Acid Rain

The U.S. Co-Chairman opened the discussion of Acid Rain by telling of a lecture by Jacques Cousteau on the environmental degradation of Easter Island. He quoted Cousteau's closing words: "Easter Island is a reminder that man's creative gift is linked to his self-destruct mechanism." He suggested that Acid Rain revealed the same human propensity for self-destruction.

The U.S. Congressman went on to say that we could see Acid Rain coming, "rolling like a prairie fire." Already its effects were widespread in North America but the example of Sweden, with its 10 thousand dead lakes, stood as a warning of worse to come. He concluded his remarks: "We know the facts about the damage. I hope we can have some discussion of the costs of cleanup."

A Democratic Congressman from Maryland then remarked that it might be useful for the Canadians to know the current policy of the U.S. Administration. He referred to the testimony of William Ruckelshaus, Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, before the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works on February 2nd, 1984. He suggested the main point of the testimony was that we don't know all the facts, an argument that was extremely controversial in the United States.

The Republican Senator from Vermont and Chairman of the Senate Committee on the Environment and Public Works entered the discussion to outline the current situation on Acid Rain. He reported that a fairly small number of states in the mid-west were the principal cause of the problem and that about 70 percent of sulphur emissions came from big utilities burning high sulphur coal. The prevailing wind patterns then moved the sulphur emissions east and north. He went on to say that the United States was causing about 50 percent of the problem in Canada and Canada about 25 percent of the problem in the U.S., and that sulphur loading in the atmosphere had grown from 10 million tons/year in 1950 to about 27 million tons in 1977. Since 1977 there had been a 2-3 million ton reduction to the current level of about 23 million tons.

The Senator then turned to proposed remedies. He reported that there were a number of promising technologies, including scrubbers (100 installed to date, 40 more planned) and fluidized bed combustion. While stressing that more research on these technologies was required, the Senator described the Administration's position as amounting to benign neglect. "I disagree with my own administration's position." He then reported that the position of the Environment and Public Works Committee had evolved: whereas in earlier legislation it had proposed an 8 million ton reduction over 12 years, current legislation (approved in committee by a vote of 16-2) proposed a 10 million ton reduction over 10 years. This would amount to about a 50 percent reduction in the eastern states. The Senator went on to say that if the bill came to a vote he believed it would pass, but it faced a probable filibuster. He concluded by saying he was delighted by the Canadian decision to go for a 50 percent reduction. "It will strengthen the cause in the United States."

A Canadian Senator replied that the U.S. point of view on Acid Rain had undergone a major change in that there was far greater awareness of the problem than existed even two years ago. He went on to say that President Reagan's statement came as a great disappointment because there was ample evidence of environmental damage: in Nova Scotia alone, 9 salmon streams now had no salmon. He described the recent Federal-Provincial ministerial meeting which concluded with an agreement that Canada should achieve a 50 percent reduction in sulphur emissions but remarked that while it would do a lot of good in some areas, it would have slight effect on other areas, unless the U.S. were to cooperate. He expressed delight that Congress was continuing to work on the problem and described himself as "cautiously optimistic" that progress would be made.

In response to a U.S. Senator's question how Canada would achieve the 50 percent reduction, the Canadian Co-Chairman responded that it would require federal-provincial cooperation, with the provinces taking responsibility for utilities and the federal government for industry, including the smelters. He went on to say that the principal methods used would be investment tax credits and accelerated tax write-offs. A Canadian Member then explained that only 15 percent of Canadian emissions came from utilities which were the major problem in the United States. The Democratic Senator from North Dakota remarked that even if coal burning utilities were a small part of the Canadian problem, scrubbers should be installed. "We cleaned up our State, you should do the same."

The Senator from Vermont observed that western states were no longer producers of Acid Rain and, partly for that reason, the Senate Committee's proposed legislation did not tell industry how to clean up nor did it provide financial or tax incentives to do so. "How they do it is up to them. We just set the goals." He then remarked that electric utilities in the east could increase their rates because they were still substantially below the national average. The Republican Senator from North Dakota said that the "Stafford Bill" was simplicity itself - either clean up or shut down. The Canadian Co-Chairman was sceptical that such an approach would be enforced when the crunch came but the Senator replied that cost-sharing was absolutely unacceptable in the West. He noted that the National Conference of Governors had recommended an approach very like that of the Senate Committee.

The Co-Chairman of the U.S. delegation, a Democratic Congressman from Minnesota, then outlined the situation concerning Acid Rain legislation in the House of Representatives. He remarked that there had been a long-standing struggle between Congressman John Dingell of Michigan, Chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee, who is opposed to proposed Acid Rain legislation and Congressman Henry Waxman, Chairman of the Health and the Environment Sub-committee, who has been trying to get legislation to the floor of the House. The major issue concerned cost sharing. The Waxman bill would provide a $3-4 billion trust fund raised by an electric utility fee levied across the 48 states. However, those states which have already solved the problem of sulphur emissions (mainly in the West) are "violently opposed" to cost sharing.

The Senator from Vermont suggested that if the House of Representatives could take some action it would greatly improve the chances of his bill getting to the floor of the Senate and, further, that if Congress passed a bill the President would not veto it. But a Republican Congressman from New York said that Canadians should not be misled about the likelihood of Congressional action. "There has been plenty of legislation approved by committee and none of it has ever gotten to the floor." This point was strongly reinforced by the Democratic Senator from West Virginia who stated that he expected no action in the rest of this session. "I am in favor of calling it to a vote myself but Senator Byrd will talk on and on and Senator Luger will talk on and on. Faced with that, I doubt that Senator Baker (the Senator Majority Leader) will allow the bill to be called up."

A Democratic Congressman from Massachusetts observed that it would be easier for the House to act if the Senate acted first. He commented that nothing had been done on the Clean Air Act for years - "A show of strength on the part of the Senate would be best." The Senator from Vermont remarked that while there were formidable political obstacles, the major polluting states were being isolated year by year. He then suggested that closure could be used in the Senate against those who filibuster the bill. "I think the sentiment for action is growing. But I would like to see some progress in the House so I can argue for bringing our bill to the floor."

The Senator from West Virginia observed that Canadian efforts to clean up Acid Rain had been less than stringent so far but the new federal-provincial agreement was a "very positive step." He noted the difficulty of getting support in his own state of West Virginia where there were 45,000 coal-miners out of work and an overall unemployment rate of 16 percent. He argued that the costs of cleanup would have to be borne across the country. A Canadian Member interjected at this point to say that even if Canada were to clean up emissions by 100 percent, it would reduce Acid Rain in Canada by only 40 percent. He remarked that it was nonsense to say more research was necessary. "Most Americans are concerned, as public opinion polls show. Why is political will missing?" He went on to suggest that the United States seemed unable to act because of powerful parochial interests that ignore the national interest. "It would be easy for us in British Columbia to say we don't give a damn because we don't have Acid Rain. But we understand and accept that it is a national problem. I don't understand why the United States can't see the same thing." He described it as a source of increasing frustration for Canadians that an agreement in both countries' national interest could be tossed aside by a single interest group or region.

A Democratic Congressman from Florida responded to these remarks by saying that much of the research being proposed by the President would go to the development of new technologies, which were badly needed to make the solution to Acid Rain "cheaper and faster". He acknowledged that such research could and should proceed side by side with remedial action. "Certainly I don't want to use research as a substitute for action." The Senator from Vermont closed the discussion by reporting that the Environment Protection Agency had presented several options to the President but Mr. Reagan had seen Acid Rain as a no-win issue in an election year. "He wants to be neutral in a no-win situation."

Toxic Wastes

A Canadian delegate introduced this issue by stating that the major Canadian concern was over the toxic waste dump sites near the Niagara River, which could have major effects on drinking water supplies as far away as Montreal. He noted that the International Joint Commission had described the area as suffering "significant environmental degradation" caused by industry, water treatment plants and land fill sites. He went on to describe the Canadian feeling that there was a "growing divergence" between U.S. declarations and performance and, specifically, that the Niagara River had been put on the "back burner". This feeling had been reinforced by recent disclosures that the Love Canal and other U.S. cleanup operations had been inadequately carried out, by recent budget cuts and by failure to fully use the $700 thousand Superfund grant to initiate remedial activities in "S" area. He summed up his remarks by saying that toxic wastes were an environmental "time bomb" and that unless action was taken soon, we might soon have a major drinking water crisis.

The Senator from Vermont responded by saying there had been a two-year period when Congress was extremely unhappy with the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) for making little or no use of Superfund. More recently, however, the new Administrator of the EPA, William Ruckelshaus, had assured Congress that the EPA would carry out the letter of the law and fully utilize Superfund. The real problem, the Senator went on to say, was the estimated 15 thousand dump sites in the U.S. Faced with the enormous magnitude of the problem, it had been decided that Superfund would be extended for another five years and its funding ($700 million in 1984) doubled. He assured the Canadian delegates that in spending these funds, "the areas along the border will not be ignored". The Senator went on to say that much more attention had to be given in future to avoiding dumps sites. He reported that the U.S. was currently producing 150 million metric tons of toxic wastes per year, and that much of it went into poorly constructed and unregulated deep wells, pits, ponds and lagoons. Under proposed new legislation (the Resource Recovery Act), these sites would be built and supervised much more carefully and industry would be encouraged to reduce the toxicity of its products.

The U.S. Co-Chairman of Committee III joined the discussion to say there were some people in the U.S. who felt the Niagara River had already received too much attention. He also said there was no question that Superfund would be continued. He reported that consideration had been given to a surtax on small producers of toxic waste but the idea had been rejected as unenforceable. It was deemed more effective to apply a levy - perhaps a waste-end tax - on the 900 prime toxic waste producers in the country.

The Canadian delegate who had opened the discussion then raised a second issue, the two-way traffic in toxic wastes across the Canada-United States border. He noted that at the present time there was greater movement into the United States, a fact that aroused fears in Canada that the border would be closed. He argued it would be unwise to do so because the most economical and effective treatment of toxic wastes had to be the main concern. The Senator from Vermont agreed with this but wondered if there was U.S. concern about PCBs from Canada. A Congressman from New York stated there definitely was concern on the American side about nuclear wastes from Canada being shipped to a disposal site in South Carolina.

In response to a question concerning Canada's method of controlling toxic waste, the Canadian Co-Chairman stated it was mainly a provincial responsibility with the federal government having the power to regulate inter-provincial or international transport of toxic wastes. Concerning storage of nuclear wastes, another Canadian delegate reported that the preferred method was "swimming pools" near nuclear plant sites. He went on to describe the problem as "not very urgent. We will solve it."

Cyprus-Anvil and the White Pass - Yukon Railroad

The junior Senator from Alaska began the discussion by saying Alaska preferred that ore from the Cyprus-Anvil Mining Corporation continue to be carried by rail. However, he acknowledged that the future of the railroad would depend on the world price for metals. He then said that the chances of Alaska subsidizing the re-building of the railroad were "very poor," even though there were important tourist benefits to the state. He also warned that if the railroad did not re-open soon, the costs would be prohibitive. He then inquired whether and when the mine would re-open. A Canadian Member reported that a $50 million mine investment program had been launched, half of the funds coming from Cyprus-Anvil and half from the federal government. He observed that the mine was a pretty cost-effective operation and that a decision on its future would be made soon. He went on to say that the company apparently preferred the road to the railway as a less expensive way of carrying its ore.

The Canadian Co-Chairman of Committee III reported that, in its report the Canadian Transport Commission (CTC) had favored the railroad while Cyprus-Anvil preferred the road. He pointed out that the federal government rarely financed road construction costs except where the road had multiple uses (passenger, hauling) and that in this case road costs were far too high. He suggested that the company was just "playing hard ball" to get the best possible deal from the railroad workers.

Another Canadian Member asked whether consideration might be given to maintaining the railroad as part of a Canada-United States international park. He said it was his understanding that no Canadian government expenditures would be considered until the parties involved - the union and the company - made solid commitments to maintain the railroad but, if that condition was met, the railroad could be one of North America's great tourist attractions.

West Coast Salmon

A Canadian delegate opened the discussion by expressing Canada's keen disappointment that the draft west coast salmon treaty had failed twice, presumably because of Alaskan opposition. She remarked: "We feel our offers have been reasonable but now, once more, you are asking us to take less. We had put forth our bottom line."

The junior Senator from Alaska replied that the entire negotiation had broken down in 1983 over the Fraser River. He argued it was unfortunate the two sides could not sign what they agreed on, leaving the rest for later negotiation. "I can't understand Canada's 'all or nothing position'." He then stated that the two sides had not quite reached agreement on management of the fisheries on the Taku and Stikine rivers which flow from British Columbia through south-east Alaska. He remarked: "Canada has created a subsidized fishery on those rivers as a way of strengthening your bargaining position. And it's worked. You have proved you can control the run on those rivers." In reply to a question about the source and nature of the "subsidy", the Senator commented: "We hear it is your Department of Fisheries."

A Canadian delegate then remarked that both sides to the negotiations were "shooting themselves in the foot." He observed that salmon was an endangered species and if both Canada and the U.S. did not soon improve their fisheries management there would not be any catch. "We must take the long view. The best short-term catch may be no long-term catch." Turning to the current negotiations, he commented that in the first draft treaty, finally rejected by the U.S. side, Canada had given up a great deal, and more had been given since then. "We can't go any further." Another Canadian member underscored the point by saying British Columbia was faced with a drastic cutback in the number of its fishermen.

The Senator from Alaska then returned to his earlier comments about the "subsidized" Canadian fishery on the Taku and Stikine rivers. He said it was obviously not a commercially viable fishery because "men are flown in and fish are flown out" and remarked that Alaska's ability to manage the run had been completely thwarted. He then repeated his suggestion that a Canada-U.S.A. treaty be signed on items where agreement was possible, leaving the Fraser and other disagreements for later discussion. To this a Canadian delegate replied that Canada would not agree to splitting off the Fraser negotiations. "In any case, how can you ask us to thrash out an agreement when we always face second thoughts forced by your parochial interests?"

The Canadian Co-Chairman then asked the U.S. delegation to explain the significance and intent of the amendment to the Pelly Amendment which would permit the U.S. to embargo certain Canadian fish products upon a determination that Canada was undermining a conservation regime for Pacific Salmon. The Republican Senator from Oregon answered briefly: "That was our negotiating club. It sits there unenforced." The Senator from Alaska then returned to the discussion by arguing that U.S. enhancement and conservation measures had been far more effective than Canadian. "The bottom line is that you have been fishing your escapement and we have not." He went on to suggest that as a first step toward an agreement Canada should continue funding of joint scientific research.

There then followed a series of exchanges on the Fraser River. The Canadian side made the following points: that Canada had negotiated in good faith on the basis of the Pacific Salmon Commission; that the U.S. had repeatedly demanded additional benefits from the negotiations. The U.S. side replied that U.S. fishermen were entitled to their historic share of the catch, or at least closer to historic share than Canada would accept; and that increased U.S. demands followed evidence of greater escapement as the result of improved management. The Canadian Co-Chairman suggested that much of this discussion of details missed the point because Canada had totally lost confidence in U.S. negotiating procedure and tactics. "We need a bottom line. We are afraid to negotiate a treaty that will be changed." It was then agreed that a follow-up meeting of politicians from the two sides might be useful. In the words of a Florida Congressman, "If we can get the politicians to sign off maybe we can get somewhere."

Ontario Sports Fishing

It was arranged to discuss matters of mutual concern between Minnesota and Ontario at a breakfast meeting. In attendance were two Congressmen from Minnesota, an M.P. from Northern Ontario and an M.P. and a Senator from the bordering province of Manitoba.

One of the two Minnesota Congressmen began by saying that his state needed help on several items. First, customs and immigration matters. The Congressman explained that for some unknown reason, Canadian customs had become tougher lately. In addition it was becoming harder for U.S. guides to obtain Canadian work permits. Second, and more important, the United States needed to persuade Alan Pope, Ontario's Minister of Natural Resources, not to count shore lunches as part of the 18 fish per-boat limit for U.S. based fishing expeditions. The Congressman explained that shore lunches were typically one-third of the limit and thus reduced the catch to only twelve fish per boat. Third, to explore the creation of a Boundaries Water Commission for the region. "Our people are concerned that access to Canadian waters will become progressively more difficult." He also expressed frustration about the difficulty of arranging meetings with Mr. Pope.

In response, the M.P. from Northern Ontario stressed that the toughening of Ontario fishing regulations was by no means confined to U.S. fishermen. He pointed out that the fish populations in many of the lakes, including Lake of the Woods, were declining very rapidly. Shole Lake, for example, was no longer being fished at all. Faced with this situation, the Ontario government had launched a quite successful walleye restocking program and was cracking down on its own fishermen.

The other Minnesota Congressman said that it was not clear to Minnesotans what Ontario intended by its actions. Was it conservation or was it to generate more tourism for Ontario? He agreed that a joint boundary commission for the area would be useful. The Ontario M.P. said that he too thought the Commission a good idea because the area was going to be a difficult one for years to come. At the same time he expressed doubt that Ontario would support the creation of a joint commission which might have the effect of reducing provincial power. It was agreed that the two sides would explore this idea further and exchange information on restocking programs.

II MULTILATERAL ISSUES (in joint session with Committee II)

Grenada and Central America

The discussion on Grenada was opened by a Democratic Congressman who noted that Canada had not supported the U.S. intervention. He briefly reviewed the history of the intervention -the growing divisions in the governing parties, the wholly unexpected assassination of Maurice Bishop and the rapid deterioration of law and order -and explained that the President had a responsibility to protect American citizens. He went on to say that all the evidence supported a clear indication of danger to Americans. This was the unanimous opinion of Americans living on the island and when it became clear that diplomatic means of evacuating Americans were unlikely to succeed, the decision had been taken to intervene. "All in all, there was sufficient justification for the action taken by the President solely in terms of getting our civilians out safely." He then went on to say that other justifications for the invasion (that the airport was being prepared by the Cubans for military purposes, that there was a considerable Cuban presence, that the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States had requested the invasion) had been rejected by a House of Representatives investigation. The Congressman noted that U.S. military action had been carried out very carefully and the vast majority of Grenadians supported the action. Finally, he reported there were presently only 250 U.S. non-military personnel left on Grenada and that an election had been called for this year.

Following these comments, a Republican Congressman remarked there was no question that the President had acted just in time. Large quantities of weapons, sent from the Soviet Union through Cuba, had been found on the island and it had been clear these were intended for use somewhere in the region. He noted that the American medical students were very happy to get home. "I think Grenada was one of our finest hours."

The Co-Chairman of the U.S. delegation said that at first he had been extremely sceptical of the intervention but finally had concluded it was justified. However, he added two caveats. First, the United States might have avoided the situation entirely if it had been willing to work with the late Prime Minister, Maurice Bishop. He reported that during a visit to Washington in the summer of 1983, Bishop could not arrange to see Administration officials. Second, the policy of no press coverage of the invasion was "stupid." Those qualifications aside, he concluded the invasion had been justified because of the "tremendous danger to everyone on the Island" and the evidence that the American students were hostages. Three U.S. consular officials who had travelled to Grenada on the weekend prior to the invasion to arrange the evacuation of Americans concluded that their efforts were doomed to failure. Every approach had been rejected by Grenada authorities.

The U.S. Co-Chairman then turned to the subject of Central America. He stated that he had just served as one of four senior Congressional counsellors to the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America (known as the Kissinger Commission after its Chairman, Henry Kissinger, former U.S. Secretary of State). He described the Commission's principal recommendation as an $8.4 billion package of economic and military assistance intended to generate 3 percent economic growth in Central America. He went on to say that Central America was perhaps the most hotly contested issue in the U.S. Congress. The House Western Hemisphere Sub-committee, of which he was chairman, responded to the Kissinger Commission with its own recommendations: that 95 percent of recommended funding be provided for the next two years but that subsequent funding be provided only after peace was achieved; and that military assistance to El Salvador be conditional on the curbing of death squads and achievement of a political settlement. He went on to say that these recommendations would be taken up soon in the full House Foreign Affairs Committee but that it would be very hard to achieve any agreement. "Last year we got a bill passed 36-1 by writing it in 'Bulgarian'. This year people are even more divided and locked in. Many Democrats say there should be no money for El Salvador or Guatemala."

A Member of Parliament noted that Canada had not been asked to join the invasion of Grenada and would not have done so anyway. He did suggest that Canada might participate in a peacekeeping force and was looking at aid for Grenada in three areas: security-police services, some aspect of the airport completion and public management training programs. The Canadian delegate then commented on Central America, having first mentioned that he had travelled extensively in the region. He suggested that a military solution was not the best approach and that while some revolutionary leaders were communists, not all were. He described the Canadian approach as helping countries if they need it and not because of the nature of their political systems. He remarked that U.S. military assistance was not very helpful but acknowledged it was necessary to find effective ways of keeping Soviet and Cuban influence out of Central America. "Both sides are simply escalating the conflict. Neither side can win." In response to a question from the U.S. side, it was explained that Canadian policy tried to promote human rights without demanding democracy as we know it. A Canadian added that Canada had cut off aid to Cuba because of the export of revolution and not because of its form of Government.

Another Canadian delegate joined the discussion to say that Canada had not thought the invasion of Grenada was justified. "It is not a sufficient justification that you dislike a government." While recognizing that the United States had legitimate concerns in the region, he said many Canadians were worried by U.S. paranoia. He cited as evidence of paranoia the U.S. attitude toward the Bishop government and the building of the airport. This participant went on to say that there was not a single, unified Canadian point of view on these matters but there was fairly widespread apprehension about U.S. policy. A Canadian participant underlined the fact that Canadians, like Americans, were divided on Central America. "My constituents are split 50-50." Concerning Grenada, he stated that the Progressive Conservative party had neither condoned nor condemned the U.S. invasion. He went on to express the wish that the U.S. government would use what he regarded as the strongest justification for the action - "humanitarian intervention."

Another Canadian delegate then remarked that this was a very important subject for Canada-United States relations. He argued that the United States had legitimate concerns and must play a leading role in the region but that it was not in the U.S. interest to prevail through force alone. Instead, he suggested, the United States should seek to persuade others, including its friends. On the matter of Grenada, the Member agreed that the security of U.S. citizens had been an important concern but Canada had received assurances from Grenada that Canadians could get out. He argued that the United States could and should have sought British and Canadian help in getting out its own citizens but instead there was evidence of U.S. interference with Canada's efforts to evacuate Canadians. He expressed serious doubt that guaranteeing the safety of U.S. citizens had been the main purpose of the invasion.

Turning to Central America, the Member suggested that there were some fundamental questions to be asked about U.S. policy. Did the United States accept that political evolution could tend toward governments other than the U.S. type? Did the United States intend to overthrow the Nicaraguan government? He suggested that every effort should be made to de-militarize the region and allow people to choose their own type of government. In response, a Congressman said that Congress had spoken to the same effect: the people of Central America should be free to choose their own governments. He then remarked: "Some of us have been saying that the United States has no right to overthrow the Nicaraguan government."

At this point the senior Senator from Alaska commented heatedly that while the issues being asked were pertinent, he questioned the propriety of the Canada-U.S. Inter-Parliamentary Group discussing an issue that was deeply divisive in one or other country. "We have not discussed the Quebec issue in these meetings. I don't think it's proper to discuss Central America either". A Canadian Member responded that she failed to see the parallel between Quebec and Central America - the former was an internal Canadian question, the latter a foreign policy issue of legitimate concern to Canadians. She stressed that the purpose of the discussion was to share information, not to attack U.S. policy.

The discussion of Central America then resumed with comments by a U.S. Senator. He told delegates that more than 40 years earlier he had helped provide U.S. funding for the Pan American Highway in the hope that it would bring Central Americans closer together. He remarked: "I am saddened that this has not been so." He went on to say it was now his judgement that by becoming more deeply involved the United States would not help Central America or itself. "I now believe the better part of judgement is withdrawal."

A Democratic Congressman brought the discussion to a close by saying he did not want Canadians to think there was universal approval of the invasion of Grenada. "A cloud of suspicion still hangs over the reasons given for the invasion." Having lived in Haiti for three years and travelled widely in the region, he believed that human rights had to be the foundation of U.S. policy and assistance. "If we abandon human rights we will betray our own heritage. And no amount of arms will suppress human aspirations."

The Middle East

Opening the discussion, a Canadian Senator recounted the impressions he had formed during a recent visit to the Middle East with a Senate Subcommittee. The group had met leaders in Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Jordan and Israel as well as Palestinians and PLO representatives. He himself had returned more sympathetic than before to the Palestinian case but also more pessimistic about a solution. A wide gulf existed between Palestinians and Israel and the only answer seemed to be mutual recognition by Israel and the PLO. There was no doubt that Arafat was regarded by the Palestinians, especially in the West Bank and Jordan, as their prime spokesman. However he noted that internal dissension within the PLO Executive Committee in Kuwait had led to Arafat's inability to follow through on the protocol he had signed last year with King Hussein giving the King some authority to respond to the Reagan Plan on behalf of Palestinians.

In Saudi Arabia, continued this spokesman, the Foreign Minister had emphasized to the Canadians the importance of the U.S. role in resolving Middle East problems but had been critical that the United States had not taken a more objective view. Prince Saud had also had an unwarranted expectation of Canadian influence on U.S. policies.

In respect to West Bank settlements, the Canadian Senate spokesman said it was evident that Israel was pressing ahead, making it virtually impossible for an Israeli withdrawal from the area to take place. Arab leaders had been blunt in saying that the United States should have applied more pressure on Israel by withholding military aid. However in a U.S. election year, given the large Jewish population in some districts, the Senator concluded that such U.S. action was unlikely.

Another Canadian Senator wondered what were the prospects for the peace process under the Camp David framework and/or the Reagan Plan. He observed that Canada maintained low-level official contacts with the PLO.

A Canadian Member of Parliament then described his recent meetings in the area as part of another Canadian group. From Palestinians in Jordan he had heard of Israeli restrictions on West Bank Palestinians in respect to the digging of wells, the planting of new trees, the exports of product to Europe and of the delays at the Allenby Bridge, all adding up to harassment of Palestinian economic development. As for Jordan itself, Crown Prince Hassan of Jordan had been very pessimistic. Faced with the flow of young West Bank Palestinians into Jordan which itself was already 60 percent Palestinian, Jordanians were concerned that the East Bank would become destabilized and the monarchy endangered if the demography continued to change.

In conversation with Arafat, the Canadians were told that the PLO was prepared to agree on the pre-1967 borders and on all the relevant UN Resolutions but it insisted that Palestinian self-determination would have to be recognized. Recognition of Israel would have to involve mutual and simultaneous recognition of the PLO following along the lines of the EC Venice declaration of 1980. Arafat reminded the group that in 1977 the PLO had approved the Vance-Gromyko proposals for a peace conference of all the parties including Israel but that Israel had rejected the idea. Moreover, the White House had backtracked only 24 hours after the proposal, bending to pressure groups. On the West Bank, he noted that Bir Zeit University was still closed after three months and students were continuing to protest the killing of a student and the attack on a mosque.

In Baghdad the Canadians were told that the United States and Japan should embargo Iranian oil. It was evident, continued this delegate, that Iraq was in trouble and in some danger of being overrun by Khomeini's forces. In Damascus, the PLO Chairman of the Palestine National Council, Mr. Fahum, had criticized Arafat for serious mistakes in Lebanon and Jordan but he did so with Syrians sitting beside him. Commenting on Lebanon, the Syrian Minister of State had noted that the May 17 agreement had been imposed on Lebanon with Israeli tanks surrounding the palace. In response to an inquiry as to what Syria's intentions in Lebanon were, the Minister had replied that it wanted two independent states with an affiliation between peoples. "Lebanon's Arab identity must be paramount", he stated. In respect to Israel, the Syrians were insistent on complete withdrawal to the pre-1967 borders and recognition of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people including the right to self-determination, the right to return to their land and the right to a Palestinian state. The Canadian delegate observed that Arafat had seemed prepared to accept something less than the Syrians.

Responding for the U.S. side, a Congressman said there were misconceptions as to the effectiveness of possible U.S. pressure on Israel. He noted that there had been recent revelations as to the PLO contacts with the Administration but the House Foreign Affairs Committee had just adopted a resolution reaffirming more strongly than before the prohibition on the Administration of discussions with the PLO. Further, there was a motion before Congress to move the U.S. Embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem. This statement evoked a lively reaction among Canadian delegates and a Progressive Conservative wryly said he could offer advice to the American legislators. But the reason behind the Canadian reaction was not explained to the Americans during the Committee meeting.

A U.S. Senate spokesman was very critical of the Arabs and cited the Syrian government's massacre in Hama and the position of women in Saudi Arabia. He reminded the group that in past attempts to resolve the question of Israel in Palestine, the Israelis had accepted partition plans but the Arabs had never done so. Moreover, from 1948 to 1967 the Arabs had done little to press for a Palestinian homeland. If Jordan had not moved in 1967 to take control of the West Bank, they would still have it. In support of Israel, he said that Israel had given the Sinai back to Egypt and had made a standing offer to negotiate but Jordan, Syria and Saudi Arabia had refused. It was obvious that Palestinians who fled from areas of Israel between 1947 and 1967 were not going to be repatriated. Nor was their homeland in the West Bank, continued this Senator. Rather they should be resettled into other Arab countries. In any case until human liberties and democracy were respected in the Arab countries, the United States should support Israel.

Another U.S. Senator said the main U.S. interests in the Middle East were oil and a commitment to Israel. He himself did not perceive a major Soviet threat in the area as the U.S.S.R. had tried unsuccessfully to penetrate the area before. Regarding the Palestinian question, it was evident that Israel would not give up all the lands demanded by the Arabs. He agreed that there was no one who spoke more legitimately for the Palestinians than the PLO. As for Lebanon, he wondered if the Israelis had not withdrawn too soon in the face of Syrian-backed fighting. Partition of Lebanon could be the result, he speculated. Overall this delegate said he too was pessimistic over the Middle East situation. He affirmed that the Israelis would not be pressured and the United States would not pressure them.

In response to a U.S. delegate's earlier comments on Palestinians' lack of democracy and respect for human liberties, a Canadian spokesman said that Palestinians and the Israelis were the most educated and most democratic of all peoples in the area. In closing the discussion he noted that Shultz had pressed forward with the May 17 Israel-Lebanon agreement without involving Syria despite contrary advice from all U.S. senior diplomats in the area.

Plenary

Discussion in plenary covered two items: Making Canada's Case in Washington; and a review of the pre-electoral political situation in the two countries. The latter subject, since it is evolving rapidly, is not reported in these notes which cover only the first item on the plenary agenda.

Making Canada's Case in Washington

The Canadian spokesman opened this topic by suggesting humourously that one of the positive factors in the United States' positive balance of trade on service account was the high cost of lobbying in Washington by foreign governments and private interests. The softwood lumber case had been particularly expensive, and lawyers had been among the principal beneficiaries. Substantial companies could afford these large costs but they were a burden for a poor industry or even more for a single small company. He wondered whether there could be more flexibility in the system. Otherwise the complex U.S. regulatory procedures and the hearing process imposed a burden which became a form of non-tariff barrier.

Canadians are not used to U.S.-style lobbying. Foreign governments do not need to lobby the Canadian legislature, since an agreement made with the executive can be depended upon. But the fragmentation in power in the United States among Congress, the Administration and the regulatory agencies seemed to leave no alternative to lobbying all power centres in Washington whenever a Canadian interest is involved. How did the U.S. participants feel about foreign lobbying?

An American delegate pointed out that Canada's problem was not unique; all foreign governments faced the same challenge. The division of powers required a political process which was transparent and fair. Such a process was inevitably costly, although the costs were normally borne by the U.S. producer as complainant and by U.S. importers as defendant. Some legislation now before the Congress was partly intended to speed up the process and thereby reduce cost. However, there was no prospect of major change in the system. The U.S. revolution had been fought on the question of the power to control trade and this power had been consciously assigned to Congress in the Constitution. Although in practical terms trade negotiations could only be carried out by the executive branch, the negotiating authority given to the President by the Congress was always for a limited period of time and a defined purpose. The U.S. system not only accepts lobbying; it regards it as an important source of information.

Canadian participants asked for guidance as to whether private or official lobbying was more effective. A U.S. delegate commented that the U.S. system was "labyrinthine" and that several governments for which communications was less easy - Japan, Korea, Taiwan - were much more active in lobbying than was Canada. In recent years it was apparent that the Canadian embassy was devoting more attention to Congress, which prompted a Canadian Senator to comment that it was about time and that his Committee had almost a decade previously recommended a major increase in Embassy attention to the Congress. U.S. participants all spoke approvingly of the interventions of the Canadian Ambassador, whose official standing assured him of direct access to Congressmen and Senators. But many U.S. participants had also reported that they had received representations from agents of Canadian private interests and that this was helpful to them. The embassy delivered a policy message, whereas private interests could offer specific information. It was important that all interventions, public and private, should be coordinated and normally this function should be undertaken by the embassy.

The discussion concluded with agreement that, in addition to interventions by the embassy and the private sector, the annual meetings of the Canada-United States Inter-parliamentary Group and occasional special meetings of the Group, were important and helpful.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 27, 1984

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-4, to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

This motion, of course, requires suspension of rule 44. I make this change from our usual procedure because I have been told that it would suit the convenience of those gentlemen opposite who are interested in the subject matter of this bill if we started dealing with it tomorrow rather than Thursday. I know of no reason why we should not do that.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, if leave is granted—and, as far as I know, leave is granted—we also agree to the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE TO STUDY CANADIAN RELATIONS WITH COUNTRIES OF THE MIDDLE EAST AND NORTH AFRICA

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, November 29, 1984—St. Andrew's Day eve—I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs be authorized to continue its examination and report on Canadian relations with countries of the Middle East and North Africa;

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination and consideration of such legislation and other matters as may be referred to it, at such rates of remuneration and reimbursement as the Committee may determine, and to compensate witnesses by reimbursement of travelling and living expenses, if required, in such amount as the Committee may determine;

That the Committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate; and

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject during the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the Committee.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

GOVERNMENT GUIDELINES FOR PUBLIC SERVANTS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I am sure there will be no surprise at the line of questioning with which I would like to begin this afternoon. On Friday last, when the Senate was not sitting, the Prime Minister provided new guidelines to govern the transmission of communications between public servants and the public, the media and members of Parliament. Indeed, the Prime Minister stressed on Friday "the responsibility to provide open and accessible government" and, at the same time, issued the guidelines for public servants' communications with the public.

It would appear to me, honourable senators, that if those guidelines are implemented in their present form they will very sharply curb open and responsive behaviour among public servants in their day-to-day dealings with the public; and, indeed, do now create, from their very appearance, a further credibility gap between rhetoric and action—the proclamation that there will be open and responsive government and the issuance of guidelines that curb that openness and accessibility.

Honourable senators, it is clear that the guidelines issued on Friday have been substantially based upon those that were issued by Mr. Clark in 1979 when he was Prime Minister. In fact, the guidelines issued on Friday are precisely the same in three paragraphs as those issued by Mr. Clark in 1979. The second paragraph is changed rather substantially, and it is to that paragraph that I should like to direct some questions, because the answers might reveal more clearly the thinking of the government in making those changes.

For example, the former Prime Minister, Mr. Clark, stated, in guideline No. 2, that:

Public servants should be prepared to discuss frankly information within their areas of responsibility.

I repeat the words "should be prepared to discuss frankly information within their areas of responsibility." That is a very open comment. However, the present Prime Minister says:

Public servants should be prepared to openly provide factual information within their areas of responsibility.

My question to the Leader of the Government is whether that is a slip of the pen or whether it is intended to make a substantial change in policy. If it is a slip of the pen, could not the government restore the former words; and if it is a deliberate change, would the Leader of the Government tell us what is the purpose of changing those words in new guidelines?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe that most members of the chamber will be well aware that the subject matter of my honourable friend's question has been thoroughly canvassed in the House of Commons over the past two days, and the Prime Minister himself has taken upon himself the responsibility for dealing with this matter. Therefore, it must be quite clear that there is nothing I can add in answer to the question that has been raised this afternoon, apart from the information and the replies that have been given in the other chamber by the Prime Minister himself. If there is a particular question with respect to a matter of fact on which my honourable friend wishes clarification and if he will pose his question, I shall do my best to get an answer.

● (1410)

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I draw your attention to the statement the Leader of the Government made on Thursday in reply to a question asked by Senator Frith, that he was awaiting the authoritative statement by the Prime Minister before he made any comments on this subject. In fact, it is reported in Hansard, at page 114, that he said as follows:

I think that I had better postpone any comments on that subject until the Prime Minister has addressed the matter—

Now that the Prime Minister has addressed the matter, surely the Leader of the Government can tell us whether the difference between guideline No. 2 in both texts, the Clark text and the Mulroney text, is an error in draftsmanship or a change in substance. It seems to me to say that you will discuss frankly all information within your responsibility, and to say that you will provide factual information is quite a difference in policy. Is the minister saying that he does not know, that he has to ask the Prime Minister or that he will ask the Prime Minister if this is a slip of the tongue or the pen?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend is an experienced member of Parliament and he knows perfectly well that it is not appropriate for him to ask me a question that does not come within my purview of responsibility. This is certainly one of those matters. However, it does not prevent my obtaining information, if I can, on the points he has raised. The honourable senator has asked the same question twice. I have given my answer, and that, I am afraid, is all I am able to give at this time.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I draw your attention to the statement made by the Prime Minister last Friday in which he stated that cabinet had approved these guidelines the day before, at the cabinet meeting on Thursday. Surely, the Leader of the Government will acknowledge that he is a member of the cabinet. Was he present for that meeting? If he was, I think he has an obligation to tell us. He does not have to ask the Prime Minister.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend knows very well that I have no such obligation. He knows very well that I am not allowed to discuss, either here or in any other place, what takes place in cabinet. My honourable friend knows very well that the decisions made in cabinet are collective ones. They are confidential decisions and when they are made they are disclosed to the public. That is what the Right Honourable the Prime Minister has done—he has explained to the public the decision that was taken by cabinet. If my honourable friend expects me to put a gloss on what the Prime Minister said on this matter, he is very much mistaken.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the Prime Minister did not deal with the question of whether this discrepancy between the two guidelines, the Clark guidelines and the Mulroney guidelines, is a slip of the pen or whether it is a question of substance. I am asking the Leader of the Government to find out. He attended the cabinet meeting, but does not know and cannot answer. However, he has undertaken to find out, and I would ask him to do that.

While he is finding that out, will he explain to us the meaning of the last sentence in the second paragraph, which reads as follows:

Off-the-record background briefings will only be permitted in exceptional circumstances and must have prior Ministerial approval.

Was the Leader of the Government present when that was approved, and will he tell us what these exceptional circumstances are that will permit off-the-record background briefings with ministerial approval?

Senator Roblin: Again, my friend refers to what transpired in cabinet.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): He is asking you what it means.

Senator Roblin: I simply tell him, again, that I am not going to tell him what transpired in cabinet.

The second question he asks is, what does it mean? This matter has been the subject of a very lengthy and detailed Question Period on two occasions in the House of Commons and, for all I know, it may be the subject of Question Period again today.

Senator Frith: But you won't get any answers.

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend expects me to enlarge on what the Prime Minister said with respect to these matters, he is making a mistake because it would be quite improper for me to do so. The Prime Minister is the Leader of the Government; he will deal with questions of this kind in the House of Commons, as he has been doing. I am certainly not going to attempt to second-guess him in this chamber.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, is the Leader of the Government saying that it is not appropriate to ask him, as the representative of the government in this chamber, what the exceptional circumstances are which would justify off-the-record background briefings? That is what I am asking.

The public will want to know whether they can ask for an off-the-record background briefing. We have been told that it will be given in exceptional circumstances. What are those exceptional circumstances? Have criteria been established with respect to these exceptional circumstances? I cannot go to the House of Commons and ask questions; I am asking questions here, as I thought was the legitimate right of a member of the Senate of Canada. Is that now to be done away with?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, it is the legitimate right of a member of the Senate, and I do not quarrel with that for five seconds. My honourable friend is entitled to pose questions. However, what answers he receives are my responsibility.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: He didn't get any!

Senator Roblin: I have to exercise that responsibility with due regard to constitutional proprieties, with due regard to what has been said in the other place with respect to these matters.

I will do this for my honourable friend: On the basis of the question he has put, I will inquire whether there is any further information that can be given in addition to that which has already been offered in the other place on the two days I have mentioned and which has probably been raised today. That is my responsibility and I will be glad to discharge it.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I have asked the Leader of the Government four questions and he has undertaken to find answers, if possible. I think these questions cry out for answers. They are questions which will be asked in every part of the country.

I now wish to ask another question, which he can take to his master and find out if he can answer.

In 1979, Mr. Clark set out guideline No. 4, which states:

It will be normal in many instances for public servants to be quoted by name, and to be interviewed for radio and television as well as by print media.

That was stated by the then Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Joe Clark, in the guidelines. He said he was doing it "to encourage open and responsive behaviour among public servants." It was a very good guideline, honourable senators. Why has it been dropped now? Can the Leader of the Government tell us how the dropping of this Clark guideline No. 4 is consistent with the Prime Minister's first profession of faith in open government, when he stated to the press on Friday afternoon, "My responsibility is to provide open and accessible government"?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend referred to my political master. I wonder what the honourable gentleman was doing in the years when he was a member of the cabinet. Did he not respect the prerogative of the then Prime Minister to speak for the government? I am sure he did. I am doing the very same thing. I think every cabinet minister has an obligation to take that concept into consideration when dealing with affairs of a general nature such as those raised by the honourable gentleman.

My honourable friend returns to the objection he has to the guidelines which have been offered. If he will read Hansard of the other place for Thursday and Friday of last week, and probably yesterday, he will find that the very same point he has mentioned was discussed at some length among members of Parliament.

Senator Frith: By members of the House of Commons.

Senator Roblin: I can certainly add nothing to what has already been said.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I have asked a very important question. Is the Leader of the Government saying that he is not under some obligation to answer in the Senate for the Government of Canada? I can understand the Leader of the Government's saying that it is not his responsibility or under his purview—if it were, for example, an immigration matter—and I can understand his saying that he would have to obtain information on this matter. However, I gather that today he is saying that he is not responsible for answering to the Senate on a broad policy question such as access to government. I would like to know whether I am right or wrong in that.

● (1420)

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend knows the answer. I am responsible for answering for the government in this chamber, and I intend to do so.

Senator Frith: But then you ask us to read Hansard for our answers.

Senator MacEachen: Why don't you answer?

Senator Roblin: I shall answer for the government when I have the information to do so. I have already made the offer to my honourable friend that if there is any advance by way of information that I can obtain for him, over and above that which is already freely available in public print, I shall be glad to do so. However, I am sure he recognizes, that when information is in the public domain it is really not incumbent upon me to repeat what is already in the public domain in my answers here in the Senate. If my friend wants fresh information—and from what he said, I think he does—I shall do my best to obtain it for him. If there is any advance on what has already been placed before Parliament and the people in the discussions on this matter in the other place, he can rely upon me to secure it for him.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government for acknowledging that he has a responsibility to answer for the government in the Senate, and that it is not our obligation to read what is happening in the House of Commons in order to be advised as to what government policy is. I thank him for that, and I thank him for his undertaking to provide additional information on those points which I have raised.

However, I would like to ask him something that must be in his own domain of knowledge. Do these guidelines apply to his exempt staff?

Senator Roblin: I shall take your last question as notice, because I am not aware of what the answer is. I would also say to my honourable friend that I have never denied my responsibility to deal with questions in this house, but I do say that the traditions of Parliament that govern Question Period apply to me as much as to anyone else here. My honourable friend knows perfectly well that when a piece of information is in the public domain, whether it is in Hansard or any place else, the members of this chamber have some obligation to make themselves familiar with it and not to ask the Leader of the Government in this house to repeat information which is already freely available.

Senator Frith: Well, that's quite a change.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government has not been able to answer any of these questions—neither have they been answered in the House of Commons—and he has not been able to tell us whether these guidelines apply to his own staff. I think we are entitled to a better answer than that.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend is complaining because he is in the complaining business. I understand; I have been there myself. However, I tell my honourable friend that he will receive every answer that the courtesies of the Senate require.

Senator Frith: Do the guidelines apply to the Senate?

WELFARE

ADEQUACY OF PAYMENTS

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, in my speech to the Senate the other day I referred to levels of welfare in the province of Saskatchewan being as low as from $125 to $135 a month for a single person for food, clothing and everything else except, perhaps, rent or the cost of a place to sleep.

This morning I watched the television program Canada A.M. and at that time three unemployed Canadians were being interviewed. One of them was a young man from Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, by the name of Tom Ranks. In the course of the interview he was asked what his level of welfare payments was, and he replied that for food his payment was between $50 and $60 per month.

I would therefore ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether it is the position of the Government of Canada that that level of welfare payment is adequate.

The Leader of the Government in the Senate is aware that there are agreements under the Canada Assistance Plan. I ask him to look into the question: Is Saskatchewan living up to its responsibilities under that plan? How far do these levels fall below the maximum standards that are to be provided under the Canada Assistance Plan, and will he pass on to his colleagues in cabinet, particularly to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, what I would be so bold as to describe as a Senate concern for the poor of this country?

For many, many years Senator Croll has pleaded the cause of the low income people of this country, and, I think, with general Senate support. I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he would use his good offices and put before cabinet the concern we have for these meagre and unsatisfactory levels of welfare payments.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend has asked a complicated question which requires a great deal of investigation in order to determine what the facts are. I suggest that the question be regarded as a written one, and the information will be provided.

Senator Argue: I beg your pardon.

Senator Roblin: I said that the question would be regarded as a written one, and the information will be provided.

Senator Argue: I appreciate that. I have some further pertinent facts I should like to put before the leader.

The whole welfare system in the province of Saskatchewan, in my judgement, is in a state of shambles. It is so bad that the Reverend Tom Powell, the head of the United Church Conference in Saskatchewan, recently made a presentation to the Minister of Welfare for the province of Saskatchewan pointing out the very abject poverty in which so many recipients find themselves. He pointed out that those on welfare go to United Church ministers—and I am sure to all clergy—and ask for food. In Canada people are asking for food! They also ask for a few dollars to pay for medication and other essential needs.

A federal-provincial conference will be held in Regina on Valentine's Day. I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he can tell us whether the question of the level of welfare payments across this country, and the welfare system generally, will be raised at that conference.

I know that that conference is going to deal with the economy, but I can tell him that the level of welfare in this country, and the need to keep Canadians in a good state of health, even if they are unemployed, is an absolute economic necessity. I ask him if he knows whether that item is going to be raised at that conference, and, if it is not, whether he will use his good offices to ensure that that item is placed on the agenda.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I am sure we listen with a sympathetic ear to the case made by my honourable friend, because to be on welfare in any circumstance is an unhappy situation. The question of how much money should be made available to persons in those circumstances concerns all of us.

I can tell him that—and I am sure he already knows this—the level of welfare payments is set by provincial authorities and not by the federal government. Our task is to share in the costs, which we do. So, I think that that part of his question will have to be addressed to another quarter rather than to me in the Senate.

He then asked another significant question, which was: Will the matter of welfare be placed on the agenda for the summit conference that is planned for early next year? I cannot give him a categorical answer but I will try to get him such an answer. However, I have every reason to believe that that topic will be addressed at that conference. At any rate, I will try to confirm that for him so that he will be left in no doubt.

Senator Argue: I appreciate the answer provided by the Leader of the Government. On the question of whether or not the level of payments is solely the responsibility of the provincial authorities, I point out that all actions undertaken under the Canada Assistance Plan are by agreement. I understand the schedules—and this is only my understanding and I may be in error—are also arrived at by way of agreement, certainly by way of an exchange of information.

My questions are: Has the present Government of Canada agreed to these disastrously inhumanly low levels? Has the Government of Canada made any representations to have them increased? Is the Government of Canada a party to agreements that allow this kind of abhorrent thing to take place?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, it depends on what Government of Canada you are talking about. If you are talking about the previous Government of Canada, I suppose my friend's strictures would apply. I do not think any changes have been made, certainly not in the downward direction, in respect to these allowances since the present government came into office. Undoubtedly, it is a matter which has been in the public domain before the two governments for some time, and the agreements to which my honourable friend referred were entered into before we had any responsibility for them.

Having said that, if there is any further information that I can give him with respect to these agreements, I will be glad to do so.

Senator Argue: I appreciate the comments of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Undoubtedly, some of these things were undertaken by provincial governments before the election of the Mulroney government, but the former Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Honourable Monique Bégin, was totally on the side of the low-income people at all times in discussing these matters with the provinces. I am asking what the attitude of the present government is.

While watching television this morning I was shocked to hear a resident of Saskatoon saying that his income allowance for food was between $50 and $60 a month. When I spoke in the debate on the Throne Speech I thought the allowance for food was somewhat higher. This young man was reported as being 24 years of age, a truck driver by trade with some mechanical training, unable to get a job and if not literally starving, I would suggest, he certainly was susceptible to malnutrition as a result of receiving an allowance of only $50 or $60 a month for food.

Senator Roblin: Of course, the fact is that this allowance was arrived at before the present government came to power. One has to assume that however good-hearted her intentions were, the minister of the day approved of what was going on to the extent that she had the power and duty to approve it. However, let us forget about that. I am still interested in my honourable friend's point, and I will do what I can to get some information for him.

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT RATES—WESTERN GRAIN

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. Before the last election we heard a great deal from the Conservative Party, especially in Saskatchewan, concerning the Western Grain Stabilization Act, Bill C-155, to amend the Crow rate. Among the many promises which they made concerning that act, were that they would freeze the amount that farmers paid to transport their grain to market commencing January 1, 1984, and that that freeze would carry on until the end of the crop year, July 31, 1986. We are now into 1984 and not only has the freeze not taken place but there has, indeed, been an increase.

When that bill was introduced in this chamber an amendment was put forward by the Conservative opposition. Senator Asselin moved, seconded by Senator Macdonald, the following amendment to clause 41 of Bill C-155:

(2) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, the rate a railway company may charge a shipper for the movement of grain for the period January 1, 1984 to July 31, 1986 shall not exceed the existing rates in effect on August 1, 1983.

That was very clear. That amendment was put forward by Senator Asselin in your absence and he mentioned that you supported this amendment, and it was then promised in the election campaign. My question is: What do you intend to do about it now? When do you intend to bring this freeze into effect?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend has asked two questions, one with respect to the Western Grain Stabilization Act, and I think that he is probably aware that payments under this act have been speeded up and will be available for distribution to the farmers much more quickly than was otherwise the case. That is the statement of the minister in the other place.

I can also tell honourable senators that we may anticipate, although I am not announcing government policy in any detail, that there will be changes made to the Western Grain Stabilization Act which may attract the support of honourable senators, but we have to wait to see what they are.

Certain undertakings have been given with respect to the Crow and with respect to freight rates generally in western Canada. I am not sure whether the one my honourable friend mentioned was included in the ultimate statement of the Conservative Party on this matter, but various statements were made with respect to the Crow. I can say to him that in due course—and I think before very long—the Honourable Minister of Transport will be introducing bills that deal with reforms which we think should be approved respecting the freight rate situation in western Canada. As my honourable friend understands, I cannot give him details, but he may expect to see a bill before too long.

Senator Steuart: Honourable senators, I misspoke the name of the legislation when I referred to the Crow rate; I intended to refer to the Western Grain Transportation Act.

Is the Leader of the Government saying that we can expect some changes to this in the future? If the promise made by the Conservative Party that they would freeze the level of freight rates to the farmers is kept—and so far this has not been the case since there has in fact been an increase—can we expect that there will be a reimbursement or a roll-back of the increase they have already paid? Can we expect that as part of the deal?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has asked me to give a forecast of government policy. Of course, as an experienced parliamentarian, he knows that that is something I am not going to do.

Senator Steuart: As an experienced parliamentarian, I am beginning to think that the leader cannot do much of anything in terms of answering questions in this chamber. I know the cabinet is large and that my honourable friend is probably seated near the back, but I sometimes wonder if he can hear what is going on or if the other members can hear him.

If the honourable gentleman can be heard, would he ask, on behalf of the Senate, what changes they intend to make in relation to western farmers? I would point out that the leader was strongly in favour of those changes when he was in opposition.

In addition, Senator Nurgitz mentioned that he felt strongly enough about this situation that, if the Crow rate were going to be changed, there should be an amendment to the act so that all lands ceded by British Columbia to the federal government and, eventually, given to the CPR, would be given back to British Columbia. Can he tell us now if any negotiations have started between the new Government of Canada, the CPR and British Columbia to have those lands given back to British Columbia as the leader's party so strongly advocated when in opposition? Is this in the books and are we likely to see it happen?

Senator Roblin: I would start off by telling my honourable friend that I can hear in cabinet just as well as I can hear him here, and that is very well.

Hon. Hazen Argue: What do they hear when they hear?

Senator Roblin: I am sure that all senators who have been in cabinet know what the rules of the game are, and that it is not appropriate to expect me to make announcements here, to divulge what has been taking place in cabinet, or to make announcements which should be made by ministers in their own right. It is not appropriate for me to make announcements that other ministers ought to make because of their cabinet responsibility.

There was no stronger advocate of that point of view than the gentleman who stood in my place a little while ago, who is not here today, although I think he might support me on this point, oddly enough.

I am not going to give my honourable friend information which is not in my possession to give at this time. I am not going to speculate on what future policy might be, and I am not going to answer for cabinet ministers who should be making those statements for themselves. Therefore, I cannot shed much light on the questions my friend has asked.

If my honourable friend keeps those questions on his file, and I am sure he will, I think, when the legislation comes in, he will see to what extent we have been able to satisfy him.

Senator Steuart: As a supplementary, I would ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he will talk to those people responsible. Surely he can say that some consideration is being given to these matters and give us some information that we can give to the prairie farmers who are most concerned about the situation; who looked forward, when they voted so overwhelmingly for the Conservatives, to seeing at least a freeze on their freight rates; and who now are hopeful that, since that freeze did not take place, they can look forward to a roll-back. Can the Leader of the Government find out from the minister responsible and at least give us some hope that that is being considered?

● (1440)

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has asked the same question in different terms and he has to be given the same answer. From my contact with the farmers on the prairies, I can say that they do not seem to be too unhappy with the present administration. They see the sympathetic treatment given on the question of the taxation of gasoline and diesel oil on the farms of western Canada.

Senator Argue: The prices just went up.

Senator Roblin: They would have gone up a lot more if it had not been for this measure, as my honourable friend knows. Why did they go up? Well, I must not get involved in a debate. I will break my own rule if I start that.

Senator Argue: The farmers wonder why prices went up when they were supposed to go down.

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend wants to debate that question, he can refer back to the Oil Compensation Act, for which he is responsible, and he will know the reason why. If he has need of any explanations in that regard, he can ask himself those questions because he knows the answers.

Senator Argue: It was announced that prices would go down, yet they never went down.

Senator Roblin: I cannot hear what the honourable senator is saying. Is he talking too much? No, no, not him—he does not talk too much. I am the one who talks too much.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question arising out of the response of the government leader to the questions put by Senator Steuart. I understood him to say that the current government had provided for a speed-up in the Western Grain Stabilization Act payments. If he said that, I just want to note that that is not correct. This government is implementing the current act. The act now on the statute books provides for an early payment this year, as well as a later payment. When I was discussing the bill that contained this provision before the agricultural committee, I said that the payments could probably be made in the last two weeks of October or the first two weeks of November. The Conservative members were of the view that that was not good enough and that the government should have been able to make the payments more quickly. Well, the Conservatives are now administering the act. Instead of making the payments in the early part of the time-frame that I mentioned, they were only able to do so in the latter part of that time-frame. In fact, they were not able to speed up the payments at all.

I got the impression from the Leader of the Government—and he can correct me if I am misinterpreting what he said—that there would be an effort made next year to provide for a speed-up in payments. Can he tell us that amendments will be made to the Western Grain Stabilization Act to provide for an early payment next year? Let us hope that it is a very early payment. We are told that it could amount to 50 or 60 per cent of a total payment that could go as high as $800 million. I am sure that such amendments would be welcome. Can the government leader tell us whether they are coming forward?

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend would like me to share the credit with respect to these prompt payments under the Western Grain Stabilization Act, I am quite willing to go along with him. To the extent that he was involved with the administration of the act when he was in charge of the Wheat Board, I am willing to concede to him any aspect of credit to which he feels he is entitled. But I do say that the farmers are getting the money more quickly and that is really what we are interested in.

I have to tell my honourable friend that, to the best of my knowledge, changes will be made to the Western Grain Stabilization Act. As to what those changes will be, I am afraid that he will have to be patient and wait until the bill is available for presentation to Parliament.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I am a little disappointed with that response because I thought that statements had already been made by the minister responsible to the effect that the amendments would provide for a mammoth payment before seeding.

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Roblin: Of course, that just illustrates the disadvantage of my trying to answer for ministers in a field with which I am not fully familiar and in which I am not fully briefed. My friend has underlined that point with great accuracy, and I thank him for it.

Senator Argue: I am not sure that I am right.

Senator Roblin: If my friend is right—and I have noticed that he often is—

Senator Argue: I am not going to try to return the compliment.

Senator Roblin: Well, I would not expect that of the honourable senator, but it would not do any harm if he did. The point I am trying to make is this, if the minister has gone further than I have, that is good. If my honourable friend has that information, then I am glad that he does.

POSSIBILITY OF CANCELLING INTERNATIONAL SERVICE

Hon. Jean Le Moyné: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. We all know that the international service of the CBC has been contributing eminently if discreetly for a long time to the propagation of Canadian culture abroad while serving extraordinarily well the cause of world peace. However, a rumour has been circulating to the effect that the Government intends to abolish this irreplaceable service. Can my distinguished colleague assure me that the Government has no intention of doing such a thing?

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I appreciate my honourable friend's concern. He is a man whose judgment I respect considerably. I have to tell him, however, that the government is not making any plans with respect to the CBC at the present time. Those plans are being made by Mr. Juneau, the President of the CBC. In due course, he will be presenting his recommendations to the government.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): What of Tom Gould and his friends?

Senator Roblin: It will then be up to the government to decide whether it wishes to accept the suggestions made or whether it has other things in mind. Until such time as the President of the CBC has reported, however, I am afraid that I am unable to say what the prospect is likely to be.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Does that mean that the Gould group has been called off?

Senator Roblin: I have no information that the Gould group has been called off. I would be very surprised if it were.

Senator Frith: Therefore, the statement that these cuts are being considered only by the President and officers of the CBC is not correct—or, I should say, not complete. Would it not be more complete to say that the recommendations are being made by the Gould group in consultation with the president, and that the Gould group represents the Prime Minister's office?

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend understands that, then he understands more than I do. I do not see it that way at all.

Senator Frith: How does the Leader of the Government see it?

Senator Roblin: I believe that, with respect to the CBC, there are two streams of information coming in to the minister. One is through the report of Mr. Gould and one is through the report of the President of the CBC. They may be identical. Then again they may not. But I see that they are operating under two separate terms of reference.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have another supplementary question. Could the Leader of the Government try to find out whether his statement is correct? My impression was that the Gould group was to work with the executive of the CBC in the function of watchdog or consultant. I do not want to use any negative terms, but it was my understanding that they were to work together. Perhaps the Leader of the Government could find out whose understanding is the correct one.

Senator Roblin: I know that the minister in charge has already given a considerable explanation of the role of Mr. Gould and his associates. I will ask the minister whether there is any further information he can provide in order to satisfy my honourable friend.

TRANSPORT

RAIL SERVICE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I direct my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Last week the government announced that a new national rail passenger service would be undertaken. A task force was set up. The mandate of the task force made reference to the criteria to be established. After the careful reading I have given it, I can say that that mandate did not indicate the consideration of any economic criteria. I am sure that that is of concern to honourable senators and to Canadians in general. My question is this: Is it the position of the government that the matter of a national rail passenger service will not be considered from an economic standpoint?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think it has been the tradition in the formulation of transportation policies in this nation, that there are a number of criteria that are taken into account when decisions are made. There are certain social aspects to be considered; there are matters of national development to be considered; and, of course, there are economic questions to be considered. I would be very surprised if, in this study of VIA Rail to which my honourable friend has alluded, consideration has not been given to the economic aspects of the matter. No matter what the VIA Rail study indicates, I am sure that the government will have to give consideration to the economic aspects of the matter.

Senator Sinclair: I have a supplementary question. I wonder if, in discussing this matter with his colleagues, the Leader of the Government would indicate whether there is going to be a departure from the economic standard of effective demand, which, as he may be aware, has guaranteed some type of economic approach to this problem.

Senator Roblin: I am rather sympathetic to the question because I think that the matter of effective economic demand is an important one. I am quite confident that it will be among those questions the government will have to consider when it reviews this entire subject.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, my question arises out of some of the remarks made in this chamber respecting the Crow. Having spent half my life dealing with it, I do not want to get too involved. However, I am interested in whatever changes will be brought forward. Will other aspects of transportation in the national interest—as distinct from those in the interest of western Canada—be considered when the bill comes forward?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I am sure that the bill to which we are referring—I cannot at this moment recall the precise name; it refers to western transportation—is limited in its provisions to the situation governing regional railways services in western Canada. That is my impression. My honourable friend is quite right in saying that does not present the full picture with respect to transportation in the nation. I can tell him that the Minister of Transport has already made a statement to the effect that he intends to look into all aspects of transportation, including trucks, airlines, railways, and so on. So while I am not hopeful that one can expect decisions or reports on this matter in the most immediate future, I do know that this is a priority matter with the minister, and I believe we shall be seeing some action from him.

Senator Sinclair: As a supplementary, in view of the fact that millions of dollars have been committed by certain corporations, including one owned by the Canadian government, based on the act to which my honourable friend made reference, could the Leader of the Government give consideration to that fact and to the question of how they can stop that type of expenditure?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I believe we all agree that most of those expenditures—I hesitate to use the word “all” because in human affairs it is usually wrong to be too confident—are necessary for both the continued development of the transportation system in the west and the economy. I regard them as being extremely important, and I feel confident in saying that the policies of the government will be such as to ensure that such expenditures as are needed in the national interest will indeed be proceeded with.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

GOVERNMENT GUIDELINES FOR PUBLIC SERVANTS

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I have a question arising out of the answers given by the Leader of the Government concerning the guidelines for public servants. Can he inform the Senate under what statutory authority those guidelines were issued, bearing in mind that section 1 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees to all Canadians freedom of opinion and expression?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend has asked me for a legal opinion, and I am sure he knows that ministers are not expected to provide legal opinions.

Senator Grafstein: I am not seeking a legal opinion. It is a question of fact. As a supplementary, I should like to know under what law, as guaranteed by our Constitution, those guidelines were issued? Under section 2, freedom of expression and freedom of opinion is guaranteed to every Canadian, including members of Parliament and public servants. I do not have to remind the Leader of the Government that section 1 says that the rights and freedoms are only to be limited or prescribed by law. I am asking the Leader of the Government to say under what law the Prime Minister purports to set out his guidelines, because I do not know of any such law.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend for clarifying his question. Obviously I misunderstood it on the first occasion. I will endeavour to provide him with an answer.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: It's the law of divine justice.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, now that we are back on the subject of guidelines, may I ask the Leader of the Government, when he is making researches into the intricate and manifold ways in which those guidelines will be applied, whether he will determine if Tom Gould is considered to be a public servant under the terms of the guidelines—and if those guidelines apply to the overall group that is consulting with the CBC with respect to expenditure reductions? It is interesting to know whether such a group would be bound by those guidelines. I should like to know the answer to that question.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition has asked me another question with respect to certain people who receive their pay from the public purse, namely, the Senate exempt staff. I do not know the answer to that. I shall try to ascertain the answer and will also endeavour to find out in what category Mr. Gould and his associates are grouped with respect to their duties.

METRIC CONVERSION

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government dealing with the subject of metric conversion. Honourable senators are aware that some confusion has existed concerning the government's policy with regard to metric. I hope that my question has not been raised in the House of Commons, so that I shall be able to receive an answer here. I believe the confusion arises from a statement made by Mr. Domm, the parliamentary secretary to the minister. As someone said: "Give Bill Domm an inch and . . .". In any event, he said there would be no prosecutions and made a statement that would seem to indicate some kind of government policy. The minister did not refute Mr. Domm's statement, but neither did he support it. I know that my honourable friend understands that confusion does exist concerning the government's position on metric.

My question, which no doubt the Leader of the Government will have to take as notice, is: Does the government intend to stand by and complete the decision made in 1970 to move Canada into metric?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I hardly dare say this to my honourable friend, but it is a fact that the question was asked in the House of Commons.

Senator Frith: So I am out of court.

Senator Roblin: It was phrased in almost precisely the terms that the Deputy Leader of the Opposition has phrased it here. It is a fact that the minister, in the other place, replied to the question and that it is in the public domain. However, I will not stop there. I will ask the minister if he can add anything to his statement in the House of Commons that would contribute to the enlightenment of the Senate.

Senator Frith: I am sure that eventually we shall have clarified for us the question of what we are entitled to ask in the Senate. I hope that the Leader of the Government would consider it reasonable for senators to believe that we are entitled to do more than merely add to questions asked in the other place. When the Leader of the Government brings back his answer, perhaps he will provide a statement to the Senate on the policy of the government concerning metric conversion.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I would be the last man to attempt to circumscribe the rights of senators to ask questions on anything.

Senator Frith: And get answers.

Senator Roblin: That is a different matter. When it comes to answers, we have had 300 years of trying to work out the situation concerning what questions are suitable to be answered during an oral question period. Everyone knows what they are—

Hon. D. G. Steuart: We want quicker action.

Senator Roblin: It is somewhat frustrating. I cannot quite hear what Senator Steuart is saying, yet it is bound to be funny. Obviously I am missing a good laugh. Perhaps I should tell Senator Steuart that Senator Frith is trying to interpret what he said. However, I would rather hear it from the honourable senator directly. Senator Steuart, what did you say?

Senator Steuart: You referred to 300 years, but we were hoping for a little quicker action. But we will wait.

Senator Roblin: I was referring to 300 years in the past. You will get plenty of action before you are out of this Parliament. I would say to honourable senators that I am afraid I shall have to restrict my answers to the form, tradition and accepted procedure concerning the way in which oral questions are responded to in this chamber, or in the other place. At the same time, I will endeavour to be as forthcoming as I can. My honourable friend has to remember that we are now facing a different situation in the Senate. During the last two Parliaments we had four cabinet ministers here, three of whom held important portfolios and were able to respond in this chamber as they were not able to respond in the other place. Therefore the nature of the Question Period under those circumstances was somewhat different from that of the Question Period we now have. Honourable senators will have to recognize my limitations. I just do not know all the answers. That is all there is to it. I just do not know everything. There are many things that I shall have to ask about. I will do that, but I will have to restrict myself to those regulations that are imposed on ministers and parliamentary bodies with respect to the answering of questions. Within those limits I will be as forthcoming and as co-operative as I can.

Senator Frith: However, I am sure that my honourable friend will agree that we are entitled not just to ask questions on government policy, but to receive answers, and that we ought to look to the Leader of the Government in the Senate to speak for the government, even though he does not have any colleagues here. We have both been here at times when there was only the leader speaking for the government. Is there any doubt that the Leader of the Government is here to answer for the government? Of course, he does not know everything and has to seek information. But we should not be told that the subject matter is not within his portfolio or that because he has no cabinet colleagues here he cannot get an answer. Are we understood on that point?

Senator Roblin: It seems that my honourable friend wants to set up a straw baby and then knock the living blazes out of it. I have never said anything like that and my honourable friend has received this answer half a dozen times.

Senator Frith: It is not an answer.

Senator Roblin: I will be glad to give it to him half a dozen times more. I answer for the government in the Senate and I will do the best I can. Within the limits imposed upon me by the rules of Parliament and within the limits of my own information, I shall answer questions. I am sure that my honourable friend would not expect me to go beyond that, because if I did, he would find me giving different answers to the ones given in the House of Commons, which, no doubt, would please him a great deal, and he would find me providing him with information that is not correct, which would distress him even more so. I am going to stick to my guns. I shall answer questions but it has to be done under proper terms and conditions.

Senator MacEachen: Guidelines do not apply to you.

THE PRIME MINISTER

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF STATEMENTS

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate and I hope that he can help me out. The other day the Prime Minister referred to an airplane as a "sacred instrument of travel." What exactly does that mean?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I have to thank my honourable friend. He informed us the other day that he was "a born again" senator, and I think that is true. I have seen him here pretty well since the session started, sitting through Question Period and even listening to some of the speeches.

Senator Davey: I wouldn't miss it for anything.

Senator Roblin: That really says something when one considers that we have not been favoured with his presence on previous occasions. He has now reached the point where he is asking questions and that indicates that he is coming along. However, I am not coming along because I do not know the answer to his inquiry about the sacred airplanes.

Senator Davey: Perhaps I could ask another question. A senior adviser to the Prime Minister says the Prime Minister's offspring do not have a nanny but his government-paid household staff "interface with the children in a habitual way." I wonder if the leader could explain that one to us.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Was there very much interfacing over the weekend?

Senator Roblin: I bow to my honourable friend's experience. He has more experience with nannies than I have. When he was on this side of the house he had a nanny or two to account for, and if he will just look up in the files what he said about the matter then, he may be able to answer his question of today.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): That is a solid, clear, unmistakable answer.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Am I to understand the answer of the government of the leader—excuse me, the Leader of the Government—I am getting confused by the leader's use of the English language. Sometimes I wonder whether he contributed to the writing of that famous television series "Mr. Minister."—However, on this issue of the nanny, is he saying that when the Conservatives do something which he thinks is reprehensible, if the Liberals did it, that makes it all right?

Senator Perrault: That is the only interpretation you can give it.

Senator Roblin: That is a philosophical question which causes me some problems. I simply say to him that right is right and wrong is wrong.

Senator Frith: And you will take it up with the minister of philosophy.

[Translation]

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I want to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether the issue of a "sacred instrument of travel" is not a matter of translation. In this bilingual country, the Prime Minister, the boy from Baie Comeau, as he likes to call himself, said previously and in French that a Government airplane is a "sacré" moyen de transport . . .

[English]

Translated into English it means "a sacred means of communication." Is that the case with Mr. Mulroney, that he got mixed up in the two official languages?

[Translation]

Senator Roblin: "Sacre bleu, je ne sais pas, mon ami!"

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear, right on!

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, seconded by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to Her Speech at the opening of the Session.—(Honourable Senator Graham).

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, I should like to congratulate Senator Charbonneau, our new Speaker. I am sure that he will uphold with fairness the interests of the various parties. His brilliant career in the public and private sectors has been good training for that office.

May I mention also the outstanding achievement of his predecessor, Senator Riel, Speaker and diplomat. He did much for the prestige of the Senate in Canada and abroad.

Among other eminent officials, Senator Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, distinguished himself by his well-known dedication.

[English]

Senator Roblin brings to the government leadership wide parliamentary experience, a keen mind and an eloquence difficult to match.

[Translation]

Finally, I would like to extend my greeting to Senator Flynn, a talented man whose spirited leadership will long be remembered.

[English]

Senator Doody's ability and fine sense of humour have already brought new happiness to the leadership of his party. The veteran Senator Phillips, of course, has a sizeable task before him in filling the considerable shoes of his predecessor, the much admired Senator John M. Macdonald, but I am confident that he, too, is equal to the task.

[Senator Frith.]

The leadership team on this side of the house has two veterans returning for another season and a new first draft choice rookie in a manner of speaking. Senator Frith, at times feisty, but always interesting, reasonable, resourceful and resonant, returns as deputy leader. Senator Petten as whip brings his negotiating oils and genuine charm. I cannot think of any individual in Canada who could greater enhance this chamber than the Leader of the Opposition, the junior senator from Nova Scotia. Senator MacEachen brings to his office a wealth of experience and finally honed debating skills which would be difficult to eclipse anywhere in the Commonwealth. Indeed, in my judgment his contribution to the public life of our country is surpassed by that of no other individual. I congratulate Senators Macquarrie and Tremblay, the mover and seconder, in launching this debate so successfully.

Honourable senators, on September 4 of this year the Progressive Conservative Party was given a massive mandate to form a new national government. The magnitude of that triumph was, I suspect, a surprise, even a shock to some of the party's most ardent disciples and prognosticators. During the election campaign every Tory speech was light with humour and heavy—almost weighted down—with promise heaped upon promise. "A new day, a new dawning," trumpeted their leader. Tens of thousands of new jobs created overnight. Simultaneously, the unemployment rate would tumble. There would be new assistance for young people, prosperity everywhere and liberty—whatever that may mean, in light of the gags that have suffocated everyone from the chauffeur to the "Chief High Priests of Staff."

• (1510)

Honourable senators, I do not know what it is like in your various parts of the country, but down in Cape Breton where I come from the unemployment rate has gone up an unprecedented four percentage points since the new government took office.

An Hon. Senator: Shame!

Senator Graham: In August, the official unemployment rate stood at 16.2 per cent and by the end of October it was up to 20.3 per cent. Unofficially, I am told, the unemployment rate is now well over 30 per cent. So how is the new government helping that hard pressed area of the country and how is it creating the much quoted "jobs, jobs, jobs"?

As I mentioned the other day, to start with they have cancelled the decentralization program which would have moved the Income Securities Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare to Sydney, thus creating a total of 75 to 85 new jobs in that area. In addition, the construction of a new federal building to house those and other federal employees would have created some 100 jobs during the period of construction. However, tenders on that building have also been cancelled. Major cutbacks in CN Marine activities have been announced, resulting in another serious loss of jobs and service.

Rumour has it that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will shortly swing the axe in various areas of the country. Let me put that remark in proper perspective in terms of my area of the country. We have two television stations in Sydney. A few years ago, ATV, an affiliate of CTV, abandoned its local programming. Thus, live maritime shows on that network all now originate out of Halifax. For the past several years, the CBC has carried a live hour-long show out of Sydney each evening called "Cape Breton Report". It is an excellent production and the only locally produced show on television. Again, the rumour mill is grinding away. Will "Cape Breton Report" fall victim to the cutter? Stay tuned, honourable senators, you may never hear from us again. But, against that possibility, I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate and all the power brokers who sit around him to plead with Erik to spare "Cape Breton Report."

The list of cutbacks goes on and on. The problem is that too many employees are being kept in the dark. This government not only refuses to tell the public—they will not even tell one another. In some cases, the ministers themselves do not want to know; they are afraid they will talk in their sleep. And, of course, Erik hears all.

I have already congratulated the government party on its massive victory. Numerically, the Conservative Party has strong representation in every part of Canada. In our system of democracy it is good once in a while to change governments, to give others the opportunity to bring new ideas and new visions to the levers of power and authority.

But the election is over, and this government must remember it was given an unprecedented mandate—a massive responsibility—to look after the needs of every region and every constituency in the country, regardless of its location and regardless of how its people voted in the democratic process. So, please do not try to settle old political scores on the backs of the poor regions of the country.

I wish to speak briefly of the Cape Breton Development Corporation and the confusion which currently surrounds the future of the Industrial Development Division. Rumours are rampant that the Industrial Development Division will be scrapped. We are given to understand that a review is now under way both with respect to its record and its potential for the future.

I recall when Devco was first established. Its chief architect, Senator MacEachen, is in this chamber today. Because Hawker-Siddeley had given notice that the company was about to abandon the coal mines in Cape Breton, it was decided that a government agency had to be established to operate and eventually phase out those operations. For many reasons, too numerous to mention, that phasing-out did not occur—happily so. It was also determined that an Industrial Development Division should be established to help broaden the economic base in the region. At this time it is most important to remember that the Industrial Development Division was not intended to replace any existing programs, any existing departments or agencies, either at the provincial or the federal levels. It was established to supplement and complement those existing programs because of the fragile economic situation which has scarred Cape Breton for so many years.

It is difficult to measure accurately the success and/or the failures of the Industrial Development Division. However, I believe it is safe to say that without it, the economic situation in Cape Breton would be much worse than it is at present. At the very least, activities in the Industrial Development Division helped in many ways to maintain a reasonable standard of living for thousands of people in the area. With new technology being developed in coal, it would be advantageous to have an Industrial Development Division close at hand—not remote in some other part of the country—to take advantage of those new industrial job opportunities which it is hoped will be created in the not too distant future. A new government and new management may wish to take new directions. That is their right. However, it is my hope that it will be with a strengthened Industrial Development Division.

Last May, the Government of Canada through the then Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. MacEachen, unveiled a comprehensive package of federal government initiatives for Devco's coal division. Included in the measures was over $300 million in new capital investment which was expected to create between 2,500 and 2,700 person years of employment in construction and mine development over the next three years, and over 900 permanent jobs after that. Heading the list of capital projects was the Langan-Phalen mine project and a related expansion of the Victoria Junction coal preparation plant. By bringing on additional coal production capability, Mr. MacEachen said at the time, "The federal government is supporting Nova Scotia's off-oil program." He also announced that the government was providing $24 million for the completion late this year of the exploratory tunnel for the proposed Donkin-Morien colliery. I understand that program is on target. The third capital project is the Prince Mine coal preparation plant and an associated railway loading station.

Honourable senators, the intent of the measures is self-evident—to guarantee the economic viability of the coal industry, to stabilize the economic base in that part of Canada and to do much to relieve the dependency on foreign oil.

Because of the loss of over 1,000 jobs as a result of the fire in No. 26 colliery last April, discussions have been taking place with respect to the possibility of re-opening the old No. 1-B colliery in Glace Bay. If studies demonstrate that such a move would be both safe and economically advantageous, then I would ask the government for its support in that endeavour.

Just recently, installation of the most modern small blast furnace in North America was completed at the Sydney Steel Corporation. Phase I of the business plan is just about finished. Close to $100 million has been expended—80 per cent of that by Canada and 20 per cent by the Province of Nova Scotia. I understand that Premier Buchanan has settled on the technological direction that he wishes to take in Phase II. I also understand that Local 1064 of the United Steelworkers of America has also endorsed the proposal which may now be before the Government of Canada. I hope that senators on the government side of this house will assist in ensuring that that program is indeed developed and given the support of the government.

For almost 20 years, and perhaps longer, Sysco has posed a difficult problem. However, I am especially pleased with the accomplishment of the last three or four years. My hope is that solutions will result in a modern plant that will be able to compete favourably in international markets. I should note that, much to the credit of the work force and the management, Sysco is producing rails as fine as any produced in the world today.

However, when we talk of markets, it is important to note that Sysco is not able to compete with Algoma Steel for rail orders for CP tracks, tracks which in western Canada will, I understand, be eligible to receive substantial subsidies. I would like to read from an article in the The Chronicle-Herald, Halifax, dated November 1 of this year, five days before the provincial election in Nova Scotia. The headline is "Sysco to be CN's exclusive supplier". I shall read a paragraph:

Canadian National Railway has agreed to 'purchase exclusively' from the provincially-owned Sydney Steel plant, Solicitor General Elmer MacKay announced Wednesday.

Acting on behalf of Transport Minister Don Mazankowski, Mr. MacKay told reporters at Province House that CN has agreed to purchase all its rails and tie plates from Sysco until the federal government can convince Canadian Pacific Railway to place an order with the Sydney plant.

A prepared statement released by Sysco said CN has placed an immediate order for 20,000 tonnes of rail, valued at more than $12 million.

I do not know where that rail order is. I do not know whether it is on the books of Sysco at the present time. At the time, I congratulated the minister, Mr. MacKay, for doing something that I was unable to convince the government that I was supporting to do prior to September 4, and indeed I failed to convince officials at Canadian National Railway that they should encourage CP to move to open tender. It was my opinion that this was a great move in a positive direction. That was on November 1.

Then on November 2, there was another headline: "Sysco deal irks Kelleher" and I quote:

The decision of Canadian National Railways to purchase all its rails and tie-plates from the Sydney Steel Corp. (Sysco)—and not from Algoma Steel of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.—appears to have produced a split in the ranks of the federal cabinet.

International Trade Minister James Kelleher, MP for the steel-making city of Sault Ste. Marie, issued a curt, four-paragraph press release late last night here . . .

That would be in Ottawa—

—stating he is 'very concerned' about the CN announcement made Wednesday.

Mr. Kelleher announced the convening of a meeting for early next week with Transport Minister Don Mazankowski, Solicitor General Elmer MacKay and CNR officials 'to discuss the implications of the Sysco announcement on Algoma Steel'.

I understand that that meeting was held the day after the provincial election. Then, two days after the provincial election on November 8, there is another headline in The Chronicle-Herald, Halifax, which says: "Compromise reached on rail issue." And I quote:

A compromise agreement has been worked out to smooth the rift that developed last week between two federal cabinet ministers over the Canadian National rail contract awarded the Sydney Steel Corp. (Sysco). 'There was a bit of a misunderstanding but nobody will be hurt' Transport Minister Don Mazankowski told reporters last night after a meeting with two cabinet ministers and CN president Maurice LeClair.

In order to close the issue for today, I would like to quote from an editorial which appeared in the Cape Breton Post of November 13 of this year. It says, and I quote:

Federal solicitor-general Elmer MacKay owes the people of Cape Breton and Nova Scotia an explanation. He has been blatantly contradictory in two recent utterances about Sysco.

On Oct. 31, in the dying days of the provincial election campaign, Mr. MacKay enthusiastically announced that Canadian National had agreed to purchase its rails exclusively from the Sydney Steel Corporation until the federal government could convince Canadian Pacific to purchase some from Sysco. His reasoning? It's in the 'national interest' that both major railways purchase from both Sysco and Algoma of Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario. CP owns Algoma though, and places all of its orders there. Until CP changes its policy, CN would purchase from Sysco alone, balancing the situation, the Nova Scotia minister assured the public.

But on Nov. 8, two days after the provincial election, the same Mr. MacKay announced that it is now 'in the national interest' for CN to purchase rails from both Algoma and Sysco, regardless of what CP does.

In his first announcement, Mr. MacKay was guilty of either a gross mistake, or a shoddy political manipulation. Either way, he owes local citizens an explanation.

The Mulroney government is supposedly striving to be all things to all people, but the shine will soon wear through on the new regime if it repeats reversals like this one. The lives and hopes of steelworkers and other citizens are not to be played around with casually or insensitively.

Need I say more, except for one comment, honourable senators. If in the western rail expansion program CP is receiving significant funds from the federal government—the people of Canada—why does not CP call public tenders? In that respect, I would encourage the government to go back to Mr. MacKay's original thinking as enunciated in his public statement of November 1.

Honourable senators, around the world our embassy and consulate ties with some of our allies—in some areas, the smallest, the most indefensible—are being cut. It must be a strange world we live in when we are told that children, even before they reach the age of reason, are terrified by thoughts of war, and are knowledgeable of the horrors of poverty and starvation. It is all the more mind-boggling when we realize that we have produced all of the destructive powers of war essentially within the last 100 years. No one can be sure whether it is happenstance, coincidence, a plan or a conspiracy that finds our world so volatile at the present time. When we look at some of the problems: the mid-East, Central America, the continuing war in southeast Asia, the on-going struggle between the communities in Northern Ireland, the confrontations in Africa and the incredible tensions between East and West, it is very difficult to find a truly safe haven in a very troubled world. Everywhere there is the threat to world peace, and the difference is only in degree.

When we look at all of these problems, there is one element that is common among all others: the common thread that holds true throughout is the poverty of the people. For all man's great abilities to develop destructive forces, how anæmic are our efforts to develop a world of peace. I am equating peace with development; with the concept of ridding the world of poverty. How difficult it is for us to understand that we contribute to war and destruction when we placidly accept the exploitation of third world countries that provide us with so many of our luxuries.

One always looks at the war-like cacaphony. One never knows whether it is the increase in the price of oil that causes the militarism, or the militarism that causes the increase in the price of oil. The great difficulty that we have in dealing with the north-south problem; the developed versus the under-developed; the "haves" versus the "have-nots" is always compromised when it is we who have, when it is we who must give up if these people are to be released from poverty and have a measure of freedom restored to them.

● (1530)

One has only to look at the desperate poverty of the Philippines, Southeast Asia, the Middle East, Central America or Africa to be convinced that in the midst of this oppression and exploitation there can be little hope for peace. And yet we must not be tied to a depression that makes it impossible for us to react.

If we are going to pursue peace in the world, we must begin by understanding something of the complexity of the problem. We also have to be convinced that, as long as people are kept in poverty, there will be conflict. And while we must defend ourselves and help defend others, we must be convinced that we cannot truly make peace while we prepare for war.

Those of us who live in the so-called free and developed world must continue to go to others to share with them some of the rewards of our development. What a treasure of information the people of those countries can be. We must realize how important it is for us to communicate with them, to learn of their problems, their economic difficulties, but also to hear their culture and potential contribution to a better world. That is why it makes me so sad to see some of these embassies and consulates being cut in terms of our relationships with some of the most disadvantaged areas of the world.

Honourable senators, much is said about this place, its work and its possibilities. I have taken a special interest in the most impoverished areas of the world and, indeed, in the most disadvantaged regions of our country. We have the chance to be constructive and to create our own visions and our own opportunities to help others. That is the challenge which faces all of us today. I look forward to working with honourable senators in the days ahead.

Hon. Martha P. Bielish: Honourable senators, it is an honour for me to participate in this debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I join with my colleagues in congratulating our Speaker, the Honourable Guy Charbonneau, and through the Speaker, the Speaker pro tempore, the Honourable Martial Asselin, on their respective appointments.

To the Leader of the Government in the Senate, the Honourable Duff Roblin, to the Deputy Leader in the Senate, the Honourable Senator Doody, and to the Government Whip, the Honourable Senator Phillips, I offer congratulations and thanks for accepting their respective positions, along with their accompanying responsibilities.

I should like to extend a warm welcome to the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen. I wish him many happy years in that position. I regret that he is not in the chamber now because I was going to remind him of the first time I met him many years ago.

My sincere thanks and appreciation for their kindnesses, understanding and exemplary leadership go to the Honourable Jacques Flynn and the Honourable John M. Macdonald.

At this point I should say that I would like to have the eloquence of Senator Macquarrie, the wit and humour of Senator Doody, and the parliamentary experience of Senator Tremblay; however, I do not have those attributes, so you will have to bear with me.

The First Session of the Thirty-third Parliament was opened by Her Excellency, the Governor General, Madame Jeanne Sauvé. That marked the first time a woman appointed to that office, the highest office in the land, represented the reigning monarch, Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II on such an occasion. Across the nation there was cause for rejoicing as another milestone in the quest for equality for women was reached.

On that same day, 27 women took their places in the other place, almost double the number that were there at dissolution. Of that number, 19 were in the government and six of them were appointed to cabinet positions. Others were appointed parliamentary secretaries. Surely, another milestone had been reached to the combined credit of the women themselves, in the first instance, and the Prime Minister who made the appointments, thus ensuring that social justice keeps pace with the changing needs and circumstances of women in the political field and their rightful claim to equality with men.

Lest I forget, I do want to welcome all new honourable senators who have joined us in this new Parliament, and especially my two colleagues from Alberta, Senator Joyce Fairbairn and Senator Daniel Hays, with whom I hope to consult on matters of common regional interest.

Alberta, a magnificent province with every natural feature except an ocean, is made up of 14 tourism zones. Lakeland, my designation in the Senate, is the largest of those and is situated in the northeastern part of the province, stretching from the Northwest Territories on the north to the city of Lloydminster on the Saskatchewan border to the east, thence in a northwesterly direction almost to the Edmonton city limits, then north and east until it reaches the Northwest Territories again.

In the northern reaches is Wood Buffalo National Park. That is home to the largest herd of buffalo in the world, and nesting grounds for the near extinct whooping crane.

Fort McMurray, the home of the world-famous tar sands, the world's largest-known oil deposits, is also located there. Further south, we come to beautiful lakes and rolling parkland, and Grand Centre, where a Canadian Forces air base is situated. Cold Lake and Redwater are other oil fields in that region.

St. Paul, an agricultural area, and Smoky Lake County, where the largest tree nursery in Canada is situated, and from which 60 million seedlings are lifted each year and taken to be planted in the various forest areas, are also located in this area. The balance of the Lakeland tourist area consists of land utilized for mixed farming.

The population is composed of several Indian reservations, a Métis colony, and people from different parts of the world. It is unique in that St. Paul, often called the French capital of Alberta, has a Ukrainian as its mayor while, conversely, Smoky Lake, basically Ukrainian, has a French Canadian for its mayor. So, you can see that people from diverse roots live in quiet communities and in harmony. This basically gives you the background.

My home is on a farm near the village of Warspite within the boundary of Lakeland. A Women's Institute organized in the district in 1921 is still flourishing and provides rural women and homemakers with opportunities for leadership and exchange of ideas. Members are volunteers, often the sole providers of their community's recreation, adult education and many other services. Women's Institutes are found in every province of Canada, with one umbrella organization at the national level. At the international level they become societies of the Associated Country Women of the World.

In the Speech from the Throne renewed Canadian internationalism is mentioned. I should now like to follow through on an example pertaining to that subject. In 1977 the international organization known as the Association of Country Women in the World held their conference in Nairobi, Kenya. Canadian women visited homes of rural Kenyan women. They observed Kenyan women carrying containers of water strapped to their shoulders and to their heads. A rural woman's day in Kenya consists of spending at least five to seven hours searching for water.

Following this visit to Kenya, Canadian women endeavoured to do something for women in those rural areas. They started a project called "Wish a well for Kenya." The women of this association collected $4,000 through their wishing wells and then went to the provincial government and their international agency matched them dollar for dollar. They went to the national organization which turned to CIDA and got it matched three-to-one. The women from Kenya also asked their government to match the money that they received from Canada, shilling for shilling, and it was matched. Out of that project, 13 villages had water piped in, serving over several thousand people. There are many such projects but this particular one was publicized in UNICEF and UNESCO papers, and in many other UN periodicals. That is an example of where rural women are doing a tremendous job in international relations and goodwill.

In the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the Minister of Agriculture, the Honourable John Wise at page 317 of the House of Commons Debates said the following about the Canadian agriculture industry:

It is an industry with retail sales of nearly $60 billion, an industry that exported about $10 billion worth of products and generated a trade surplus of about $4.3 billion in 1983.

It is an industry that directly employs some 1.4 million Canadians and accounts for almost three million jobs, if one counts all the services used by primary producers and all the services used by processors, distributors, and indeed retailers from coast to coast.

Food has always been so plentiful and cheap in this country that many Canadians overlook the fact that our agri-food industry is a big business. Many people are not aware of the fact that it is a big business that, I regret to say, faces some very big and serious problems. These problems include low and declining farm incomes, stiff competition in export markets, and soil degradation.

The agricultural industry could be a wonderful industry but it is facing many problems.

The year 1985 is the culmination of the decade for women. An assessment is being made of the countries that were signatories to the convention on the elimination of discrimination against women and how they have progressed. In developing countries it is obvious that rural women are at the bottom of the ladder. Rural women and homemakers in Canada may be better off in comparison to those in many countries, but in our own country they are the last ones to be considered.

Why am I saying this to you today? Because the majority of the population of this nation is urban and many urban people do not have the opportunity or the inclination to learn about agriculture and their own food supply. As we travel and meet people from different countries we try to build bridges of understanding. Today I am throwing out a net, a lifeline, to people in the urban areas to ask them to make themselves acquainted with the situation of rural people and the agricultural industry. I believe this is something we must do. We, in this chamber, have, I could easily say, a majority of people who are urban, and it is to them that I look for understanding and support.

• (1550)

The Senate Agriculture Committee report, "Soil at Risk," which was tabled in this chamber on November 6, will give us more opportunity to debate and discuss this issue. My hope is that we take heed of time, especially when we know what is happening in Africa and in many other parts of the world. My plea is for the agricultural industry, the farming community and the rural people who live there.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator Cools, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lafond, seconded by the Honourable Senator Thompson:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to hear evidence on and to consider matters relating to national defence;

That 12 Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the Special Committee;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada, and to such places abroad where members of the Canadian Armed Forces may be stationed;

That the Committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate;

That the Committee be empowered to retain the services of professional and clerical staff as deemed advisable by the Committee; and

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject before the Committee during the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the Committee.—(Honourable Senator Marshall).

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I yield to Senator Lafond who originally proposed the motion.

Hon. Paul C. Lafond: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I have to inform the Senate that, if Senator Lafond speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion.

Senator Lafond: Honourable senators, I have taken note of the observations and reservations of Senator Frith and have no further comment to add.

Motion agreed to.

HUMAN RIGHTS

EXPRESSION OF SYMPATHY TO PRIMATE OF POLAND

Hon. Stanley Haidasz, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, November 21, 1984, moved:

That the Senate of Canada express to the Primate of Poland its deep sympathy on the recent brutal murder in Poland of a patriot-priest, Reverend Jerzy Popieluszko, which has shocked the conscience of the world; and

That the Senate of Canada, condemning this act of violence, call upon signatory countries to defend human rights, pursue justice, and ensure respect for freedom of speech and association, in compliance with the provisions of the Helsinki Final Act.

He said: Honourable senators, although I believe this motion standing in my name is both clear and succinct, I also believe its subject matter is of a grave nature and of critical importance, warranting some remarks from me as its proposer.

Canada, as a signatory state of the Helsinki Final Act of 1975 and as the strongest proponent of the part dealing with human rights issues, has both a vital interest in and a duty to express its concern about the violations of the agreement and about the need for the full implementation of its provisions.

Furthermore, since the signing by states of the Helsinki Agreement, the raising of such issues can no longer be considered an internal affair; indeed, there are times when specific protest is both justified and necessary, as silence in such matters may be regarded as neglect or indifference.

It is hoped that these concerns will be thoroughly discussed at the forthcoming special meeting of experts on human rights to be held next May in Ottawa, as proposed three years ago at the Madrid review meeting by Canada's then Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Honourable Mark MacGuigan.

Last week, we learned of a series of very disturbing events in Poland. There was the news of the banning of the activities of the human rights monitoring groups in Poland. Then came the news that West Germany's foreign minister had cancelled his official visit to Warsaw only four hours before his intended departure, giving as one of the reasons for that cancellation a public warning from Warsaw that he should not visit the grave of the murdered patriot-priest, the Reverend Father Jerzy Popieluszko. Then, just last Sunday, there was the sermon at the church of the late Father Popieluszko describing Polish society as being paralyzed with terror. And today we read that Cardinal Glemp, after conferring with Solidarity's leader, Lech Walesa, had flown to the Vatican to confer with Pope John Paul II.

Father Popieluszko was a staunch supporter of Solidarity, celebrating monthly masses for the Polish nation in his Warsaw parish church of St. Stanislaus Kostka.

Religion, patriotism and a tragic history fuelled a romantic fatalism that pervades the Polish character. Polish patriotism has been closely tied to religion ever since the baptism, in 966, of the nation's first ruler, King Mieszko I. During periods of foreign occupation, the Catholic Church kept the Polish language and culture alive and served as the main bastion of Polish nationalism.

Heroic sacrifices and grand gestures come naturally to the Poles who appear to have an alarming capacity for martyrdom. Reverend Father Popieluszko is the most recent of such martyrs. In times of national peril, inspiring their countrymen, he follows Polish patriot-priests like Skarga, Kordecki, Skorupka, Wyszynski, and, recently, Wojtyla, now Pope John Paul II, a foremost defender of human rights, whose visit to Canada last September was a great inspiration.

The Nobel Peace Prize laureate, Lech Walesa, stated at Father Popieluszko's funeral that a country with priests like him will stay alive. In a great tribute to the martyred priest, President Ronald Reagan stated that Father Popieluszko did more for freedom than those who live in freedom.

In concurring with these tributes and mourning this martyr for the principles enshrined in the Helsinki Final Act, I hope that honourable senators will approve my motion.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not intend to speak to the motion because I was much impressed by my honourable friend's eloquent statement; I merely seek some information because, in that part of his motion which calls for action, he says:

That the Senate of Canada, condemning this act of violence—

And this is the part I would like some clarification on.

—call upon signatory countries to defend human rights—

Exactly what did my honourable friend have in mind when he used the words "call upon"? Is it sufficient for us to express our opinion in this house or does he anticipate that some further action will be required?

• (1600)

Senator Haidasz: I do not foresee the need for any further action. As I mentioned in my previous remarks, in agreeing to this motion we simply call upon states signatory to the Helsinki Final Act to observe its provisions.

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend for his clarification of the matter. He is asking us to move this motion but he does not anticipate that further action will be required.

Motion agreed to.

YOUTH

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jacques Hébert, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, November 21, 1984, moved:

[Senator Haidasz.]

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to examine, consider and make recommendations on the problems and issues facing Canadian youth between 15 and 24 years of age;

That 12 Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the Special Committee;

That the Committee have power to report from time to time, to send for persons, papers and records, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada;

That the Committee have power to retain the services of professional, clerical and stenographic staff as deemed advisable by the Committee; and

That the Committee present its report no later than October 1, 1985.

He said: Honourable senators, today and since the beginning of the recession, Canadian youth and Canadians as a whole have been faced with serious problems. How we decide to approach and solve these problems will largely determine the kind of society we will pass on to the youth of this country.

At the present time, young people are worried about the lack of job and career opportunities. In fact, more than 17 per cent of young workers are unemployed. Discouraged by this situation, many commit acts that are anti-social and self-destructive. These problems arise at an important stage in their lives. When they are out of their teens and in their twenties, young people are usually finishing their education and entering the labour market. It is also a time when they leave home to live on their own. In many cases the normal transition from school to job, from being dependent to being independent, has been disrupted as a result of their precarious financial situation.

I think these are the main points to which the Special Senate Committee on Youth should address itself. It can continue the work started by its predecessor during the previous Parliament. Before giving a quick overview of the work done by the first committee on youth, I would like to elaborate on the problems and challenges facing young Canadians today.

The main problem, though not the only one, is obviously unemployment. Since the middle of the sixties, unemployment rates in all age groups have, generally speaking, increased. Young people have followed the general trend although they are now well above the national average. Between 1966 and today, the average national unemployment rate has risen from 3.4 per cent to 11.9 per cent, while the youth rate rose from 5.6 per cent to nearly 20 per cent.

The unemployment rate is even higher among young people who did not go beyond primary or secondary school. In many cases, young people who want to work full time are only able to find part-time jobs. Many young unemployed workers remain unemployed for periods of more than six months.

Many others are unable to find work commensurate to their education, training and professional aspirations.

The employment problems facing young Canadians today will become even worse as a result of technological change and competition on international markets.

[English]

Closely tied to the employment problems facing Canadian youth today is the educational and training system which has given them whatever skills they possess. More young Canadians are staying in school longer. Many young people question the quality and relevance of what they are being taught. The optimism many of them have developed in school is often undermined and, indeed, negated by their difficulties in finding that first job. Their education is often inadequate and unrelated to a working environment. Many young people have unrealistic career aspirations. There is a controversy among educators themselves as to the type of education and training they should be giving to young people.

Along with these educational and employment difficulties, young people are experiencing a number of social problems. It is essential that these issues be effectively addressed if young Canadians are to have confidence in and fully participate in the future of their country.

In recent years there has been a marked increase in anti-social and self-destructive activity among young Canadians. As an example, the 1981 suicide rate among the total population was less than twice that in 1961. The 1981 suicide rate among young people 15 to 19 years of age was five-and-a-half times that in 1961, and among those 20 to 24 years old it was three-and-a-half times that in 1961.

Although there has been an increase in criminal activity among adults in the last 20 years, it has gone up, on a proportionate basis, much more among young people. Between 1962 and 1981, the number of offences against the person alleged to have been committed by juveniles increased eight-fold, while the number of crimes against property alleged to have been committed by juveniles increased six-fold. This rate of growth in criminal activity exceeds that of the juvenile population itself by several times.

Young people today also appear to be facing a number of crises in values. They often feel poorly served by government and volunteer services. They believe that society's institutions are not adapted to their needs. Faced with job and career limitations, the arms race and major environmental problems, many young people react by being detached from political and social institutions, and by having little or no confidence in the future.

These difficult, inter-related problems and issues facing young Canadians, and indeed all Canadians, are not only of grave import to the future of this country but are very painful for those who have to live them.

It is most appropriate that this committee be set up in the spirit of the United Nations' International Youth Year, 1985, whose three themes are participation, development and peace. This committee would not only constitute part of Canada's participation in International Youth Year, but would continue the work of and fulfill the expectations built up by the Special Senate Committee on Youth in the last Parliament. I would like to describe briefly this work and these expectations.

The predecessor to the committee I am proposing today was established by a motion adopted unanimously by the Senate on April 10 of this year. Between the time of its creation and the dissolution of Parliament, the members of the committee considered the issues and problems facing Canadians of 15 to 24 years of age. The committee held a number of meetings at which it discussed these issues and was briefed by its staff from the Research Branch of the Library of Parliament. The committee's staff developed a research program and had a number of meetings with government officials dealing with different aspects of the problems of youth.

The committee placed advertisements in newspapers and periodicals throughout Canada in which it set out the issues it wished to address and invited submissions from interested groups and individuals. In addition, the committee sent out hundreds of letters to governments at all levels, to youth-serving organizations, schools, universities, teachers' associations, unions, student associations, social clubs and many others, including all the main organizations representing the different ethnic groups. These letters were accompanied by a short discussion paper entitled "Problems and Issues Facing Canadian Youth" which had been adopted by the committee. The discussion paper set out in some detail the issues upon which the committee invited submissions. These issues were (1) employment and changing labour market conditions; (2) education, training and career aspirations; (3) family and social issues; and (4) crisis in values.

In addition to these activities, the committee held an opening press conference in early June and a public hearing later that month, at which appeared the then Minister of State for Youth, Madame Céline Hervieux-Payette. At the press conference, the committee members described the issues they hoped to address, answered a number of questions from journalists and gave interviews to the media.

As a result of both its advertising and its letters, the committee has received 71 briefs and letters, 85 notices of forthcoming briefs and 91 requests to appear. The committee continued to receive submissions from groups and individuals even after it had legally ceased to exist with the dissolution of Parliament. It has continued to receive letters and briefs throughout the summer and fall. Hardly a day has passed that we have not received a communication of some sort.

Just a few days ago I received an important paper from a professor of the Faculty of Education at the University of British Columbia. He is under the impression, as are a great many prominent Canadians, that the Special Committee of the Senate on Youth still exists or can soon be revived. Let me quote from his letter:

I noted with interest the formation of the special committee of the Senate to examine the problems and issues facing Canadian youth. Clearly one of the important issues facing young people is in the area of jobs, careers and employment. On this topic, the enclosed paper may be of some use to the committee. It organizes and reviews the literature on the career development of adolescence from an ecological perspective. I would be pleased to be of further assistance to your committee on this topic.

I am absolutely sure that no honourable senator would suggest that I write to that professor at the University of British Columbia and say "Thank you very much; we do not need your paper, your ideas and your offer of assistance. Thank you, sir, but the Senate has other priorities now".

We have received briefs, letters and submissions from every part of Canada. They have come from provincial governments, universities, teachers, parents, youth-serving organizations, unions, ethnic groups, student associations, and from the young people themselves. The tone of those submissions is both serious and thoughtful. Life experiences are described, existing programs and activities are presented, and solutions are proposed.

The tenor of the communications we have received indicates both a confidence that the Senate is the place where the issues and problems affecting youth can be examined, and also an expectation that we will give them serious consideration leading to their resolution.

[Translation]

The solutions will not be easy to find, but they exist, I am sure. I am convinced that a special Senate committee would stimulate or continue to stimulate the imagination of many Canadians who, like us, are distressed by the public drama we are witnessing, Canadians who are awaiting an opportunity to express their views.

I do not have time to go into the details of the documents we have received. At least, I can tell you that I have been shocked by some of the testimony.

Among others, I have in mind the letter from a 57-year-old man from Toronto whose son of about 20 is a Ryerson Polytechnical Institute graduate totally unable to find a job and has to rely on his father to feed his own wife and son.

I have in mind the testimony of a young man who graduated in mechanical engineering two years ago. He crisscrossed the country seeking permanent employment in his field, but to no avail. He sent quite a few applications and was interviewed dozens of times, but without success. He finally managed to land a part-time job which has nothing to do with his training; such a situation is a horrendous waste of energy and know-how, not to mention the money invested to train that engineer. If we were in his shoes, we would be tempted, as he is, to lose confidence in such a spendthrift society.

In my opinion, therefore, it is imperative that my motion be adopted. Canadians expect the Senate to make that kind of inquiry which, in addition to its political impact, has a truly human perspective.

It is interesting to note that during the recent election campaign, the three major political parties stressed the seriousness of unemployment and the other problems with which young Canadians have to cope. Each one of them has advocated a policy or a program with minor variations, but they all acknowledge the urgent necessity to do something about it.

The motion aimed at establishing the first committee had been adopted by both sides of the chamber. During its short existence, it did operate on a non-partisan basis, as Senators Yuzyk and Tremblay would certainly confirm.

The causes of difficulties experienced by Canadian youths are deep-rooted and will certainly have dire consequences for the country and the public at large unless we immediately and resolutely come to grips with them. They will not vanish, nor will their solution drop from the sky. As senators, we are supposed to have the wisdom, ability and vigour required to examine them and come up with practical and realistic answers. The people who wrote to me and to the members of the first committee, and Canadians generally, expect us to live up to that challenge.

I realize that many senators are busy and concerned about other issues that are important for the future of our country. Still, I am also convinced that none of my colleagues will hesitate to endorse a motion which may not only bring hope to a generation just about ready to give up, but also enable the Senate to show once again that it can indeed tackle a major problem, consider it in depth and recommend sound and promising solutions.

Honourable senators, if I may conclude as I did last April—it must have been a good conclusion, followed as it was by the unanimous endorsement of the Senate—by creating this special committee on youth, the Senate, so widely discredited these days, will show that it can still be the conscience of Canada!

Thank you, honourable senators.

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF CLAUSES OF CERTAIN BILLS

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I am nothing if not persistent. I give notice that on Tuesday next, December 4, 1984, I will move:

That the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be authorized to examine the subject-matter of clauses of bills introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons, where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, infringe upon the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house thereof and to invite them to join with this house in the aforementioned action.

I originally moved that motion two and a half years ago. I hope that next Tuesday we shall finally be able to deal with it. It has already been fully debated.

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF CLAUSES OF CERTAIN BILLS

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, December 4, 1984, I will move:

That the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be authorized to examine the subject-matter of clauses of bills introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons, where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, bestow powers to make regulations upon a person or a rule-making authority which is couched in unnecessarily wide terms and contains the powers set forth in paragraph 2 of part 9 of the Cabinet directive on the preparation of legislation approved on 16th April, 1981, the said part 9 reading in part as follows:

"9. REGULATIONS

In the preparation of proposals for legislation, departments and agencies should observe the following principles respecting regulation-making powers:

(1) When bestowing the power to make regulations upon a person or a rule-making authority, care must be taken to ensure that the statute is not couched in unnecessarily wide terms.

(2) Specifically, certain powers are not to be granted unless the Memorandum to the Cabinet requesting the authority for preparation of the legislation by which such a power would be conferred specifically requests authority for the power and contains reasons justifying the power that is sought. These powers include the following:

- (a) power to make regulations that might substantially affect personal rights and liberties;
- (b) power to make regulations involving important matters of policy or principle;
- (c) power to amend or add to the enabling Act or other Acts by way of regulation;
- (d) power to make regulations excluding the ordinary jurisdiction of the Courts;
- (e) power to make specific regulations having a retrospective effect;
- (f) power to subdelegate regulation-making authority;
- (g) power by regulation to impose a charge on the public revenue or on the public other than fees for services;

(h) power to fix by regulation, rather than by the statute itself, the penalties for breach of a regulation." and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House thereof and to invite them to join with this House in the aforementioned action.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. At a recent meeting in Winnipeg the Minister of Finance told the Government of Manitoba that he would consider its request to extend equalization payments so that Manitoba would not lose the $72 million of equalization payments that it will lose if there is no change in the present policy. At the same time a memorandum from the Deputy Minister of Finance to the Minister of Finance stated that no compelling arguments have been advanced thus far to suggest that the minister should encourage Manitoba to believe such assistance is possible. Given that the Leader of the Government in the Senate also hails from Manitoba and that this shortfall would seriously affect the economy of the province of Manitoba, could he give us his views as to whether or not he believes the $72 million should be paid by the government?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have to tell my honourable friend that that is precisely what I cannot do, give my views. Obviously, the matter will be the subject of the cabinet and government policy making process. However, I can say that the problem arises because of legislation that my honourable friend supported, along with his other colleagues in the Liberal Party when legislation on the last set of equalization agreements was before the Senate and the bill was passed. So we can identify the cause of this regrettable circumstance whereby the Province of Manitoba feels that it has a grievance. It is a matter of long standing—several years at any rate—since this particular measure was put in train. Now, we see what the results have turned out to be, and we have to deal with it.

I cannot give any opinion on the matter, but I can give my friend some further information. Speaking publicly in Winnipeg the Minister of Finance said the matter could be and would be considered but it would have to be done in co-operation with all the other provinces which have an interest in equalization payments. That seems to indicate to me that we may expect the matter to receive further consideration, although what the outcome will be is impossible to prophesy.

[Senator Godfrey.]

Senator Everett: As I understand it, the memorandum which has now been made public states that there is no reason why the government should encourage the Province of Manitoba to believe that it will get any additional amount of money. I am mystified as to how one can come to the conclusion that the government is reviewing this matter when, in fact, the public information from the deputy minister is to the effect that no encouragement can be given to Manitoba in this regard.

Senator Roblin: I have already explained to my honourable friend that the minister has made a wider statement than that contained in the advice received from his deputy. Also, by no means does it follow that because a public servant—however well informed or highly placed he may be—offers advice to the minister that advice will be followed in every particular. Obviously this is one case where that does not apply.

Senator Everett: But that advice is now on the public record. Would the government leader consider tabling the advice that was given, which is now quite contrary to what the minister says, what the government leader says and what government policy purports to be?

Senator Roblin: Perhaps my honourable friend should take the trouble to peruse Hansard of the other place. I know how tiresome that can be.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Maybe we should not bother meeting here. Maybe we should gather and read House of Commons Debates.

● (1410)

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend would do himself justice and would fulfil his duty a little more effectively if he were to take the opportunity to inform himself of the information that is available. It is no good coming in here and asking for information that is already available.

Senator Frith: It is no good coming in here asking for it from you. You are right about that.

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend wishes to neglect his responsibility to inform himself then that is his problem.

Senator Frith: As a senator, I am entitled to an answer. I do not have to read the Hansard of the House of Commons before asking a question.

Senator Roblin: I tell him where he can find the answer and he can take the trouble and exercise the patience to go and look it up for himself. That is what he is going to have to do.

Senator Frith: As a senator, I am entitled to come here and obtain the information, and that is the case with all senators. We do not have to read Hansard of the House of Commons first.

Senator Roblin: You are going to have to take advantage of the information that is in the public domain. You need not expect me to repeat that information here, because I am just not going to do it. I am under no obligation to do it.

Senator Frith: Until the government changes.

Senator Roblin: When you had a majority like you had in the old house—

Senator Frith: But we never said, “Go read Hansard for the House of Commons”, for crying out loud!

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend were to restrain his bursts of petulance here then we could get back to the question asked by my colleague, the honourable senator from Manitoba. I must say that as a result of this little interchange I have quite forgotten the point my honourable friend was making. Would he care to ask his question again?

Senator Frith: The answer is probably in Hansard of the other place, anyway.

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, I would like to depart from my point for a moment. I have indeed read House of Commons Debates on this matter. My questions arise out of the fact that I do not fully understand the issue, and I seek more information from the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am mystified—I really cannot understand how the Leader of the Government in the Senate can say, “My job is not to supply information which is already in the public domain.” It seems to me all that is doing is devaluing the Senate both in the eyes of the Senate and the eyes of other people.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Everett: Surely to goodness, the conduit we have—in fact, the only conduit we have—to the government is through the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Thus, we ask him questions. If we ask the precise question which was asked in the House of Commons then, perhaps, he could say that that precise question was answered and that the reply he might give is on all fours. However, we are not asking the precise question; we are asking for an enlargement on an issue today that, yes, has been taken up in the House of Commons. Who else do we have to go to? Does the Honourable Leader of the Government say that everything happens in the House of Commons and that there is nothing worthwhile in this chamber?

An Hon. Senator: Shame!

Senator Everett: Does he say that he does not answer for anything? When something does come up does he say, “Check and see what has happened in the House of Commons. Check and see what was said there”? No, I really do not think that is the way things work.

Surely to goodness, the Leader of the Government in the Senate is here to answer reasonable questions and to enunciate government policy when asked to do so. I remain totally mystified as to why the honourable gentleman is taking the attitude he is taking. I ask him if he would not reconsider and answer the questions which have been asked of him as though they were asked here for the first time.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I certainly know that applause was not for me.

Senator Frith: It depends on what you have to say.

Senator Roblin: I will say to my honourable friend that since he is such an eloquent advocate I will give him a direct answer to the question he put to me even though it has already been given in the House of Commons. That answer is: “No.”

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question I should like to ask of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I will not ask any question that is a repetition of those which have been so ably put by my colleague from Manitoba. However, I would like to ask a somewhat different question. I recall last year, some time during the study of the estimates before the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, the honourable senator who is now Leader of the Government in the Senate making his views publicly known as to where he stood with respect to the so-called $72 million shortfall. My question to him is very short and direct: Has he changed his views since the last time he attended a meeting of the Committee on National Finance and made the point on behalf of the Province of Manitoba?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has been in cabinet himself and he understands the limitations that are placed on cabinet ministers. For example, he might say to me that I have been advocating an elected Senate while I was a private member, and that is the case. However, I am not able to do so now unless I can carry the support of my colleagues in the cabinet. It applies to all issues.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I am at a loss to understand how the Leader of the Government in the Senate expects to get away with answers of that kind, day after day. I did not ask him for his views on an elected or an appointed Senate. I think that, right now, he is quite happy that he was appointed. Perhaps he has changed his views on that, also, but I know what his views were. I am simply asking him whether he has changed those views since last summer.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: An agonizing re-appraisal.

Senator Roblin: No, it is not agonizing at all. I simply point out that my honourable friend is again asking me for an opinion, and he knows that that is not appropriate for an oral question period in this chamber or in any other. As to what my views are on this matter, perhaps he should wait and see what the policy of the government turns out to be.

Senator Frith: We shall have to read about it in House of Commons Hansard; no point in asking for it here.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, again I hope that other honourable senators who know more about the rules of this house than I do will be able to prevail upon the Leader of the Government in the Senate to at least change his mind, if he has one, about how he intends to answer questions in the Senate.

Senator Perrault: He comes from Stonewall, Manitoba.

Senator Roblin: No, my honourable colleague sitting in the back row comes from a place that is pretty close to Stonewall, Manitoba, and I think he might agree with me that it is a mighty fine place to come from.

Let me say that I am doing my best. I know that I am not going to get any brownie points from my honourable friend who just spoke. I know that I am not going to satisfy the inquisitive interrogations of the members opposite, but frankly, I intend to do my best to answer questions to the best of my ability and within the limits of my office.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question, following in the footsteps of the previous questioners. My question is to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In view of the fortuitous and timely revelation of incipient transfer payment cuts to the Province of Manitoba, and the very grave concern this covert planning exercise on the part of the Minister of Finance has raised in the hearts and minds of every dedicated premier of every province in Canada, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us what is in store for my own province of New Brunswick, which has already scraped its budget to the bone?

Senator Roblin: I cannot really agree with the premise of the question. However, I can attempt to give an answer, and that is an answer which is contained in the Statutes of Canada which the government supported by my honourable friend is responsible for passing. If he would care to take a look at that statute, he would find there the formula for the calculation of equalization payments to the Province of New Brunswick.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary. Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate be prepared to go so far as to say that Premier Richard Hatfield and his Minister of Finance could sleep restfully between now and Valentine's Day, and that the only real target in this exercise is the socialist government of the province of Manitoba?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, if the target of the exercise is the socialist government of the province of Manitoba, then it is my honourable friend and his colleagues who loaded the gun and took aim. It is their bill; it is not ours. We were not in charge of this bill when it was put through. Therefore if my honourable friend is concerned about the application of the bill, he should examine his own record.

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, I believe I heard the Leader of the Government in the Senate state that he was not allowed to give an opinion on certain matters.

Senator Perrault: He is just following orders.

Senator Everett: I refer him to rule 20, subsection (1)(a) which reads as follows:

the Leader of the Government in the Senate (may reply) if it is a question relating to public affairs

I do not see anything in our rules or in practice that states that an answer must relate to an enunciation of government policy.

Given that the Leader of the Government in the Senate is not prepared to enunciate government policy, if one takes into account everything that he has said in the last three or four sittings in this chamber, can he tell me why he has not been prepared to give his opinion on certain matters? It would be valued by the Senate.

● (1420)

Senator Roblin: I can tell my honourable friend that it is difficult for me to separate my private opinions from my opinions on government policy. As he well knows, I am more than eager to give my personal opinion on things, but that is not possible, bearing in mind my present position. Therefore, my opinions must be consonant with those of my colleagues in cabinet, and I cannot go beyond that.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question resulting from the answer given to the Honourable Senator Corbin's question and an answer given in another context.

Do I understand that the Leader of the Government is saying that what Mr. Wilson was being advised to do—namely, not to encourage Manitoba to expect these transfer payments—was something that was provided for by a law that was passed by the Parliament of Canada at which time the Liberal Party was in government, and that the answer to the question is in the law? What was the Minister of Finance talking about, then, breaking the law?

Surely the answer cannot be in the statutes; if the answer were in the statutes, Mr. Wilson would have had no room to talk about it at all. So, it is one or the other; he cannot have it both ways. Either it is the law, in which case Mr. Wilson and Mr. Cohen should not be talking about breaking it, or it is not the law, in which case it is proper to ask what the government's policy is.

Senator Roblin: Of course, I can have it both ways, because that is the way it is.

Senator Frith: You can have it both ways, but most people could not.

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend would give me the courtesy of a few moments of silence I might express my opinion, or at least give him my interpretation of what he is telling me, even though I know very well that I am not going to convince him that I am right.

The fact is that there is a law, and that law provides the ways and means by which equalization payments are calculated. It is the implementation of that law—which my honourable friend shares some responsibility for—that gives rise to the problem with which the Province of Manitoba finds itself faced. The minister has suggested to the people of Manitoba—this was a public statement; it was not done in any hole in the corner—that he would be willing to examine the situation in the context of the federal-provincial financial arrangements. That implies that if something is to happen a change will have to be made to the law. Certainly, that cannot be done without changing the law. I think that that point should be registered.

Senator Frith: In fact, it is a formula that deals with forecasts and, therefore, it is not absolutely four-square covered by the law. So the question is a proper one and is not properly answered by saying, "It's in the law."

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Roblin: The question has been properly answered because the formula by which the equalization payments are calculated has to do with figures, which cannot be in the law because they have to be gathered together afterwards; but the figures are calculated and are made known to the public, as happened in this case, and we know what they are supposed to be. These figures depend not upon themselves for a life of their own, but they are in conformity with the law. Therefore, my position is not so off base as my honourable friend likes to contend.

Senator Frith: It is off base. Maybe not that much, but enough.

Hon. Michael Kirby: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate with respect to the comments he has just made regarding the equalization formula. If you check the act, I think you will find that the facts are as follows: First of all, when the act was amended three years ago the amount of money provided to the Province of Manitoba under the new equalization formula resulted in a decrease of equalization payments to that province. As a result, a special transition formula was negotiated between the federal government and the Government of Manitoba to ease that transition period. That transition payment expired at the end of the last fiscal year. Therefore, the issue before Parliament and before the government is not one of law, but is one of whether or not the present government is prepared to do as the previous government did—that is, make a transition payment to the Government of Manitoba in the order of $72 million in order to ease this transition period to the new formula.

To follow up on the question asked by Senator Frith, it seems to me that this is clearly a matter of government policy; it is not a matter of law. It is a matter of active federal-provincial negotiation and not an issue which has been completely resolved, and therefore it is clearly a legitimate issue to be debated in a body such as this which is supposed to deal with regional issues.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Roblin: I thank my honourable friend because, to the best of my knowledge at the moment, I think he is substantially correct. The law has been implemented as far as that law goes, and the question as to what shall follow it is obviously on the table. I think that is the impression I got from my honourable friend.

This whole exchange illustrates the curious nature of Question Period in the Senate, because this matter certainly would be the subject of a spirited debate if my honourable friends opposite put a motion to that effect so that the matter could be dealt with at some length. Obviously, Question Period is really not a very good way of settling anything.

Senator Frith: It is a way to get answers.

THE ECONOMY

TAXATION AND UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I rise, in particular, following his admonition to us to do our homework, and I am sure that he has done his. The annual report of the Economic Council of Canada is a matter of public record and was available to all of us to study last evening. Its title is "Steering the Course," which I think is a very apt one. It is in juxtaposition, if I may recall this to my honourable friend, to the title of last year's annual report, which was "On the Mend." This report states that it is not enough to look at expenditures; you must raise taxes if you are going to attack the deficit.

My question is: Why have we not heard something about the increases in taxes that are necessary instead of just looking at the programs that are in effect?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think I can vouch for the fact that my honourable friend was up early this morning. Knowing him, he probably read the report before breakfast. I think that the point is well worth making here. I do not know what the budgetary policy of the government will be when the budget is presented to the people. I do know that between now and budget day there is going to be a wide-ranging series of consultations both with the finance ministers of the provinces and with the public generally, including all the important actors on the stage. I am morally certain that the question of taxation will be one that will be raised. What the government's policy will be, of course, is something that I am unable to forecast at the moment. I am afraid that we shall have to wait until those conversations with the people of Canada have reached some conclusion, at which time we may expect the government to announce its policy.

Senator Sinclair: I have a supplementary question. Another item that I noted in the annual review of the Economic Council of Canada was that the primary problem that must be addressed and given priority is unemployment and not deficit reduction. If that is so, what is the response of the government to that advice that they got from the Economic Council of Canada?

Senator Roblin: I think it is pretty good advice. I believe that the problem of unemployment and the problem of deficits really go together because the thrust of the government's policy in getting its fiscal regime under control is to make room for the development of the economy, which means more jobs. I do not think that the two issues are mutually exclusive. I think that they cannot be separated one from the other, and to that extent I agree with my honourable friend.

Senator Sinclair: I have a further supplementary. My difficulty with the answer given by my honourable friend is that priorities have to be given and that everyone who looks at the problem must realize that unemployment has to be attacked first. You cannot leave it to cutting deficits by increasing revenues. You have to attack it now.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: Of course, I agree with my honourable friend. I do not think you can leave it either. I know that the government has the intention of bringing down new policies quite soon with respect to job creation and dealing with the problem of unemployment. My information is, and I stand to be corrected, that these measures will be announced long before any budget is produced.

• (1430)

Hon. Michael Kirby: I have a supplementary question. In response to the questions from Senator Sinclair, the Leader of the Government in the Senate said two things: first, that there would be an extensive period of consultation with the people of Canada about proposed tax changes; and, second, that measures would be forthcoming some time in the future to deal with the unemployment question.

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate inform us if that is the sequence of the events the government is undertaking. Before any of these consultations have been started, let alone completed, and therefore before any tax changes have been made, why is it that the government is attempting to get all the revenue it can from the people of Canada who can least afford it? I refer specifically to the approximately 350 people whom the Minister of National Revenue has recently hired in order to track down what he calls "income tax cheaters." I also refer to the 700 people whom the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced yesterday she had hired to catch what she called "unemployment insurance cheaters."

I point out that these two actions are coming from a party which, two years ago, strongly criticized the government for attempting to do income tax audits on, for example, low-income fishermen.

My question is: In light of the fact that the government is quite prepared to go slowly on the question of taxation changes—presumably tax changes which include such things as the minimum tax which would be vigorously opposed by large numbers of that party's supporters—would the Leader of the Government care to say whether they will be prepared to go equally slowly on collecting funds from, for example, those disadvantaged Canadians who are receiving UIC benefits and those disadvantaged Canadians who are having trouble with the income tax department.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: Of course, the honourable senator knows the answer before I stand up. The answer is that anyone who has a just, fair and equitable claim, either under the income tax law or under the Unemployment Insurance Act, will receive just, fair and equitable treatment.

Senator Kirby: As a further supplementary, it seems to me the issue—using the Leader of the Government's own words—is what constitutes "just, fair and equitable" taxation treatment. I think the question which Senator Sinclair and I have been trying to raise with the Leader of the Government is simply this: In our view, just, fair and equitable require that there be some significant changes in the current taxation scheme, particularly with regard to such areas as minimum tax and some of the existing tax loopholes. The question we are asking the leader is: Why do the words "just, fair and equitable" apply to one group of Canadians and not to another?

Senator Roblin: Of course, these mini-debates we conduct under the guise of Question Period—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I am sure the honourable gentleman recalls conducting some himself.

Senator Roblin: —are rather unsatisfactory in terms of coming to grips with the problem. I am not disposed to extend the area of argument my honourable friend has raised.

If he is just a little patient, he will see that these questions of tax fairness, equity and policy, or the advisability of the taxes we have now as opposed to some other groups, are on the agenda and will be addressed. I know that he is too experienced in the ways of government to expect that these things can be resolved quickly because, as we have learned from the experience of my honourable friend opposite—and I do not attach any blame to him for this; I just state it as a fact—when you are dealing with taxation changes, there are unexpected and undissipated fall-outs that are guarded against by adequate consultation.

I would tell my honourable friend that I do not think he and I are on a different wavelength; I am simply saying that he will have to be patient while we work these problems out.

Senator Kirby: As a supplementary—

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has already had three, and that is enough.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, on a point of order, the point at which questions will finish is a decision that will be made by honourable senators. They can be directed to the Leader of the Government and he can refuse to answer them, but he cannot say how many will be asked.

Senator Roblin: I have to tell my honourable friend that he is right, and I withdraw my remark.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: You may pose your supplementary question.

Senator Kirby: Thank you, Your Honour.

My final supplementary simply relates to the fact that the Economic Council of Canada report, to which Senator Sinclair referred, also makes it very clear that the tax burden on average Canadians and, indeed, in particular, on upper-income Canadians is substantially less than it is in most other OECD countries. In fact, the Economic Council of Canada report makes it clear that Canada is fourteenth among 17 OECD nations in terms of the tax burden it imposes on wealthy Canadians. I urge the government leader in the Senate, in light of his own and his government's determination to do everything it can to extract every penny it can from low-income Canadians, to start now to do exactly the same thing to upper-income Canadians. There is no need to wait until next April when the new budget comes down to begin that task.

THE CABINET

RESPONSIBILITIES OF LEADER OF GOVERNMENT IN THE SENATE

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I direct my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Twice today, in dealing with questions put to him, he has relied upon a distinction between his private or personal opinion and the opinion or view of the government. We are all aware that the government leader in the Senate is a great authority on the Constitution. I am certain that he would not want to mislead anyone who might happen to read the Debates of the Senate, but surely the truth of the matter is that he cannot, while he remains a member of the government, make a distinction between his private opinion and the opinion of the government. As long as he is a member of the government, he has no opinion other than that which he accepts under the doctrine of collective responsibility.

My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is this: Will he not now rise and state his understanding of the principle of collective responsibility? Will he not abjure this notion that he can enjoy the luxury of having private or personal opinions which, by implication, are different from unpopular policies of the government? Will he not now renounce that position publicly and on the record?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think that my friend has expressed the point precisely. I have to admit that he is completely correct. I have been tempted—indeed, I have been urged by some other honourable senators—to have a private opinion. Although I have been tempted to think that that might be possible, I realize, from what my honourable friend has said, that such is not the case. I accept his definition of constitutional responsibility.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Will you accept also that you will give us the government position? That is the problem.

STATUS OF WOMEN

EQUAL PAY FOR WORK OF EQUAL VALUE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. When speaking on the Throne Speech debate last Tuesday, I asked whether the government intends to implement Mr. Mulroney's commitment of August 15 last to ensure that equal pay for work of equal value will be achieved not by grievance, as it currently is, but through uniform application of the principle to all employees falling under the federal governments' pay jurisdiction. I think that it was taken then as a rhetorical question.

Last Thursday, the Ottawa Citizen reported that the Treasury Board had asked for such an application of the equal pay rules. I have not been able to confirm the report of the Citizen. My question is: Is it true, as reported, that such instructions have been issued by the Treasury Board? If it is true, what system of evaluation will be used to apply the concept of equal pay for work of equal value? When will this work be completed? If it is not true, when will such instructions be issued?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall take the questions as though they were written and will provide written answers as soon as possible.

REFORM OF PARLIAMENT

PROPOSED JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate relates to parliamentary reform. I have observed that there is a proposal in the other place to establish a committee which will be a task force on reform. The terms of reference of that committee are, among other things, to examine practices of the House of Commons, "bearing in mind the balance between the respective constitutional responsibilities and roles of the House of Commons and the Government," which would include the legislative process. This proposed committee will deal with the relationship of the executive branch of Parliament to the legislative branch, of which the Senate is an important part—indeed, many here might say that it is the most important part.

An Hon. Senator: You're new!

Senator Hays: In addition, a precedent has been established in connection with committee studies of the question of reform, in that the committee previously appointed to study Senate reform was a joint committee.

In light of these factors, my question is: Has the government given consideration to the formation of a joint committee for purposes of studying the reform of Parliament? What is the government's position on the appropriateness of the work of such a proposed committee on parliamentary reform proceeding without the involvement of the Senate?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend's question touches a delicate spot, does it not? I say that because the House of Commons had a certain view with respect to the reform of this body. I have not forgotten that. I must tell him that the way in which the terms of reference are being interpreted is that the reforms are limited to those that would apply to the House of Commons itself and not to this body. Therefore on those grounds I believe there is not much likelihood of the Senate's being asked to contribute formally as part of the committee.

● (1440)

Senator Hays: The proposed terms of reference, as I tried to point out in my question, deal with the relationship between the legislative and executive branches of government. In light of that, I would appreciate the Leader of the Government's further comment; and also his comments on how he might see the Senate contributing to the work of that committee, particularly bearing in mind the expertise that exists in this chamber and that has been enriched by the work of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Reform of the Senate.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I do not have anything to add to the reply I gave to the first question, which covered the points raised in the honourable senator's second question, with the exception of my being asked what can the Senate do. If my honourable friend wishes to propose a motion on that subject, we might have the benefit of his views, and those of other honourable senators, with respect to the Senate's participation in the reform of the rules of the House of Commons.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PLACEMENT OF FORMER MINISTERIAL ASSISTANTS

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. As he knows, there is a regulation of the Treasury Board entitling those Canadians who have worked in a minister's office for more than three years to the privilege of becoming members of the federal Public Service without competition on a priority basis at the level of salary they were enjoying when working for ministers. That regulation of Treasury Board is still in force. For the information of the Leader of the Government, despite that regulation, the Public Service Commission has been instructed not to try to place former assistants who have worked in ministers' offices.

I have two questions for the Leader of the Government: First, can he advise how many former assistants to ministers there were prior to September 4, 1984, and how many former assistants, since the swearing in of the new government, have found a position within the federal Public Service? Second, can we have the Leader of the Government's assurance that the instructions given to the Public Service Commission, which were relayed to me by some of those who are suffering because of those instructions, will be withdrawn and that the persons affected will benefit from the rights to which they are entitled?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The honourable senator's question is not one that can be dealt with orally. I will therefore take it as a written question and will provide a written answer. It would be helpful, however, if the honourable senator would pinpoint the investigation by providing me with the names of those people about whom he is concerned.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

GOVERNMENT GUIDELINES FOR PUBLIC SERVANTS

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. I should like to return to the question of the Prime Minister's guidelines restricting information to the public. Concerning media access to information provided by public servants, I wish to raise an issue which concerns the prerogatives of the Senate. Can the Leader of the Government assure honourable senators that these government guidelines will not interfere with honourable senators who are seeking to carry out their constitutional duties and exercise their prerogatives as members of the Senate, and that public servants will not require the prior consent or approval of the government to provide senators with the information, advice and data necessary to enable them to fulfil their constitutional duties and responsibilities in connection with the work of this chamber and the committees of the Senate? I should like to receive that assurance because I consider that the government's attitude on this matter may constitute an interference with the prerogatives and duties of the Senate.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend has raised a question of considerable magnitude which I am unable to answer immediately. I will take the question as a written one and will provide him with a written answer.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

GARRISON DAM PROJECT

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate concerning the announcement made earlier regarding the Canadian embassy in the United States, with particular reference to the Garrison. The United States Ambassador, Mr. Paul Robinson, is often outspoken and what he says is not always meaningful, although I am hoping that what he said on this occasion is true. Can we take it from what the Ambassador said to the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce, that the Garrison project will not be built? Also, did the report of the Canadian Embassy of November 21 include the recommendations that were made by the joint committee of federal and provincial representatives to the United States Congress, as the Leader of the Government mentioned to me the other day?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have no means of validating or assessing the remarks of His Excellency, the Ambassador of the United States. He is a gentleman who speaks for himself, sometimes for the Government of the United States and sometimes not. I do not know what the situation is regarding this particular matter.

With respect to the honourable senator's second question, I believe my honourable friend has himself stated the position correctly, namely, that the note given to the Secretary of State in the United States contains the joint federal-provincial position on the Garrison project.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT

RESEARCH SCIENTISTS—TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I have a further question for the Leader of the Government. I do not require the names of those persons who have been given notice to leave their employment by the Minister of the Environment.

My question refers specifically to our qualified scientific researchers, a great many of whom have received notice to leave their employment. I would like to know whether it is true that such persons are being attracted to move to the United States. Let us consider the loss that will be sustained by Canada if such is the case. Perhaps the Leader of the Government will take this question as notice and provide an answer as soon as possible. I consider this an important matter, because not only are such persons losing their jobs but they are leaving Canada, possibly forever. They are being attracted to the United States after receiving notice of termination by the department.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will take the honourable senator's question as notice, as he suggests.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

PROPOSED PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the excellent question raised by Senator Hays concerning the participation of the Senate in the reform of the rules of the House of Commons prompts me to ask another question which may not cause the same delicate reaction on the part of the Leader of the Government as the one posed earlier. My question has to do with a statement contained in the Speech from the Throne which indicated that it is the intention of the Government to establish a special parliamentary committee to conduct an in-depth study of our international relations. At the time I thought it was a good way to utilize the expertise that exists in the Senate on international affairs.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Yours.

Senator MacEachen: Therefore I would ask the Leader of the Government whether it is the intention of the government to have that special parliamentary committee on international relations as a joint committee? If that decision has not yet been made, will he take this cause under his wing and convince his colleagues that the Senate would like to participate and has much to offer?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can tell my honourable friend that the proposition that the study should be by a joint parliamentary committee of the Senate and the House of Commons is one that is receiving consideration at the present time. I will let my honourable friend guess on which side of the argument my weight, for what it is worth, is being placed, but if I am successful I will expect him to congratulate me.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, would it help the Leader of the Government if we passed a motion in support of his position before the cabinet that indeed there should be participation by the Senate in that special parliamentary committee? If he thought it would be helpful, I am sure we could arrange to do that rather quickly.

Senator Roblin: If I experience difficulties in which I think my honourable friend's assistance and the support of my colleagues in the Senate would help, I shall not be backward in letting them know.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): In other words, don't call us; we'll call you.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Martha P. Bielish moved the second reading of Bill C-4, to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act.

She said: Honourable senators, the legislation before us today, Bill C-4, is to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act to include tobacco as a commodity that may be regulated by supply management provisions. Although this legislation would not in itself create a national supply management agency for tobacco, it would enable tobacco growers to look into the possibility of establishing such an agency. This legislation has been requested by farmers. It is one of the last matters dealt with before the last session of Parliament ended, and it is one of the first pieces of legislation introduced in this Parliament. Those factors speak for the urgency of this legislation and require that we give it our immediate and careful attention.

Bill C-4 is a significant piece of legislation for Canada's tobacco industry, an industry that is on shaky ground. Production costs have increased. The domestic market for tobacco has shrunk and domestic demand for tobacco has declined by 20 per cent since 1983. This bill will have no effect on tobacco consumption at the consumer level one way or the other. We are not debating the pros and cons of smoking. However, we must realize that there is still strong world-wide demand for tobacco, and Canadian farmers produce some of the best in the world. In the past, growers have profited well from tobacco production; so has government and so has industry. Millions of dollars in tax revenue are collected annually in this country. Moreover, tobacco earns Canada over $100 million a year in foreign exchange.

But gone are the days when tobacco production was a lucrative business. In fact, this year, Ontario growers expect to lose millions of dollars on their 1984 crop. Not only will growers lose, a lot of students and farm workers will also lose. In fact, the tobacco industry provides seasonal employment for some 5,000 people. Add to that the loss that local communities will experience when farmers have less money to spend on machinery, cars, hardware, clothes and even groceries. The government is making efforts to help tobacco growers find alternative crops. However, sandy soil that is ideally suited for tobacco production, is not the best soil for most other cash crops. Taking all these factors into consideration, it is easy to understand why tobacco growers want the legislated ability to work together nationally toward the same goals.

At present the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act only allows supply management in the production of eggs and poultry. In comparison, provincial marketing organizations regulate tobacco production, and tobacco prices are negotiated with buyers. Canadian tobacco growers are in a crisis situation. They believe that a national marketing agency could help bring stability to their industry.

I should point out that passage of this bill would allow the National Farm Products Marketing Council to hold public hearings to explore the possibility of establishing a marketing agency for tobacco. Details of an agreement on the agency would then be negotiated by provincial signatories. While there may be other farming sectors that would also like the opportunity to explore the possibility of national supply management, Bill C-4 is concerned only with tobacco because of the urgency of tobacco growers' problems. Tobacco growers deserve the option of playing a larger role in marketing their product. That option would be provided by Bill C-4.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I appreciate the remarks of the Honourable Senator Bielish and can certainly agree that the tobacco growers of Canada are in support of and require this legislation in Bill C-4. Action is being taken for tobacco growers and we support that. However, the question arises: Why is similar action not being taken following the requests of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, the cow calf producers and the grain producers to improve their cashflow, because the producers of these commodities are experiencing very difficult times as well. It is perfectly correct that the Minister of Agriculture should deal with the difficulties of the tobacco industry. Its sales are down, incomes are down, costs are up and many tobacco producers are experiencing very substantial losses. It is also true that the tobacco industry, no matter what we may feel about the use of tobacco, is of substantial economic importance to Canada. Our exports of tobacco are in excess of $100 million, and my figures say it is very close to $125 million. So tobacco is an important foreign exchange earner.

However, the question in my mind is: Why is this legislation before the Senate at this time? The reason it is before the Senate is that the members of the Conservative Party prevented Bill C-56 from passing the House of Commons on June 29 during the last session. That bill was comprehensive and provided amendments to the very act we are speaking about today. Moreover, a major clause of that bill allowed action to be taken where it was clear that the producers of not only tobacco, but other agricultural commodities wanted action to be taken. The position of the tobacco growers has worsened because of the five months of enforced delay in dealing with this problem brought about by the intransigent position taken by the Conservative Party in the House of Commons on June 29 when it prevented the passage of Bill C-56. The Conservatives are following the normal course for Conservatives. They really do not believe in farm marketing organizations. They have to be pushed and prodded before any action is taken on such matters. Not only did they prevent action being taken on June 29, but they have allowed five months to go by before taking any action at all. We have other marketing organizations in place which are under attack by the present government. The Canadian Wheat Board is under attack. As the President of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has said, the attack by the Minister of Finance on the arrangements for the sale of grain on credit endangers—and these are his words—"wheat deals worth $3 billion—are at risk." It is a case which demonstrates the government's attitude to a marketing agency which is extremely efficient and which has shown the way.

• (1500)

I am not one of those who think that every farm product should be subject to rigid supply management.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: You certainly used to be.

Senator Argue: No, I do not think I ever was. I think I have always been pretty practical. I like to see something which works. The Canadian Wheat Board is a mixture of marketing methods and it is an outstanding success. I think the principles the Wheat Board follows may well be used by the tobacco producers. I am speaking of export deals, long term agreements, initial payments and allocation of markets in a fair way, not necessarily through supply management but through allocation among producers. The Wheat Board works. I suggest it is under serious attack from the present government.

We all know that legislation passed in the last session of Parliament dealing with the creation of Canagrex. We all know that was over the opposition of the Conservative Party. However, honourable senators will also know that its operation was mainly in the export field. It was said, and I think correctly, that it would undertake operations only when it had the general support of the agricultural producers.

I have in my hand a clipping from the Winnipeg Free Press of November 20, 1984, in which Mr. Glenn Flaten, the President of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, is quoted as saying this about Canagrex:

In the one year of operations Canagrex made contacts for potential purchases of canola oil by Pakistan and Nigeria, corn by Sudan and Kenya, potatoes by Egypt, tobacco in the Middle East and other products by several Latin American countries . . .

He estimated the value of the sales to be at least $100 million.

I suggest that Canagrex was on the way to becoming a successful organization. I think $100 million in export sales is a very substantial amount. Senator Bielish said that the export value of tobacco is $100 million. That is a major amount of money. Canagrex had already made arrangements for the sale of some $100 million worth of farm products.

A successful organization has been killed by the present government because their interests are really not on the side of producers who need marketing arrangements but, rather, on the side of others who feel that those marketing arrangements should be opposed and prevented on every possible occasion.

We are dealing with a bill which is narrow in scope. If farmers producing other commodities wish similar treatment then they have to come before government, or the government has to present another bill on another occasion. The government has been pushed into action by the serious position of the tobacco growers. I ask why special provisions are being made for tobacco growers when there is a lack of action with respect to other commodities which are also produced by farmers and which also require attention.

We on this side of the house are prepared to support the measure before us. We point out that while it has merits in its own right the delay in its introduction has prevented the tobacco industry from dealing with its problems. The actions of the Conservative Party over the last five months make it difficult for other commodities to be brought under this type of legislation when producers wish it to happen. I regret, and I hope others regret, that Canagrex was killed before it was really given a chance.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this is one of those occasions when I can honestly say I did not really intend to make a speech on the subject of this bill today. However, a number of items raised by my honourable friend prompts me to offer a few comments which do not really support the gravamen of his charge. It is interesting to note that while this Parliament has been in session only since November 5, which is scarcely three weeks, he accuses us of not acting for five months. For goodness sakes, the election is not five months over.

Senator Argue: You killed it five months ago.

Senator Roblin: We have acted promptly. Just three weeks after the commencement of this Parliament we have the bill before us. Perhaps it could have been brought before us the first day, I do not know. What I do know is that it is here on approximately the twenty-first sitting day, and that is really not such a bad record.

Senator Argue: Five months late because of the actions taken by the Conservative Party.

Senator Roblin: That is what my honourable friend says. If the bill had been brought before the other place in decent time to have been dealt with in accordance with regular parliamentary procedure, then my friend who tosses his head would not have had anything to talk about because it would have been dealt with. It came in at the last moment, which is why it was a difficult problem to deal with.

Senator Argue: If you had not been opposed to the bill then you would have brought in some other type of bill.

Senator Roblin: The bill is here and my honourable friend will support it, I promise honourable senators that.

We had heard that the honourable gentleman might not find it convenient to speak on the bill at a later date, and that it would suit him to speak on it today. Thus, we made the appropriate arrangements, and I am glad we did, since it gave us the opportunity to hear his opinions on some other subjects. He talks about Canagrex. That is a very debatable topic. However, I think it is clear that our mandate did not include support for Canagrex, so he need not be surprised that it has been done away with. That came about as a result of what the electorate had decided and that has to be accepted.

The other thing he complains about is that we have been remiss in extending marketing support arrangements for other commodities, particularly livestock. I am happy to tell him that the Minister of Agriculture in this government met with the ministers of agriculture of the provinces, with the exception of Newfoundland, I think, whose agricultural effort is not as significant as it is in some other places, and, strangely enough, in comparison with meetings held with the previous Minister of Agriculture, they got along all right. They not only got along all right, which is a record my honourable friend cannot boast about, since his minister could not get along with these gentlemen one scrap, but in the getting along a program to bring in a stabilization plan for the red meat industry about which my honourable friend speaks has resulted.

Senator Argue: May I ask a question of the honourable gentleman?

Senator Roblin: No, you may not. You can ask me a question when I am through. When I am through you can ask all the questions you like; you are not going to interrupt me now. I did not interrupt my honourable friend and I expect him to extend the same courtesy to me.

Senator Argue: I asked for permission to ask a question and you were not courteous enough to allow me to ask it.

Senator Roblin: It is not a question of courtesy, it is a question of interrupting my argument. I am not going to permit you to do it; you will just have to sit tight and wait until you have heard it all.

Senator Argue: That is enough!

Senator Roblin: You can be quite sure it is enough. When I get through, and if you still have a question you think you want answered then I will be pleased to deal with it. I get a lot of practice with respect to answering questions around here, so one more from my honourable friend will not hurt me one scrap.

I want to say that this government has produced an agreement with the provinces with respect to the red meat industry. Before long, that agreement will be part of the legislative rules and regulations which govern the marketing of livestock in this country.

I could expand on the other points of agreement that the ministers of agriculture have been able to reach, which situation represents a happy change from the unpleasant atmosphere that we had to deal with in the past.

However, what I really stood up to talk about was something else, that is, the Canadian Wheat Board. My friend does a grave disservice to the agricultural history of this country when he questions the bona fides of this government with respect to the Canadian Wheat Board; a grave disservice because the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board have made it plain in public statements, several times since they came to office, that the government would do nothing to jeopardize the export marketing system of the Canadian Wheat Board — and that includes credit. If anyone knows anything about the operations of the Wheat Board, they know that the provision of adequate credit is an important part of their selling effort. The Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board has made the statement on several occasions that the government will do nothing to jeopardize the export marketing system of the board, and recognizes the importance of credit in maintaining sales of grain in the intensely competitive marketing situation that we face today. Also, he has stated that no steps will be taken to weaken the operation of the Canadian Wheat Board in its selling effort on behalf of the Canadian farmers. That is the reason I felt I had to reply, because I could not leave on the record an allegation that was quite different from the statement I have just made. I want to assure my honourable friend that the Wheat Board will receive good support, solid support, constructive support, consistent support from this administration in respect to the operations of that board.

I feel I must apologize to the mover of this motion because very little of what my honourable friend and I have said had anything to do with the tobacco industry. I, for one, would have been reluctant to raise these matters if I had not been invited to do so by the remarks of my honourable friend.

Now if he has a question, let's have it.

Senator Argue: My question is this: What did the Minister of Finance mean when he said in his economic paper that his department would be looking at the $3 billion guaranteed credit? As far as I know, that was not public information until it was put in that paper. He has indicated that his department would be looking at the cost of that credit to see whether or not private companies could be brought in to provide that credit. I suggest that that means a huge increase in the cost of credit to the Canadian Wheat Board, and that in turn means a reduction in price to the producers. Also, for nations where the credit question might be a difficult one, I ask whether it is likely that the private companies will insure that kind of credit?

I suggest to you that what the Minister of Finance is proposing would be a huge burden on the Canadian Wheat Board and would jeopardize current markets that are underwritten in the amount of $3 billion by the former government, now by the present government because of its responsibility following those actions.

I would also ask whether the red meat stabilization policy that is being put forward is not, in principle, exactly the same kind of red meat stabilization policy involving three parties—the producers, the provincial government and the federal government—sharing the costs on a equal basis, as was proposed by the former Minister of Agriculture?

Senator Roblin: I cannot give my honourable friend the detail that he asks for in the red meat system. However, I can tell him that, under the aegis of his colleague, the former Minister of Agriculture, the parties did not agree. However, under the aegis of the present Minister of Agriculture, they have agreed and that is what matters; they are agreeing to do it enough to get the thing off the ground. My honourable friend can belittle it if he likes, but it is a very adequate start in an area where some action is undoubtedly needed.

My honourable friend's colleague struggled with this problem for four years, or perhaps eight years, and could not achieve an agreement. Now we have an agreement, so I think that is something to be satisfied about.

Respecting the question of farm credit for the Wheat Board, I can tell my friend that all of the bogeymen he is raising with respect to an enormous burden on the farmers of Canada because of the fact that the Government of Canada intends to make some change in the method of credit support for the Canadian Wheat Board, amount to nothing but scare tactics. The farmers of Canada will receive the support in the nature of credit from the Wheat Board that that great industry deserves.

Senator Argue: I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate a specific and precise question: Does the assurance that he has now given us—and I appreciate that assurance—with respect to the attitude of the government to the Canadian Wheat Board's operation extend to any new policies affecting credit? In other words, can he assure us that there will be no increase in the cost of credit to the Canadian Wheat Board, and therefore a reduction in the net return to the producers by that precise amount? Will the future credit be at the current cost or will the cost be higher, because of the fact that it may be put in place by private companies?

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend can tell me what will happen to the rate of interest, I guess I could answer his question. However, if he is asking whether there will be any change in principle that will hurt the Canadian farmer, the answer is no.

Senator Argue: I will be a little more precise: Credit now provided by government guarantees is provided at a shade under prime. I believe that "shade" is one-eighth of one per cent or one-quarter of one per cent. My question then is: Would any new government provisions or any new change in policy that the government insists be undertaken maintain a rate that is as favourable as the current rate, namely a shade under prime?

Senator Roblin: I am not sure what my honourable friend means but a "shade under prime".

Senator Argue: One-eighth of one per cent or one-quarter?

Senator Roblin: That is not a shade. That casts a pretty considerable shade when you are talking in terms of $2 billion or $3 billion dollars, so I would like to point out to my honourable friend that that is significant.

What I am telling my honourable friend is that the statement of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board is that the interests of the farmers will be protected, and that they will not be damaged by the policies of this government respecting farm credit.

Senator Argue: I do not think that that answer really covers my question. That answer suggests to me that when the new credit arrangements are in effect, the cost to the producer through a lower return for wheat will be higher than the current rate.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has been doing nothing but suggest all afternoon. When we get to the facts, then I will expect him to look at it with a more favourable eye.

Senator Argue: But you haven't said it will not go up.

Senator Roblin: And I haven't said that it will.

Senator Argue: I'm asking you: Will it remain under prime at the current level, and there is no answer to that question.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Order, order!

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, with the introduction by the government of Bill C-4, we have come full circle because I remember very well how long and how hard the Progressive Conservative Party fought in the very late sixties to prevent the adoption of the original Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. Today we have the government introducing a new commodity to be named within that act.

The legislation is simply permissive. You can name anything at all in this act, but it means absolutely nothing unless the farmers at the grass roots level, the provincial producer organizations and the provinces agree among themselves to do something.

[Translation]

What I find particularly distressing, honourable senators—I suppose I should declare my interest, so I am a non-smoker, although quite a bit of tobacco is grown in New Brunswick, starting with the lovely County of Kent, as the late Hervé Michaud was so fond of saying in this Chamber, in the sixties—is the fact that this Government has two ways of dealing with issues, depending on the subject or the individuals that will be affected by its legislation. I will try to be brief, since later on in the session, I intend to table a notice of inquiry on a subject for which I can muster more enthusiasm, and that is the potato industry.

I think it is unfortunate that the Government is so anxious to table this legislation—indeed no one here is going to object to its passage—while when the Minister of Finance made his economic statement in the other place, it was announced that a royal commission of inquiry on potato marketing in Eastern Canada would be abolished. We see the government's almost indecent haste in responding to the needs of the tobacco industry—obviously, since the heart of this industry is located in Southern Ontario and parts of Quebec which have elected a number of Government Members. In New Brunswick, the potato industry has become a very serious problem, and now the Government, without consulting with the people concerned, the producers and growers, decides just like that to abolish a commission of inquiry which was to be chaired by Judge Carter from Ontario. In some cases, potato growers and provincial associations had already finished drafting their briefs for submission to the judge. In other cases, briefs were close to the final drafting stages. So, all of a sudden, without advance notice, the program is axed. Today we are being asked to support this Bill, and I will do so quite generously, because I feel that tobacco growers are facing very serious economic problems.

Potato growers are also faced with a number of problems due to factors that are far more complex than the simple fact that a certain percentage of the population has decided to stop smoking because it is bad for their health. At least potatoes are good for your health, so people are going to go on eating them!

We have become such efficient potato producers that we have created insurmountable problems for ourselves. All potato producers, be they American, Canadian, Dutch, Russian or Polish, are so good at it that they have flooded world markets with potatoes and their by-products.

What I do not like in all this—I will go into this issue at a more appropriate time—is that they are using two sets of standards, according to the electoral fall-outs, if I can put it that way.

I predict to honourable senators, to the sponsor of this bill and to the Leader of the Government in the Senate that one of these days you will rise in this chamber and voice sincere regrets about the new government's decision to abolish this commission of inquiry. In 18 months, in three years, potato farmers throughout eastern Canada will again be knocking at the door of the Minister of Agriculture. With their hands out, they will be begging for grants to keep their family farms afloat, repay bank loans, pay for their farm equipment and God knows what else. This problem is much more complex than the tobacco issue.

That is all I have to say for now. I serve notice that I intend to table a notice of inquiry about this. I support the bill. I do so with all the generosity I can command, for I know very well the agricultural community not only in my native province of New Brunswick, but elsewhere in Canada.

When I was a member of the other place, I had the privilege of travelling throughout the country and I know just how much one's heart and one's purse can be affected when industries such as the potato and tobacco industries are going through hard times.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Hon. Martha P. Bielish moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, November 29, 1984

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

THIRD REPORT PRESENTED

Hon. Orville H. Phillips, Chairman of the Committee of Selection, presented the following report:

Thursday, November 29, 1984

The Committee of Selection has the honour to present its

THIRD REPORT

Pursuant to Rule 66(1)(b), your Committee submits herewith the list of Senators nominated by it to serve on each of the following select committees:

COMMITTEE ON STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

The Honourable Senators Asselin, Corbin, Everett, Flynn, Frith, Lewis, Lucier, Macdonald, *MacEachen (or Frith), Macquarrie, McElman, Molgat, Molson, Phillips, Riel,* Roblin (or Doody), Turner. (15)

*Ex officio members.

COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

The Honourable Senators Argue, Bélisle, Charbonneau, Denis, Doody, Frith, Graham, Guay, Kelly, LeBlanc (Beauséjour), *MacEachen (or Frith), McElman, Petten, Phillips, Riel, *Roblin (or Doody). (14)

*Ex officio members.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL DEFENCE

The Honourable Senators Buckwold, Hicks, Kelly, Lafond, Langlois, Lapointe, *MacEachen (or Frith), Marshall, McElman, Molgat, Molson, Muir, *Roblin (or Doody), Yuzyk. (12)

*Ex officio members.

Respectfully submitted,

ORVILLE H. PHILLIPS
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(f), I move that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration later this day.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Are you asking if leave is granted, first, Your Honour?

The Hon. the Speaker: Yes. Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

THE CABINET

ACCESS TO INFORMATION—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in the name of Senator Davey, I give notice that on Tuesday next, the 4th of December, 1984, he will call the attention of the Senate to the Government's preoccupation with secrecy.

[English]

ADJOURNMENT

On Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this is the point at which I usually move the adjournment. However, I would ask leave to revert to Notices of Motions later this afternoon. We are waiting to hear from the House of Commons their schedule for next week. Whether we sit next week will depend largely upon their schedule. Therefore, I ask leave to revert to Notices of Motions later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

JUSTICE

UNLICENSED CABLE TELEVISION OPERATORS—STAY OF PROSECUTIONS

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, which refers to the question of the unlicensed cable television operators' stay of prosecutions discussed in the House of Commons yesterday. At that time, the Minister of Justice, Mr. Crosbie, made the following statement:

In connection with the prosecutions that were requested by the Minister of Communications, the Department of Justice acts as a legal agent of the Department of Communications. If the Department of Communications decides that it is reviewing policy and does not wish to go ahead with prosecutions, we naturally accept those directions. That Department is our client and we are its legal agents. What could be simpler for anyone to understand?

Honourable senators, when I read those words, to say that I was absolutely astounded is putting it mildly. I would have thought that even a law student would have known better, let alone a Minister of Justice.

I should also like to refer to a well-known work called The Law Officers of the Crown by Mr. J. Ll. J. Edwards. I quote from page 177, where the author quotes Sir Harold Macmillan who, in 1959, said:

It is an established principle of government in this country, and a tradition long supported by all political parties, that the decision as to whether any citizen should be prosecuted, or whether any prosecution should be discontinued, should be a matter, where a public as opposed to a private prosecution is concerned, for the prosecuting authorities to decide on the merits of the case without political or other pressure. It would be a most dangerous deviation from this sound principle if a prosecution were to be instituted or abandoned as a result of political pressure or popular clamour.

This principle goes back a long time.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: A nice speech.

Senator Godfrey: I should also like to quote from page 179 of the same work.

Senator Flynn: Notice of inquiry!

Senator Godfrey: This is the basis of my question.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Don't serialize it.

Senator Godfrey: This was standard practice when the senators opposite were in opposition. I am merely trying to be helpful to the Minister of Justice, so that he will not have to take the trouble to read this book.

Honourable senators, this is a well-established practice, going back to 1793.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Perhaps the honourable senator was there.

Senator Flynn: We were together.

Senator Godfrey: The famous Lord Chancellor Eldon stated:

I protest against that doctrine, that the Attorney-General of England is bound to prosecute, because some other set of men choose to recommend it to him to prosecute, he disapproving of that prosecution.

Some Hon. Senators: Shame, shame.

Senator Godfrey: At page 215, there is a quotation from Sir John Simon.

My question to the Leader of the Government is—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Godfrey: Perhaps I should also cite—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Godfrey: I have even greater authority, that of a former Minister of Justice, Mr. Basford, who, on March 17, 1978, said:

The first principle, in my view, is that there must be excluded any consideration based upon narrow, partisan views, or based upon the political consequences to me or to others.

In arriving at a decision on such a sensitive issue as this, the Attorney General is entitled to seek information and advice from others but in no way is he directed by his colleagues in the government or by parliament itself. That is not to say that the Attorney General is not accountable to parliament for his decisions, which he obviously is.

Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to chapters 10 and 11 of this book to which I have referred? Would he then ask the Minister of Justice, having read that and briefed himself as to his duties, to make a written statement, through the Leader of the Government in the Senate, to this chamber as to how he then sees his duties as Attorney General of Canada?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend has raised a legitimate constitutional question, and I recognize that fact because it is in accordance with our constitutional precepts that the Attorney General operates as a semi-judicial officer without taking instructions from other people.

I think it is quite probable that the Attorney General will make a statement in the other place later today clarifying the situation and expressing his determination to adhere to the constitutional precepts my honourable friend is proffering. In addition, it might be appropriate if I were to take my honourable friend's statement and send it to the minister as an aide-mémoire.

• (1410)

Senator Godfrey: As a supplementary, would the Leader of the Government also draw the attention of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General that the Attorney General has never been in the British Cabinet since 1928 for these very reasons, so that he will not be subject to direction by his colleagues. That principle was laid down there, but we have not followed it.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as the Leader of the Government has indicated that the Minister of Justice may be making a statement on this important subject this afternoon, I wonder if he can tell us whether the minister, in his statement, will clarify for us—

Senator Flynn: For you.

Senator MacEachen:—for us, the people of Canada, if indeed he took direction from the Prime Minister, as he stated in the House yesterday, or seemed to state, in deciding to stay prosecution. The question was directly asked of him, whether he had taken direction, and he said yes. Later in the day he said publicly on television that he had not taken direction. I wonder whether that clarification will be made by the minister, or, if not, can the Leader of the Government make it for us today?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I believe that aspect of the question will be covered in the statement which, although I cannot give a positive assurance, I believe will be made this afternoon. I believe the point referred to will be covered when the statement is made. If it is not, I shall do my best to provide the answer for my honourable friend.

Senator Flynn: If the interpretation is incorrect, then I am sure he will correct it at the next sitting.

Senator Steuart: He will probably erase all the tapes in the meantime!

CULTURAL ORGANIZATIONS

RELATIONSHIP TO GOVERNMENT

Hon. Jean Le Moynes: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Our cultural agencies are generally safe from any political interference, and their independence is correctly seen as one of the unique and noble traditions in our society.

The Minister of Communications implied recently that the relationship between the Government and these institutions would soon be undergoing significant changes. Could the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate give us the assurance that these changes will not lead to any interference, especially in the case of the Canada Council?

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe I can say that at the present time no change has been made in the understanding that exists in the nation with respect to the role of government and those cultural institutions. If any changes are going to be made—and I acknowledge the fact that the minister has made a statement that might give rise to some concern in this respect—they are going to be made in the proper parliamentary fashion, with full opportunity for members of Parliament to take part in the debate. I hope that will set my honourable friend's fears at rest.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I take it that the Leader of the Government will keep his eye on this question. When he is considering the position of the government and that of the Minister of Communications on the relationship between government and those agencies, perhaps he will take into account an answer, given by his leader during the election, to a questionnaire from the Canadian Conference of the Arts—Conférence canadienne des Arts—on this subject. What the present Prime Minister said will be found in paragraph three of the questionnaire from the Canadian Conference of the Arts. The following question was asked:

What will you and your Party do to see that the federal cultural agencies continue to exist at arm's-length from undue political and bureaucratic influence? What will you and your Party do to ensure that they also are given adequate resources to fulfill their important responsibilities?

In reply to the question the present Prime Minister said:

We are committed without question to the arm's-length principle and regard peer review as the most equitable and consistent mechanism for federal funding support to individuals, groups and institutions. The cultural agencies and councils are more able than politicians and bureaucrats to assess the needs identified by the cultural sector, and must be assured adequate resources to respond effectively. We will undertake to develop formal procedures to ensure that the government policy process is informed regularly and accountably by the agencies and councils. The Cultural Agencies Act must ensure that the Minister receives and responds to recommendations from the federal agencies which work most closely with the cultural sector. . .

We are convinced that the agencies and councils must be independent from shifts in political perspectives, bureaucratic theories and expenditure priorities. We are prepared now to translate our efforts in Opposition into action, through implementation of five-year financial plans, formal structures—et cetera. Then there is a short paragraph on funding:

We are committed to maintaining federal funding for the agencies and councils in line with inflation. We believe that five-year expenditure plans are essential to accommodate the particular circumstances of the cultural sector and to allow these bodies to make internal adjustments without political and bureaucratic interference.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will do as my honourable friend requests and make sure that the statement that he has referred to is not lost sight of. It would be helpful if he would be kind enough to send me a copy, because I do not have one myself.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Senator Frith has collected everything on the campaign trail.

Senator Frith: You did?

Senator Flynn: No, you did.

Senator Frith: I was busy doing other things, like playing golf.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—ABSENCE OF CANADIAN OBSERVERS FROM ELECTION

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I have three questions arising out of Canada's participation—or should I say non-participation—in the recent election in Nicaragua. I address my questions to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

First of all, it is well known that the Secretary of State for External Affairs decided not to send observers from Canada to participate in or to observe that election. Secondly, it has recently been reported that the Secretary of State for External Affairs did not even know whether there was a resident ambassador from Nicaragua here in Ottawa. My first question therefore is: Can the Leader of the Government find out whether the decision of the Secretary of State for External Affairs not to send observers to this election was made before he knew whether there was a resident ambassador in Ottawa or after he had learned that there was?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am unable to tell what data my honourable colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs was operating on when he made his decision. However, I will do my best to find out the answer to your question.

Senator Hicks: If the answer is yes, that he had learned beforehand that there was a resident ambassador in Ottawa, did the Secretary of State for External Affairs or any of his officials confer with that ambassador or any of his staff? Perhaps the Leader of the Government in the Senate would attempt to find out the answer to that question.

My third question is rather delicate, but I feel it must be asked. Did the Secretary of State for External Affairs confer with our American colleagues before or during the making of the decision not to send observers to Nicaragua?

Senator Roblin: I shall request an answer to my honourable friend's questions from my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

FEDERAL COURT DECISION

Hon. Andrew Thompson: Honourable senators, I have a question to direct to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In view of the recent Federal Court ruling concerning the requirement for a full panel of the National Parole Board to hear individual parole requests, it would appear that there will be procedural complications for that board in holding its approximately 26,000 hearings each year.

In view of this ruling, may I ask what alternative—among those proposed by the various interested organizations, such as the Criminal Lawyers' Association—the Solicitor General is considering adopting?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think my honourable friend is quite right in saying that the Federal Court ruling will cause complications. One would think that this would result in some delay in dealing with parole matters. However, I noticed in a recent press statement that the authorities stated that this would not be so.

I must say that I think my friend's question deserves an answer, and I shall find out what I can from my honourable colleague the Solicitor General.

FINANCE

RECORDING OF MINISTERIAL DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, my question is addressed to the Leader of the Government. Could he assure us that when the Minister of Finance visits Washington he will not attempt to tape his conversations with the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, or, if he does tape them, will he make sure not to mislay the tape?

● (1420)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I am sure my honourable friend will agree with me that taping is a delicate subject in Washington at any time. The thought that our minister may fall afoul of the prejudice against taping in the United States boggles the mind. I think I can give my honourable friend the assurance that he will not indulge in such a process.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question about tapes which I would like to direct to the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate. Both the leader's and my roots lie deep in Manitoba. My question arises from what I shall term the negligence and misadventures that have been going on over the past few days. My question is: Is this indicative of the Minister of Finance of this great country being accident prone?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend couched his question in very reasonable language because "negligence" and "misadventure" certainly describe the situation very well.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: "Stupidity" might work.

Senator Roblin: My impression is that after that experience we may expect the Minister of Finance to be particularly careful to guard against a repetition.

Senator Steuart: He won't go to Winnipeg.

Senator Sinclair: I wonder if the leader can assist honourable senators and answer the question as to why an aid to the Minister of Finance would be carrying one of these machines around, particularly to a meeting on very sensitive negotiations with another officer of the Crown?

Senator Roblin: I guess I can only use the words of the minister himself who describes it as a "dumb mistake", and I think we can all agree with that.

Senator Sinclair: A dumb mistake on whose part?

Senator Roblin: The minister accepts responsibility for what his people do.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): The minister beat me handily at squash on Saturday. Maybe he got over-confident.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ALLEGED REQUIREMENT FOR MINISTERIAL APPROVAL OF JOB APPLICATIONS

Hon. Charles Turner: Honourable senators, if we might digress for a minute—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Turner: —on July 28, 44 years ago, when I made my first trial trip on a CNR steam locomotive to Windsor, Ontario, little did I think at that time that some day I would be elevated to be a member of this red chamber. It is a great honour and privilege for a little working guy to sit with all the great Canadians that I read about in the newspapers of this country, especially the Honourable Ian Sinclair, a man for whom I have great respect and a tough but fair brother railroad man.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Turner: My question is to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. For over 66 years, November 11, Remembrance Day, is a time when millions of Canadians pay their respects to our fellow countrymen and women who sacrificed their lives in defence of the ideals which make the democratic nations decent countries in which to live. On this special day, we pay tribute not only to those who died, but we also salute those who served and had the good fortune to survive. All Canadians rightfully recognize the debt we owe our surviving veterans. Many honourable senators of this chamber served, and I am informed that the Leader of the Government in the Senate has a very distinguished war record. Therefore, I presume he still believes in the democratic principles that he fought for. Is this statement true, Mr. Government Leader?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I should hope so.

Senator Turner: I did not receive a brown envelope in my office, but I did receive the following message on a black telephone:

Contrary to the rules and regulations of the Public Service Commission of Canada, a person's work application for a public service job must go over the minister's desk in each department.

[Senator Sinclair.]

Is this statement true, and are these the type of democratic principles that the Leader of the Government went and served overseas to protect for all Canadians?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I think I would have to investigate the accuracy of my honourable friend's statement before I could deal with it any further.

Is there any more he would like to add to his statement that would help me in my investigation?

Senator Turner: That is the message I received on the telephone, sir.

Senator Roblin: Telephone communications of that kind always present certain difficulties because it is hard to track those down. Ask your informant what department he is concerned about, and that would help me.

I see the point of my honourable friend's question and I would like to look into it, but unless he gives me something more to go on, it will be difficult.

Senator Turner: Maybe the next message I receive will be in a brown envelope, and if it is, I will send it to you.

PLACEMENT OF FORMER MINISTERIAL ASSISTANTS

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, I think the answer just given by the Leader of the Government in the Senate is most unfair. Why is it possible for me, as a senator, to inquire and to learn easily that several ministers have given instructions to their deputy ministers—not to the guy on the elevator, but to their deputy ministers—that they should isolate anyone within their departments who worked for Liberal ministers, that they should not allow them to sign any documents, that they should not allow them to become involved in any way in any sensitive policy, and that they not let them participate in any interdepartmental committees? Surely, if I can learn about that first hand, it is your responsibility to inquire into it.

With respect to the question I put to the Leader of the Government in the Senate yesterday, I think it is up to the leader to obtain the information I asked for. I asked: How many people who had worked for Liberal ministers and who have the right to enter into the Public Service of Canada without competition on a priority basis, have received offers since September 18?

My information is that the Public Service Commission of Canada and the departments have been instructed not to make any offers. That has been the situation since September 18.

An Hon. Senator: Shame!

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The question my honourable friend has asked is not one with which I can deal on an oral basis; therefore, I will accept it as a written question and will provide him with the best answer I can.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: He does not want an answer; he wants to simply put the question. That is more important than the answer.

The Hon. the Speaker: Delayed answers to questions?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I have no delayed answers to questions today; I hope to have some at the next sitting.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Please do. We are getting very anxious.

Senator Flynn: All you want to do is put your questions. The answers are not important to you.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Martha P. Bielish moved the third reading of Bill C-4, to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

THIRD REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Third Report of the Committee of Selection presented earlier this day.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I move that the report be now adopted.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTER-PARLIAMENTARY GROUP

TWENTY-FIFTH MEETING—REPORT OF CANADIAN DELEGATION—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, November 22, 1984:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-fifth Meeting of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group, held at Dorado, Puerto Rico, from 8th to 12th March, 1984, and to the Report of the said Meeting.

He said: Honourable senators, this is the first opportunity I have had to speak in the Senate since the beginning of the Thirty-third Parliament. Therefore, I would like to pay my respects to our new officials and those who are charged with the responsibility of making the Senate an effective chamber.

I am delighted to greet Senator Charbonneau as our new Speaker and Senator Asselin as our Speaker pro tempore. I am aware of the heavy calendar of duties which we impose upon our Speaker and his deputy. I hope that their enjoyment of the more social aspects of those duties will compensate for what may sometimes be regarded as the tedium of their more solemn ones.

Senator Roblin will make an excellent Leader of the Government in the Senate. I notice that he has already learned to back and fill and dodge and squirm out of difficult questions; but that is not surprising in view of his great parliamentary experience and his magnificent command of both official languages. It has always been a pleasure to work with Senator Roblin and, partisan considerations aside, I am sure it will continue to be so.

Senator Doody will certainly be no less adequate in his role as Deputy Leader of the Government. He tackles his parliamentary responsibilities with great joy and goodwill.

It seems somewhat strange to me to roll the name of Senator MacEachen off my tongue. However, I am greatly pleased that the then Prime Minister and now Leader of the Opposition in the other place, the Right Honourable John Turner, had the wisdom to preserve for our parliamentary system not only the person of a great humanitarian but the resource of expertise in parliamentary and international affairs which the Honourable Allan MacEachen represents. I welcome him as my leader in the Senate and assure him of my support.

My old friend, Royce Frith, is learning the ways of opposition very quickly—about as quickly as Senator Roblin has learned the ways of government. As Deputy Leader of the Opposition he will no doubt inspire us to keep our critical eye on the performance of this massive government.

Honourable senators, on November 22 I tabled and caused to be appended to the Debates of the Senate of that day the Report of the Twenty-fifth Meeting of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group which had been held from March 9 to March 12, 1984, in Dorado, on the outskirts of San Juan, Puerto Rico.

Due to the fact that we have a number of new senators, most of whom will take a particular interest in our parliamentary relationships with the United States, I should explain that the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group in the Parliament of Canada usually exceeds 200 in membership and meets annually to hear reports and to elect officers. The 1985 general meeting will be held next Tuesday evening at 6 p.m. in Room 200 of the West Block. I hope that all honourable senators who are interested in this matter will make a point of being present.

Once a year 24 delegates are chosen, 16 from the House of Commons and 8 from the Senate, to meet with a similar number of delegates from the United States Congress to discuss a pre-set agenda of matters of mutual interest to delegates from both countries. The most recent of these international meetings was held in Puerto Rico last March, and it is the report of that meeting which I would now like to discuss. The next international meeting is planned for Niagara-on-the-Lake in mid-May 1985. Again, delegates will be selected from the Senate and the House of Commons. Between meetings, various follow-up activities occupy our attention.

The purpose of the organization is to ensure a constructive discussion of matters affecting the economic and political relationships between our two countries and what parliamentarians might do to improve them.

The American delegates always come to these meetings very well briefed and extremely interested in these issues. We Canadians have begun to understand that Congress is as important in the United States as the administration, and that while our executive branch has the main responsibility for interfacing with the American administration, it is we parliamentarians who have the responsibility for ensuring the understanding of the members of the American Senate and the House of Representatives. As a result, the Canadian delegates are also meticulously briefed, and to become a delegate one must commit oneself to attendance at all briefings and to a willingness to take the leadership in the discussions of some important issues.

The spirit of the annual conference is always very warm and friendly. While sometimes we agree to disagree, we do go away with a better understanding of each other's point of view and with many false impressions having been destroyed. The 48 delegates are arranged in three committees, each with an American and a Canadian co-chairman. At this convention the committee dealt with trade and economic questions. After an opening discussion of U.S. and Canadian economic conditions and prospects, which dealt largely with the problems of deficit, debts and interest rates, there was a searching examination of the differences in responsiveness of the Canadian and American parliamentary systems.

The growing importance of trade in both countries led to a discussion of the effect on trade of the unmanageable debt of a number of the developing countries. Canadian and U.S. banks had allowed themselves to become overly levered. The International Monetary Fund had insisted on austerity as a price of its support to the borrowers. That had caused reduction of imports by the borrowers and that, in turn, had reduced the opportunities for export by Canadian and American companies, and contributed to our recession. High interest rates and the exorbitant American dollar had also affected trade.

Canada's dependence on the United States market and our need to ensure fair treatment in a protectionist era drew us into a discussion of bilateral free-trade arrangements. There was general agreement that the discussions initiated by Canada and welcomed by the United States should proceed, although concerns were expressed about the attitude of GATT, the behaviour that could be expected from multinationals in maintaining employment in Canada and as to whether we should seek a general agreement, which would be cautiously phased in, or whether we should continue to seek sectoral arrangements.

Specific irritants still include our treatment of advertising on border broadcasting stations. We think in terms of cultural protection against stations which are not licensed to broadcast in Canada; they think of it as the pirating of their signals.

● (1440)

Our provincial licensing of trucking firms and FIRA's control of trucking company acquisitions irritate Americans in an era of their own domestic deregulation. On the other hand, we are very much concerned about their application of American law to individuals and companies under our sovereign jurisdiction. As examples, we drew their attention to the early drafts of their Export Administration Act and to the extraterritorial use of subpoenas to force one of our banks to comply with the order of a court in one of the states, even though the complained-of activity had not been carried on in the United States.

The dangers of the principles contained in their draft Reciprocity and Services Bill were of great concern to the Canadian delegates. Unilateral definition of subsidies and the concept that the countermeasures need not be limited to the product being subsidized struck us as departures from fair market legislation. Our government's move to collect sales tax on tourist pamphlets was an aggravation when entry of such material to the U.S. is free. Our revelation that Canadians pay the tax, too, did little to remove the irritant.

The prospect of Canadian steel producers facing a possible negative recommendation from the International Trade Commission and also a steel import quota bill from Congress shocked the Canadian delegates. There were serious discussions of the disastrous effects on steel shipments back and forth between Canada and the United States in a highly integrated industry. Americans wanted to protect a less-than-efficient industry from unfair competition. Canadians would be caught up in the restrictions even though they are fair-traders.

No doubt the discussions, together with subsequent correspondence and visits, helped to gain a positive result from the President in September.

Committee II on Energy, Defence and Multilateral Questions began with a discussion of natural gas. The new U.S. import policy was explained and complaints were lodged as to Canadian export price policy. Again, the discussions were effective. The National Energy Board and the Canadian government subsequently relaxed those regulations to meet the competition brought about by deregulation in the United States.

The Alaska Highway Gas Pipeline discussion caused a few sparks to fly, but the Americans insisted that all guarantees of construction were based on the availability of financing—which had not become available.

The "back-in" provision of our National Energy Program was resented by U.S. delegates. We pointed out that it was like the U.S. windfall tax, and was consistent with the historic approach of the Canadian government to participate in the development of and to share in the benefits of frontier energy exploration.

Canadian electricity exports to the northwest states were causing some consternation because of the cheapness of B.C. hydro power. On the other hand, exports from Ontario and Quebec were welcomed into the northeastern states because of their shortages of capacity and difficulty in building new plants.

The committee dealt with defence issues by considering the modernization of the NORAD early warning system in view of the threat of the Soviet Union's bomber force.

The reluctance of the U.S. to share its satellite technology and the fairness of Canada's contribution to NATO caused some heated discussion. However, there was acknowledgment that Canada's NATO forces and equipment are steadily improving.

American restrictions on sensitive military and industrial technologies are being applied to Canadian manufacturers in spite of our interdependence in NORAD and NATO. Canadian delegates were given no assurance that that would change, although it makes it most difficult for Canadian firms to contribute to the building of F-18s and other equipment in which we are entitled to have Canadian manufacturing content. We were assured that there was a recognition that Canadians were not being fairly treated and that an effort was being made to repair the situation. A lively exchange of views on nuclear arms deployment and disarmament, followed by a discussion of Mr. Trudeau's peace initiative, brought the committee to agreement that NATO must be supported, but that every effort must be made to create a climate of peace.

Committees II and III joined to discuss Grenada, Central America and the Middle East. Most of the Americans were supportive of their government's action in Grenada and Central America, and Canadian criticism was not always happily received. However, one U.S. delegate wanted it made clear that opinion in Congress was not at all unanimous on these matters. There was a feeling that these issues were so sensitive within Congress that discussion with the Canadian delegation was not well accepted. The discussion on the Middle East was full and interesting but, perhaps predictably, came to no conclusions.

Committee III on Environmental and Multilateral Issues discussed nine issues of varying degrees of concern. The Garrison Diversion question brought forth expressions of great concern by the Canadians and expressions of warm reassurance by the Americans. The most recent staff report to the American Commission would seem to give us hope that that struggle is about to be won.

The discussion of acid rain centred on the lack of action in the United States and the dissatisfaction of delegates from both countries with the American efforts. The American delegates expressed their belief that sentiment in the United States in favour of strong remedial action is growing rapidly.

Toxic wastes in the Niagara River appalled everyone. The new United States Resource Recovery Act would provide for proper storage and disposal, but clean-up would be difficult. Transportation of toxic wastes across the border, mainly from Canada to the U.S., was causing some concern.

The failure of the west coast salmon treaty was a real worry to the west coast delegates from both countries. Since that time, a very effective committee of the Canada-U.S. Inter-parliamentary Group has brought the matter closer to the resumption of negotiations.

Our final plenary allowed us to review the pre-election political scene in each of our countries. All that is history now, and I have no heart to regurgitate it. At the time, however, the discussion was enjoyed by all.

The other subject of the plenary was "Making Canada's Case in Washington." The Canadians were aware of the expense of lobbying in Washington and asked if there was another way to make our case. We were assured that there is not. The American government system requires that you know and work with each of the administration, the Congress and the various agencies. It is expensive but indispensable. Other countries are much more active than Canada, although the Canadian Embassy is doing an effective job within its resources. Private interests must also lobby. It would help if our efforts were co-ordinated.

We came away with the distinct impression that our discussions at this meeting had been particularly productive. Since the meeting, which took place last March, that feeling has been borne out by the success of our follow-up activities, particularly in respect of steel and west coast salmon.

I invite honourable senators to read the report and to use the forum of this chamber to extend the discussion so profitably begun at the 25th Annual Meeting of the Canada-U.S. Inter-parliamentary Group in Puerto Rico last March.

Hon. Andrew Thompson: If I may be permitted, I should like to ask the honourable senator a question. I am interested in any discussion about the toxic materials going into the Niagara River and into Lake Ontario. I do not know whether Senator Stanbury had an opportunity to see this morning's edition of the Globe and Mail. In it there is an editorial about the recent findings of a report concerning toxic waste. In the editorial it was suggested that the federal minister responsible for the environment should take a more aggressive posture, intervening when necessary in any court procedures in the United States to force industries to clean up their act. Although Canadian industry is also responsible for some of the pollution, American industry is the greater offender in that regard.

Could the honourable senator enlarge upon the committee's discussions about this subject? It seems to me that it is a very pertinent one to all of us. I wonder whether Senator Stanbury could make any concrete suggestions in this regard?

Senator Stanbury: Honourable senators, in the context of the conference, of course, the report to which my honourable friend refers was not available. That report is a very recent publication.

• (1450)

At the time of the conference we were certainly aware of the very serious leakage of toxic wastes into the Niagara River and that there was a real problem. That concern was not expressed only by the Canadians. One of the important features of that particular conference, in my mind, was that there seemed to be a very serious concern about these matters on the part of many of the delegates from the United States. That may have been emphasized or exaggerated by the fact that many of them were from New England states and from western states; there were few American delegates from the heavily industrialized states.

There was a feeling among the delegates that the consciousness of the problem of acid rain, the escape of toxic waste, and so on, was becoming so important in the United States itself that the political pressures would cause it to be solved for their own benefit and, perhaps accidentally, for ours at the same time.

On motion of Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, December 4, 1984, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

He said: Honourable senators, it was originally thought that the Senate would adjourn until Tuesday, December 11 because, although there are several bills being dealt with in of the House of Commons, it appeared that they might not come to us until the week following next.

However, assurance in that regard has not been forthcoming. At present, the members in the other place are in Committee of the Whole to deal with the amendments to the Customs and Excise Tax Act and the Income Tax Act. I believe there is a third bill which could also come before us next week. In consideration of that, it was decided that we should sit next week.

In any event, there is some other business of which we have to dispose, such as the final day of the Throne Speech debate and several other items on the order paper. We can deal with those items on Tuesday and Wednesday of next week in anticipation of receiving the legislation from the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE TO REVIEW SENATE COMMITTEE REPORT ENTITLED "THEY SERVED—WE CARE"—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jack Marshall, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, November 20, 1984, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to review and update the recommendations contained in the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, entitled: "They Served—We Care", tabled in the Senate on 20th October, 1981, and to enquire into any matter related thereto; and

That the papers and evidence taken on the subject and the work accomplished during the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the Committee.

[Senator Stanbury.]

He said: Honourable senators, it is with a great deal of satisfaction that I rise to speak to the motion which I placed on the order paper on Tuesday, November 20, that the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science entitled, "They Served—We Care," tabled in the Senate on October 20, 1981, be referred back to the newly-constituted Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee for updating and with the objective of directing once again the attention of the government to the necessity for implementing the recommendations contained therein. I do so at this first opportunity in the new session because time is of the essence in our efforts to remove some of the still existing inequities in the Veterans' Charter.

Honourable senators, I am inspired to make this request because, by recent government action, two other Senate committee's recommendations, which affect some 51,200 disability pensioners and some 6,500 widows of pensioners in a most positive way—recommendations that were long sought after by veterans' associations across the nation—will, at long last, be realized. This means that three of the seven recommendations of the committee have now been accepted by the government.

I am sure that honourable senators, including my colleague, the former chairman of the committee, Senator Bonnell, and other members of the committee who worked so diligently to produce the report, will agree with this new commitment and statement of purpose by the Honourable George Hees, the new Minister of Veterans Affairs, who has acted in record time to commit some $22 million to pay another long-overdue instalment of the debt of recognition to our Canadian veterans, their survivors and their dependents who have deserved generous treatment from a society which owes so much to their wartime service and sacrifice.

Honourable senators, before dealing with the recommendations in the report, which must be reviewed and recommended to the government for action, I beg the indulgence of honourable senators to explain briefly the details of the changes that will come about—announced by the Minister on November 13—because, unfortunately, they seem to have gone unnoticed by veterans and a large segment of the public.

The first amendment in the provisions has to do with the basic rate of pension. By way of background, in 1973, the Woods Committee which studied the Pension Act recommended that the basic rate of pension should equal the average of the composite of five selected categories of unskilled public service workers. That recommendation was accepted. The committee also recommended that the formula should remain stable and that the rate of pension should maintain parity. Unfortunately, however, no mechanism was put in place to ensure that that would happen. When the basic rate of pension falls behind the amount compatible with the formula, an act of Parliament is required to bring it up to that level. As a result, the basic rate now lags behind what it should be by some $611 a year. This has been the case for several years. Each time this happens, the veterans' organizations have to come begging for an amendment to the act to correct that discrepancy.

Under the new provisions, the Pension Act will be amended to provide that the basic rate will be changed each year to reflect the same percentage increase as the increase in the consumer price index or the increase in the average composite wage, whichever is the greater. This will remedy a situation which all veterans' organizations have considered grossly inequitable, and which for many years they have demanded should be changed. That change will cost approximately $14 million annually and will benefit approximately 51,200 disability pensioners.

● (1500)

It is worthwhile mentioning that on April 6, 1982, the then Minister of Veterans Affairs responded to our recommendation as follows:

The Royal Canadian Legion and the National Council of Veterans Associations will be making a formal joint presentation to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs on this subject in the very near future, and while honourable senators may be assured that I have discussed this proposal at length with my officials, I do not wish to prejudge the evidence which will be presented by Canada's two major veterans' organizations.

That, as I say, was on April 6, 1982. It is now two and a half years since the minister's statement, and there should be no further excuse, particularly in view of the fact that legislation will have to be drafted and still more time will be lost.

As a result of the declaration by the minister, the urgency of the situation is realized and it now appears that we shall see legislation coming before Parliament in the very near future.

To my mind, the more prominent provision announced by the minister will finally recognize a group of widows whom I refer to as Canada's forgotten heroes. They are the widows who had to provide their husbands with constant care, because in a great many cases the veteran could not be left alone. Those widows of veterans were restricted in their opportunity to share in the freedom enjoyed by others to pursue new careers, and were also restricted in their ability to participate with their spouses in achieving a much better way of life. I am not aware of any concrete evidence indicating that any other group, other than veterans' groups and women's organizations, has come to the forefront in recent years to protest against the government's reluctance to recognize the principle of equality in the many areas of society in which women participate. I do not know of any other group that has brought this inequity to the attention of the government. We should therefore commend the efforts of our lady senators who were on that committee—Senator Bielish, Senator Rousseau and former Senator Bird—for their active interest in securing this provision.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Marshall: In order to give honourable senators some background to the provision I should explain that under the act disability pensions at present carry additional allowances for spouses and children. When a pensioner dies, at the end of the month in which he dies the pension ceases and dependents receive survivors' benefits. But that may represent a substantial decrease in family income. The new provision provides a more reasonable period for the widow to adjust to a lower level of family income, to the extent that the disability pension and pay at the time of death will now continue to be paid for 12 months following the death of the pensioner, if it is greater than the widow's pension paid to the surviving spouse of a deceased veteran. The cost of that provision is approximately $7 million per year.

Approximately 6,200 widows will benefit from the change, and it will remove the shock of an immediately reduced income at a time when the widow is under great emotional stress in having to adjust to the death of her spouse. The change also provides needed time for adjustment to changed financial circumstances.

For example, honourable senators, prior to the announcement of the change on November 13, the widow of a deceased veteran who died in receipt of a 50 per cent disability pension, which now amounts to $678.89, was entitled to a widow's pension of $814.67, which is the equivalent of that for a married pensioner at 60 per cent. The amount of benefit was fair up to that point because she was entitled to $135.78 more to allow her to adjust.

However, for some reason, in the case of those veterans who were in receipt of more than 60 per cent at the time of death, their spouse lost $67.89 for every 5 per cent of pension over 60 per cent immediately on the first of the following month.

It is difficult to reconcile that in the case of a married veteran at 50 per cent disability pension, who at death was receiving $678.89, his wife would receive $135.78 more while in the case of a veteran at the 70 per cent married rate who at his death was getting $950.44, his wife's income would be reduced by $135.78.

To carry it further, the rate of pension for a veteran at 100 per cent disability and his wife is $1,357.78. Prior to this change, which will come into effect on the death of the veteran, the pension was reduced to $814.67 on the first of the month immediately following, which meant a reduction of $543.11.

Under the change, the widow will now be able to receive the original amount for 12 months—that is, at the married rate—and then be reduced to $814.67, indexed each year for the rest of her life.

It means that for the first year after the death of a veteran at 100 per cent disability, the widow will receive an extra $6,517.32 and for every 5 per cent lower she will receive a proportionate variation of that amount.

Another group of veterans even more seriously affected were those entitled to an allowance for exceptional incapacity and an attendance allowance over and above the 100 per cent disability pension. In other words, they were entitled to an additional amount of pension because of the extent by which their disability exceeded that which would entitle them to the 100 per cent rate. This provision will benefit another 300 widows at an annual cost of $1 million.

The veterans to whom I am referring are those who were receiving an allowance over and above that for 100 per cent disability and, as I mentioned, an allowance for exceptional incapacity. Those veterans are mostly war amputees who were getting a much greater amount than the 100 per cent disability rate because of the intense severity of their condition. In the exceptional incapacity grade, they could receive, depending on their condition, from $191 to $575 a month. In the case of the attendance allowance, there are ten grades of variations, from $115 to $718. The widows of such veterans, as honourable senators will realize, by having their allowance reduced the first month following the death of the veteran, could lose $7,000, $8,000, or $9,000 a year immediately following the death of their husbands. I am sure that the Executive Director of the War Amputees, Mr. Cliff Chadderton—who has raised this matter before our committee on many occasions and before other committees throughout the years—is probably the happiest man in Canada today after hearing that announcement, because the war amputees asked for only a three months' extension of the benefits in order to allow the widows of veterans, who have given constant care over the years, to adjust to their new circumstances. The widows of such deserving veterans who fall into that category will now benefit from the humanitarian action of the new Minister of Veterans Affairs, the Honourable George Hees.

I am surprised that the announcement, which impacts to such a great extent on the financial status of many thousands of widows of veterans, did not receive greater attention. I also feel strongly that much credit should go to the National Council of Veterans and the Royal Canadian Legion for pressing this serious inequity on the government through the parliamentary committees of both chambers over the past 20 years; and I repeat that this chamber can take a good share of the credit because of its committee deliberations in 1981. Strangely enough, the minister at that time gave the following reason for not accepting the recommendation:

The result of the Senate recommendation is that the widow of any disability pensioner who received pension at the rate of from 5 per cent to 55 per cent at the time of his death would receive more pension after his death than he received during his lifetime for his disability at the married rate.

I cannot see why that answer was prepared for him, since, as I have already mentioned, when a veteran at the 50 per cent married rate died, his widow received 10 per cent more. There is therefore a contradiction in the reason for not accepting it.

• (1510)

To carry it even further, under the War Veterans Allowance Act, that veteran who was not disabled but has the right to a War Veterans Allowance Pension by virtue of the fact that he has reached the age of 60 years and had served overseas, even for one day, after his death his widow receives the married rate of approximately $987 for 12 months, and this has been going on for many years.

[Senator Marshall.]

It is heartening to note that the government has now accepted, almost in their entirety, recommendations 1, 2, and 3 of the Senate committee report. However, there still remain four more recommendations in the same report that must be addressed urgently in order to honour totally Canada's commitment to its veterans. We are thankful to the government and the new minister for recognizing the anomalies and correcting them, and it is to the credit of the minister that he acted so promptly after taking office to correct two glaring omissions in the charter. Let me hasten to say, honourable senators, that I do not deduct any credit from past ministers who were pressed to put these amendments into force. However, I think most credit should go to the Honourable George Hees for acting so quickly and recognizing this omission at this late date in the veterans' war.

I say with great respect to those in this chamber who despaired in their questioning of my leader, of the government's commitment to social justice, that the payment of $22 million to over 50,000 veterans of Canada, their wives or widows, is an exemplary commitment to social justice.

Honourable senators, despite the fact that, as I have said on countless occasions, Canada has veterans legislation that is as good as or better than that of any other country in the world, I must reiterate that time is passing much too quickly, and it is almost too late to introduce amendments to the legislation in order to comply with our remaining obligation to our veterans. These remaining inequities are addressed in the same report, and I would like to touch on them, and I hope that the Senate will support the intention expressed in the motion to update the report, with the objective of having the government acknowledge and consider the recommendations and implement them as soon as possible.

Recommendation number seven addresses the inequity of the scale of compensation under the Prisoner Of War Compensation Act. For those who may not be aware, in 1973 a study was commissioned by the then Minister of Veterans Affairs who commissioned Dr. J. Douglas Hermann to study the effects of incarceration on Hong Kong and other veterans. As a result, compensation was established, separate from the disability pensions to be awarded to all prisoners of war, and a schedule of compensation was established and approved by Parliament, the rate of payment to be proportionate to the period of incarceration. The rates were as follows: from zero to one-and-a-half years, the prisoner of war would receive 10 per cent; from one-and-a-half years to two-and-a-half years, the prisoner of war would receive 15 per cent; two-and-a-half years and over, the prisoner of war would receive 20 per cent.

The President for the Dieppe Veterans, Mr. George Giguere, a dedicated and devoted Canadian veteran who has spent his post-war years fighting for the rights of prisoners of war, contends—and justifiably so—that the scale is not fair. He offers the argument that a prisoner who was incarcerated for two-and-a-half years or more and who suffered much more stress, hardship, and lack of nutrition, who was beaten daily for months and chained for months, receives only 10 per cent more than the comrade who spent only a week or a month in a POW camp. I am sure that honourable senators will agree that the schedule of payments should be revised to reflect an awareness of the realities that exist.

Further, the Statute Law Amendment Act of 1980 introduced a number of changes in veterans legislation, and these have been studied over the years by the committee. One of these amendments removed the Canadian residence requirement for widows and children of recipients who die outside of Canada. However, veterans themselves must still return to Canada and reside here for a period of one year before they become eligible for benefits. Once in receipt of an allowance, however, they can then leave Canada and resume their residence abroad.

Your committee supported the 1980 amendment in this respect, but finds it difficult to understand why the legislation does not allow qualified veterans to have the same residence rights as the widows and children of recipients who have died while living outside of Canada. At this stage in time when World War II veterans are approximately 65 and World War I veterans are in the 84/85 age bracket, most veterans find it difficult, and often impossible, to return to Canada to establish residence in order to comply with the present legislation. Often they are too poor, too old or too ill to be able to travel or to establish a new domicile in Canada for a year. Frequently, they have family ties where they are now living that make it financially and psychologically out of the question. Most of the veterans involved, especially those living in the United Kingdom and in the United States, feel that Canada is ignoring their war-time service by forcing them to return to Canada for a year before becoming eligible for benefits.

The question we must ask ourselves, honourable senators, is: What are we proving by forcing the veteran to return to Canada? The only thing we are doing is creating more hardship because the veteran, if entitled to the allowance, receives it while he is fulfilling the requirement to stay in Canada for a year. He is, however, faced with the added expense of living accommodation and food in two countries and he is denied a year of family life, to no one's benefit.

Honourable senators, we should remember that that veteran was given a pension because he served in a theatre of war in a far off country when service was required. He is receiving a pension for that service; he is not pensioned because he happens to live in Canada, now that the war is over.

I would like to quote a paragraph from a letter which I have received from the Newfoundlanders (Overseas) Association. This letter was written by the chairman of that association to some Newfoundland MPs back in July of 1978. He said:

I would like to stress the importance I place upon the special plea that we make for those who, for various reasons, are unable to go and spend a year in Canada. Some are very ill indeed, and are forbidden by their doctors to travel. We have several widows, and one wife who has been deserted by her husband . . . She has failing eyesight and finds it extremely difficult to manage.

He mentions another veteran living in Macclesfield, Cheshire, and says:

He has scarcely worked since he left the Royal Navy in 1946, due to nervous depression, but his wife Dorothy has worked as a cook in a local hospital and managed to look after Roy and rear two sons as well. This gallant lady has now reached the age of sixty, and therefore had to relinquish her job on 30th June.

He goes on further to say that this lady had planned to take her husband to Newfoundland for the year's residence, but recently received a letter from the people with whom she planned to reside in Newfoundland to say that they would be unable to accommodate her due to problems of their own. The chairman went on to state:

These are the sort of people for whom I beg the Government of Canada to make a special concession.

Honourable senators, we recently had reference to a plea from the Agent General of Nova Scotia, who is stationed in England. This plea was referred to in this chamber by Senator Macdonald in his address on Remembrance Day, for which he should be commended.

Honourable senators, I finally refer to recommendation number 4 and urge that all necessary steps be taken immediately to eliminate the unacceptable delays in processing applications and pension adjudications which have accumulated over the years. This recommendation is very general in its content, but in my 17 years of dealing with various aspects of veterans affairs in Parliament, I have found there is nothing that is more disturbing, frustrating, time-consuming and non-productive to the veteran in many cases than the process of dealing with pension applications and appeals. Strangely enough, little or no fault can be placed on those agencies of the Department of Veterans Affairs responsible because in each case they are interpreting the act as it exists. However, the fault certainly lies in the fact that, in too many cases, there has been a lack of compassion in dealing with veterans' cases and the process is a maze of administrative steps. Rather, the strictest interpretation of legislation has been zealously adhered to, to the detriment of hundreds of veterans who have passed on with a feeling that they were betrayed, and that betrayal has translated itself into a feeling of bitterness felt by those left behind. Without going to the inception of the Veterans Charter, let me quote the intent of Bill C-203, which arose out of the Wood's Committee Report in March 1971. It is something everybody should remember. Paragraph 1.1 states as follows:

● (1520)

The provisions of this act shall be liberally construed and interpreted to the end that the recognized obligation of the people of Canada . . . to provide compensation to those members of the forces who have been disabled or have died as a result of military service, and to their dependants, may be fulfilled.

There are many other sections in the act which apply and which I feel are not being interpreted in accordance with the intent with which they were written. Section 26 deals with the benefit of the doubt. It says in part:

In deciding the issues involved in this appeal, the board is required to draw from all of the circumstances of the case and all of the evidence presented to it every reasonable fact and credible, uncontradicted evidence submitted by the appellant, and in weighing the evidence presented to it resolve any doubt in favour of the appellant.

Honourable senators are probably getting anxious to leave but I shall not be too much longer.

I want to put on record some things that will show why it takes so long to adjudicate a pension from the time of application to the time of the final decision. For some reason or other, in the pension process there are 13 steps one must follow. There are two steps involved in the first application, five steps to follow if one goes before the Entitlement Board, which may happen if the veteran is not satisfied with the decision of the CPC, and if he wants to appeal the decision of the Entitlement Board he has to go to the Pension Review Board where there are six more steps to be taken. These steps do not include all those that must be taken in connection with the medical examination and the assessment board. I think these steps should be on the record and I hope that I can get unanimous consent to attach them to the Debates of the Senate. If I can presume that I have unanimous consent, I would like to give honourable senators an example of what goes on in the Canadian Pension Commission. I have here a fact sheet which tells me that as of February 29, 1984, the average time required to adjudicate a first application is 136 days, and the average time required by the commission to prepare documentation and to promulgate the entitlement assessment decision is six and a half months. The length of time from receipt of a notice of appeal to issuance of a decision by the Pension Review Board is approximately 12 months. It is broken down as follows: Two months' delay for the receipt of documentation in the form of a statement of case from the Canadian Pension Commission, seven months' delay for the representative of the veteran to prepare the case and list it for hearing before the board and a two to three months' delay from the date the case is heard and the decision is promulgated. Honourable senators, that is too long.

I would like to quote from two letters I received. The first one is dated October 22, 1984 and is from a District Pensions Advocate. It says in part:

—I have now received communication from (the) Senior Area Advocate in Charlottetown who will be representing (the veteran). (He) advises that the Bureau of Pensions Advocates is awaiting a Statement of Case from the Canadian Pension Commission. When this arrives the docket will be prepared for a Hearing. It is estimated that because of the large number of cases ahead of (this veteran), the same will not come for Hearing earlier than the summer of 1985.

[Senator Marshall.]

This letter is dated October, so we are talking about some nine months later. It is too long. This second letter also serves to illustrate the workings of the process. It reads in part:

—I am pleased to advise you of the status of (the veteran's) claim. (The veteran) received a negative decision from the Canadian Pension Commission on January 16, 1984. He wrote to us on March 28, 1984 and his letter was received on April 3, 1984. On April 17, 1984, we sent him appeal forms which were signed and returned to us on April 30, 1984. These forms were forwarded to the Canadian Pension Commission and on August 27, 1984 we received a Statement of Case from the Canadian Pension Commission.

So it takes about six and a half months just to make up a Statement of Case on what the pensioner is asking for. The letter goes on:

On August 28, 1984, we sent the veteran a Certificate of Readiness which was signed by him and returned to us on September 4, 1984. On September 5, 1984, we forwarded a Notice of Readiness to Proceed to Entitlement Board to our Head Office and the case was certified as ready for hearing on September 13, 1984.

As of this date, (the veteran's) case is waiting for a hearing date. The Canadian Pension Commission has scheduled hearings for the week of November 26, 1984, however, the Rolls are complete for the next hearing. I do not know when the Canadian Pension Commission will schedule new hearings in North Bay, however, on the basis of past experience, I would assume that new hearings will be scheduled early in the next year.

This example is the same as countless other examples.

Finally, something has to be wrong with the system when, despite the fact that we have reached the stage of celebrating fortieth anniversaries to commemorate Canada's contribution in far off lands, hundreds of veterans—too many of whom are now in the age bracket ranging from 64 to 85—are still pleading for recognition of a condition inflicted on their bodies which arose out of or has become aggravated as a result of war. They are beginning to protest to the point where new veterans organizations are becoming activated at this late date. I can think of four new organizations that have been formed within the last 10 years. The North East New Brunswick Veterans Association of Bathurst, New Brunswick, with which I have become very familiar, has a membership of some 1200 whose main battle, along with other problems, is to ensure the availability of chronic care beds in their part of the province to look after the aged. A more recent organization, started in 1977 and known as The Veterans Union, headquartered in Roberval, Quebec, held their first meeting in that year. They have been in touch with me on questions of how to deal with veterans' problems. Another organization in Quebec known as The Federations of Canadian Veterans was recently formed. The title of the most recent organization expresses the futility of a few hundred veterans. It is known as Suffering Veterans and it sprang up only last year. At present I have some 125 active files, and still counting, from veterans who have become associated with this group from almost every province from British Columbia to Newfoundland. It is true that some of the cases presented can never be approved, but too many show a too passive consideration, and for many I have completed the circle of reconsideration, review and appeal to the point that I am getting too many letters saying "Thank you very much for your help, but my husband died."

Honourable senators, we are thankful that our governments have been considerate enough to recognize that a citizen on reaching the age of 65 is entitled to a reasonable pension. Canadians are thankful that a citizen who is hurt at work can claim compensation for disablement through Workman's Compensation or the Canada Pension Plan. I understand it takes the adjudication process of these organizations no more than four months. Yes, honourable senators, and governments have been generous enough to grant allowances to veterans who served overseas and who were not disabled, when they reached the age of 60 on a means basis, and they are entitled at present to some $987 per month at the married rate. They are further entitled to drugs and can earn $3700 per year if they are able, without penalty. This is as a result of veterans legislation over the years, and we can give credit to whatever government of the day brought it into being.

This veteran receives the equivalent of a disability pensioner at a rate of 70 per cent, and 70 per cent is quite a disability. His wife, at his death, is entitled to a continuation of the married rate of allowance for 12 months.

Here we are in 1984 still unable to devise a method to put into place a reasonable length of time to process an application for pension. Instead, it is taking up to two, three and four years to reach a final decision which, to my mind, is embarrassing, but worse still, blots out the good things we have done for our veterans over the years. Despite the many studies and task force reports that have been introduced, we are still in the same or even in a worse position.

But there is still hope, honourable senators, and my hope has been reinforced by the declaration of the new minister of his intention to hasten the process of adjudication to the benefit of the veteran. Judging by his actions, and I have been close to them since we came to power, we will see positive results in the near future. I say that we must see positive results.

Therefore, I ask this chamber to give consent to my motion that the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology consider this matter so that we may revive our thrust to monitor the activities of those responsible, and to help ensure the continued fair treatment of and to fulfill finally our obligations to these gallant Canadians and their dependants.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might pose a question to the Honourable Senator Marshall. Naturally I support the motion that he has presented to us. I believe that it, again, underlines the importance of the work of our committees in that our work is really never finished. When a report by some other body is tabled, everyone leaves, and it is left up to the officials to do what they want with the report, whereas Senate reports are continuously monitored with respect to their progress, and I commend the Honourable Senator Marshall for bringing this motion because it will continue the work undertaken by the chairman of the committee, the Honourable Senator Bonnell, as exemplified in the report: "They Served—We Care."

The question I should like to ask the honourable senator is: Why does the motion not contain the usual paragraph with respect to the engaging of the services of counsel and so forth, to provide for adequate staff so that the committee can fulfill its function and responsibilities to the Senate?

Senator Marshall: I am satisfied that the matter will be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology and that the chairman of that committee will look in his budget for whatever funds are required.

During the last Parliament this matter was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, and I think that is the way things should work—that is, if the responsibility for the subject falls under the umbrella of a particular committee, that that committee should conduct whatever investigation is required.

While I am on my feet, honourable senators, I neglected to ask for agreement by honourable senators that the document containing the pension process details be appended to the Debates of the Senate of this day. I now ask for that agreement.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of document see appendix, p. 235.)

On motion of Senator Neiman, for Senator Bonnell, debate adjourned.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE TO STUDY CANADIAN RELATIONS WITH COUNTRIES OF THE MIDDLE EAST AND NORTH AFRICA—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Heath Macquarrie, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, November 27, 1984, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs be authorized to continue its examination and report on Canadian relations with countries of the Middle East and North Africa;

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination and consideration of such legislation and other matters as may be referred to it, at such rates of remuneration and reimbursement as the Committee may determine, and to compensate witnesses by reimbursement of travelling and living expenses, if required, in such amount as the Committee may determine;

That the Committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate; and

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject during the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the Committee.

He said: Honourable senators, I move the motion as set out under item No. 2.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Explain.

Senator Macquarrie: I am reserving my right under rule 31 to speak at a later date while awaiting the pearls of wisdom from other honourable senators.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Grafstein, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, December 4, 1984, at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 233)

PENSION PROCESS

ENTITLEMENT (Section 68 of the Act)(A) FIRST APPLICATION

- 1) The veteran files a first application with the Canadian Pension Commission.
- 2) The veteran's representative* prepares the submission for CPC's consideration.
- 3) CPC issues its decision.

(B) ENTITLEMENT BOARD

- 1) If dissatisfied, the veteran can request an Entitlement Board hearing for his case to be looked at again. He or she may appear to give oral testimony and call witnesses in support of the claim.
- 2) CPC prepares a statement of case and sends a copy to the veteran and his/her representative* to assist in preparing a submission.
- 3) Representative* files a Notice of readiness that he/she is ready to present the case.
- 4) The CPC appoints three Commissioners who travel to the pertinent district (i.e. Halifax, Vancouver, etc...) and constitute an Entitlement Board to hear the case.
- 5) The Entitlement Board issues its decision.

(C) PENSION REVIEW BOARD

- 1) If the veteran is still dissatisfied, the veteran can lodge an appeal with the Pension Review Board.
- 2) The Statement of Case is prepared by CPC and sent to PRB for distribution to veteran's representative*.
- 3) Representative* notifies PRB of readiness to proceed.
- 4) Case is listed and heard by PRB members (3 members are required by the Act).
- 5) PRB decision is issued.
- 6) If the veteran is still dissatisfied, he can appeal to the Federal Court of Canada or pursuant to subsection 77(3) of the Pension Act file a leave to vary the PRB decision on the basis of new evidence error in law or in fact.

ASSESSMENT (Section 67 of the Act)(A) CPC/MEDICAL EXAMINATION

- 1) Following a favourable ruling that it be at first decision, Entitlement Board or PRB level, the veteran is called in for a medical examination by a pension medical examiner to determine the extent (in terms of percentage) of his disability. The Pension Act in Schedules A and B sets the actual amounts of money depending under which category the disability falls.
- 2) The Canadian Pension Commission uses its Table of Disabilities to determine the category applicable in each case and issues its ruling.

(B) ASSESSMENT BOARD

- 1) If the veteran is not satisfied, he/she can request a hearing by an Assessment Board of the Canadian Pension Commission pursuant to Section 67 of the Pension Act.
- 2) The same procedures which are used in Entitlement Board cf. B, 2 to 5.

(C) PENSION REVIEW BOARD

The same procedures apply.

---

* The veteran can be represented free of charge at the three levels of adjudication by an Advocate of the Bureau of Pensions Advocates, a Service Officer of the Royal Canadian Legion or the War Amputations of Canada. He/she can also secure at his/her own expense the service of a private solicitor.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, December 4, 1984

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-7, to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Roblin, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

CUSTOMS ACT CUSTOMS TARIFF

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-9, to amend the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Roblin, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

QUESTION PERIOD

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SOCIAL BENEFITS—ISSUANCE OF DISCUSSION PAPER

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

In his recent economic statement, the Minister of Finance indicated that the government, in pursuit of its policy of restraint, would "examine our child benefit, old age security and unemployment insurance systems to see how they may be improved."

This caused immediate anxiety across the country because of the fact that the party which the leader has the honour to guide in this house campaigned on a solemn pledge that universality of social programs is "a sacred trust not to be tampered with." Those were the words of the Prime Minister.

This morning, on the CBC, we learned that this examination will not only begun, but the Minister of National Health and Welfare is planning a special Christmas gift for the Canadian people in the form of a discussion paper on possible changes to family benefits.

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate confirm the timing of that discussion paper and assure this house that it will be available to honourable senators before the Christmas break so that they will be able to study it and discuss it in their regions before returning in the new year?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, before I get to the meat of the matter, I should like to join in the obvious expression of welcome that has been tendered to my honourable friend who has spoken, I think, for the first time in the chamber. Perhaps she will allow me to add my wishes to those expressed in another way.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: I know my honourable friend does not expect me to subscribe to all of the preamble to her question, but the nub of it is to know whether or not the government intends to issue a discussion paper on the subject she has mentioned, and when it intends to issue it.

If that is her question, as I believe it to be, I will try to get that information for her.

Senator Fairbairn: Thank you. I should like to thank the Leader of the Government for his kind welcome. I do not think he would disagree if I were to reveal that we are old friends, going back to the days when I was a very young reporter in the Parliamentary Press Gallery doing my best to chronicle the career of the aggressive, then Premier of Manitoba.

• (1410)

I should also like to thank the leader for undertaking to find out the timing of the issuance of this discussion paper for the house, particularly in view of the indication in this morning's news report by the Minister of National Health and Welfare that not only were these programs under review but cuts were already anticipated. He talked about a number of options on which such savings might be better used, including community clinics and medical research. He said that such suggestions opened up all kinds of "new vistas and possibilities and that's what we're looking at." He was specifically asked whether another option might include paying down the deficit, and the minister replied, "Well, that's always a consideration that can be looked at. . . . We have not discounted any options."

My question—indeed, my entreaty—to the Leader of the Government is: Will he use his considerable skills and persuasion with his cabinet colleagues to insist that, should the government persist in its notion of doing away with universality, any savings made will go directly back to the most needy within the scope of our social programs and not to other research projects, however well-intentioned, and certainly not to paying down the deficit?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am not entirely sure how persuasive I am with my colleagues. I note that I am not always as persuasive here as I would like to be. I hope I have better luck with them. I can assure my honourable friend that while I cannot answer her question in full, I can support her view that consideration should be given, in the first instance, to those who have a claim upon the public's support as being citizens in need.

Senator Fairbairn: I have a final supplementary question. I am asking this question, honourable senators, because this issue is of such desperate importance to Canadians and, indeed, goes to the very heart of the party which I support. Sometimes it is often better to know the worst that is going to hit you than having to agonize over uncertainties, and this is what is happening today.

I have already mentioned exactly what the Minister of National Health and Welfare said this morning about where the social programs' savings might go. I now draw the attention of the Leader of the Government to the words of the Prime Minister quoted only two weeks ago on November 17, in the Toronto Star, when he was asked about the issue of changing social programs. The question was:

If the result of this reflection were a decision to move away from universality, would the commitment be that all the money thus saved would be applied directly to giving more money to the neediest?

The Prime Minister replied:

There would be, there could be, no other reason.

The reporter asked:

It wouldn't be applied simply to the deficit?

The Prime Minister replied:

No, absolutely not. Absolutely not.

My question to the Leader of the Government is: Would he, once again, ask the Prime Minister to state clearly, as he did two weeks ago, that the policy of this government on funds for the young, the old and the poor will be to put them back into the cushion that was intended over the decades by all parties and not into a cushion for the deficit?

Senator Roblin: I am afraid that I can add nothing to what the Prime Minister has said. I think his statement speaks for itself.

STATISTICS CANADA

CANCELLATION OF 1986 CENSUS

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate that relates to the 1986 census. The line of Canadians who feel affected by the decision to cancel the 1986 census seems to be lengthening, the latest being the 5,000-member Canadian Homebuilders' Association who have asked the Minister of Supply and Services, the Honourable Harvie Andre, to reconsider the government's cancellation of the census.

The Leader of the Government will remember that on November 27 I asked him a question based on the uncertainty of the government's position regarding metric conversion, the effects of this uncertainty being quite widespread. To settle the concerns Canadians have as to exactly what the government's policy is on metric conversion, they are entitled to an answer to this question.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Yes, honourable senators, my friend is entitled to an answer, and it will be forthcoming in due course.

It seems to me that the minister in charge of that department made a statement recently in which he said that he hoped to have it by the end of the year. I presume that is the target.

Senator Frith: By way of a supplementary question, is the end of the year considered by the Leader of the Government as sufficiently "due"?

Senator Roblin: I am afraid I cannot add any more to the time-table I have given my honourable friend.

JUSTICE

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to address a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate on the subject of capital punishment.

I would like to find out what the intention of the government is—if it has formulated an intention—with respect to dealing with the subject of capital punishment.

May I begin by asking a very simple and short question: Is it the intention of the government to lay the question of capital punishment before the House of Commons and the Senate for consideration in this session of Parliament?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that question I cannot answer in categorical terms. The best I can do for my honourable friend is to tell him that, as I recollect the statement the Prime Minister made on this topic, it was that he hopes it will be dealt with by Parliament during this present Parliament, not this present session. Whether it will come up this session or later, I really cannot say at the present time.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government for his comment, but what intrigued me about the Prime Minister's answer was its indefiniteness; that he did not go even as far as to say that this matter would be dealt with in this Parliament. He said that he hoped it and other matters might be discussed.

Therefore, I ask the Leader of the Government: Is it now possible that the question of capital punishment will not be placed before Parliament, not only in this session but in the life of this Parliament itself?

Senator Roblin: I must say that no cabinet consideration has been given to the time and nature of the placing of the matter of capital punishment before this Parliament, so I cannot give an authoritative answer from that point of view.

[Senator Frith.]

Honourable senators, I can only say that my interpretation of what the Prime Minister has said is that it will be discussed in Parliament before the present parliament is over.

Senator MacEachen: It is the inadequacy of that position that cries out for clarification. Surely, we ought to know whether this important subject will be placed before us in this session or in this Parliament.

The Leader of the Government cannot tell me that it will be placed before us in this session, and he cannot tell me whether it will be placed before us in this Parliament. He has told me that it has not even been considered by the government.

Is it a fact that the new government has not considered and decided upon, in any way, the question of capital punishment?

Senator Roblin: I think I shall take my honourable friend's question as notice, since it requires some consideration, which I will give it.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, while the honourable leader is considering this matter, to which we will return after he has had an opportunity to give it the necessary reflection, I would like to draw his attention to a statement which appeared in the Speech from the Throne, which reads as follows:

The recent murders of several policemen in Canada have shocked our people. Parliament shares the sense of sadness and loss felt by the families and colleagues of those policemen who died on duty.

Could the Leader of the Government explain why this sentence was placed in the Speech from the Throne, in the absence of any consideration of this subject by the government? Its having attained this important place in the Speech from the Throne, one would conclude that the government had given it some consideration. I just wonder why it is there.

• (1420)

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has expressed his interest in the question of capital punishment. I have stated to him that I would give the matter my consideration with a view to giving him further information. I think that that should deal with the matter he has just mentioned.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate and has to do with confidence and interest rates.

In early October, the Minister of Finance estimated the level of average interest rates over the next five years. As I recollect it, he expected the average to be 6.5 per cent. My question is this: In view of the fact that that estimate indicated confidence in the economy, has there been any change in that confidence that would result in a change in the approach of government to interest rates?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should first like to make a comment on the attribution to the Minister of Finance of the statement regarding interest rates. I believe that he was reasonably cautious in stating the assumptions on which those forecasts were made. Of course, those assumptions form an exceedingly important part of his estimate of the situation and cannot be divorced from it. Only time will tell whether those assumptions are correct.

I must tell my honourable friend that I am not quite clear about the drift of his question. Is he trying to ask me whether or not the state of public confidence has changed over the last little while? Is that the question?

Senator Sinclair: I wanted to know whether the Minister of Finance still has the measure of confidence that gave him the feeling that interest rates over the next five years were going to go down to 6.5 per cent. Is that still his view?

Senator Roblin: Since the statement was made scarcely two months ago, I assume that it is still the view of the minister at this time. But I have to say that we will probably find that nobody can predict, with any great deal of certainty, satisfaction or accuracy, the course of interest rates. I think we will all agree that they are best guesses, particularly when they are estimated over that length of time. We will simply have to wait and see how things turn out. I think it is unreasonable for me to expect the minister to be able to forecast accurately into the future on a set of assumptions which may or may not prove to be solid.

Senator Sinclair: If that is so, honourable senators, has there been a change in the assumptions that would result in today's issue to the Canadian public at 12 per cent into the next century?

Senator Roblin: I think the answer is that you have to price bonds at the price at which you think they will sell at any particular moment in time. There is no other way I know of floating an issue.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: There is short-term.

Senator Roblin: There is short-term, but I think it is also a matter of some interest to space bond issues over a reasonable period of time so that they do not all come due on the same day. But if my honourable friend is trying to get me to make an authoritative statement on the interest rate the government has attached to those bonds, I frankly confess that I am not able to do so. If he wants me to try to get some further information from the minister, I would be glad to do so.

Senator Sinclair: I thank the Leader of the Government. I would, indeed, like him to try to get some further information from the minister. I would be interested in knowing what proportion of the public debt he is going to keep short-term and what proportion he is going to make longer term, say over five years. What is his plan?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I am not altogether sure that I will be able to provide an answer that satisfies my honourable friend, but I will do my best. As this is obviously not a question that can be dealt with in the oral Question Period, I will provide the honourable senator with a written answer.

Senator Sinclair: Then, can the Leader of the Government tell me whether or not he believes that 35 per cent of the public debt being in demand money is excessive?

Senator Roblin: The honourable senator should really address that question to the former finance minister, because he is the one who arranged it.

Senator Sinclair: With all due respect to the Leader of the Government, I believe that the Minister of Finance has just made a very fulsome statement about one of the biggest demand money propositions that have come before us, namely, the last issue of Canada Savings Bonds.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Steuart: They should check your record.

Senator Roblin: Our record will get a lot longer before you get through—a lot longer.

Senator Steuart: And a lot grubbier.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): You should live to see the end of it!

THE ECONOMY

MANITOBA—CANCELLATION OF CONSTRUCTION OF WINNIPEG RESEARCH CENTRE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. On November 14 I asked him some questions regarding the cancellation of the construction of the Winnipeg research centre. At that time my honourable friend indicated that the Minister of Finance, the minister responsible, would be in Winnipeg shortly. I believe he was there on November 26. My question is: Did the Leader of the Government attend that meeting, and was he invited to attend?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should tell my honourable friend that when the minister announced that he was going to go to Winnipeg, I was instrumental in arranging for him, the minister responsible, to meet with a number of interested parties in Winnipeg. I considered that my intervention to that extent might be helpful to the minister. I myself did not attend the meeting, and I do not believe that I was invited.

Senator Molgat: In view of the Leader of the Government's background knowledge of matters in Manitoba, I am frankly surprised that he was not invited to that meeting, particularly when, in reply to my questions, he stated quite clearly:

I shall be available; and if my services are required, I shall be glad to render them.

Are we then to assume that cabinet ministers, when they visit a province, do not ask other members of the cabinet to participate in discussion of questions which have serious implications for that province, particularly when they relate to matters of which my honourable friend has such knowledge?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I would not have my honourable friend assume that attendance at meetings is the most useful service that I can render to the people of Manitoba. There are other services that I can render which are perhaps of equal importance, or perhaps even more important, and I am certainly neglecting none of those opportunities.

Senator D. G. Steuart: Like looking after memos and tapes!

Senator Molgat: Is it correct, then, that my honourable friend was not invited to the meeting?

Senator Roblin: At this moment I cannot recall that I was invited; but I may be subject to correction.

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. During the past week or so I have met with a number of native groups in British Columbia, among whom there is a great deal of concern over the future of what I consider to be an excellent program called the Native Economic Development Program. Can the Leader of the Government advise the Senate, or obtain information from the Minister of State for Small Businesses, as to the future of that program? Will it remain intact or will it be changed? Secondly, I understand that a number of applications for funding are now before the minister for his approval. I should like to know if and when the minister will start approving the many excellent projects that are before him for consideration.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not have the answer at the moment. As it is a rather detailed question, I shall provide the honourable senator with a written answer.

● (1430)

HUMAN RIGHTS

JAPANESE-CANADIANS—GOVERNMENT APOLOGY AND COMPENSATION

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have delayed answers in response to a number of oral questions, which I ask permission to have taken as read and printed in today's Hansard.

The first question was raised on November 13, 1984 by Senator Grafstein and deals with human rights and an apology to Japanese-Canadians.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on a point of order, if any particular senator wants his answer read into the record today, I presume that the leader of the Government will be glad to do so. I take it that the Leader is asking whether any senator has any objection to having the answers taken as read, which was the practice we followed in the last Parliament.

[Senator Molgat.]

Senator Roblin: I am prepared to read them, if that is the wish of the Senate. I think I stated at the time some of the questions were asked that they would receive a written answer—I think Senator Thompson's is one—so they will come as no surprise. However, I am in the hands of the Senate. If you want the answers read, I shall read them to you.

Senator Frith: If any particular senator wants his answer read, then the leader should read it, but if he or she does not, then we should proceed as the leader suggests.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

The Minister for Multiculturalism, Mr. Murta, advises that the Japanese-Canadians issue is under active consideration at the present moment. The Minister is in contact with members of the Japanese-Canadian community on an on-going basis. This issue is a major priority with the Minister and he hopes to have it resolved as soon as possible.

TRANSPORT

RAIL TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS—REGULATIONS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the next was asked by Senator Thompson on November 13, 1984 regarding the rail transportation of dangerous goods.

(The answer follows:)

Commissioner Grange made recommendations in fifteen principal areas. The government notes that almost all of these recommendations have been met either precisely or in intent, or are in the process of being met. Research, as recommended for some areas, is continuing.

Speed of trains

The speed of trains recommended by Grange to be 40 kmh (25 mph) was, after Public Hearings by the CTC set at 56 kmh (35 mph) for those trains carrying a selected list of commodities identified as being Special Dangerous Commodities. This decision was reviewed by the Inspector General for Transportation Safety who could not find measurable benefits that would flow from a reduction in speed to that recommended by Grange.

Length of trains

The length of trains was recommended by Grange to be limited to 1220 metres (4000 feet). The CTC, after public hearings found that enhanced safety would not be derived from implementing that recommendation and did not do so.

Roller Bearings

The recommendation was for all trains carrying dangerous goods to be comprised of only cars equipped with roller bearings. The Commission, after public hearings, noting that all new cars are being equipped with roller bearings, required that 75 per cent of the entire Canadian rail car fleet should be equipped with roller bearings by December 31, 1987. This requirement is being met by having all cars scheduled for retro-fit equipped with roller bearings.

The chemical manufacturers are subject to several federal statutes respecting the packaging and transportation of dangerous goods—they are, therefore, not self-regulating. Certain aspects of the road transport of dangerous goods are not presently covered by regulations but will be in the near future when the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act regulations are promulgated and come into force.

CN MARINE AND CN RAIL—REDUCTIONS IN SERVICE

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Senator Muir raised a question on November 14 regarding CN Marine and reduction of service, and a supplementary question was asked by Senator Thériault regarding Canadian National's plan for CN Marine.

With respect to the announced changes to the North-Sydney-Port-aux-Basques ferry services, the intention is to replace the present fleet of older ships by more modern efficient ships with greater capacity. This will be phased in over a period of three to five years commencing in the fall of 1985.

The vessel modernization program will result in the loss of approximately 250 jobs over this period. It is expected that a sizeable number of reductions can be achieved through attrition as employees take early retirement. Employee seniority rights will be protected and employees will have available to them a range of other benefits through their collective agreements, including: retraining programs, mobility incentives and supplementary unemployment benefits.

The ferries between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island are owned by CN Marine. In the future it is foreseen that CN Marine will be separated from CN corporate and will be established as a separate crown corporation in order to respond more effectively to the needs of Atlantic Canada.

IMMIGRATION

ENTRY OF SOVIET REFUGEES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this next question was raised on November 14, 1984 by Senator Grafstein regarding immigration and the entry of Soviet refugees when he asked what government policy is.

(The answer follows:)

There are two separate issues connected with the response to this question.

A parish of the Russian Orthodox Church in Toronto has been instrumental in initiating applications for Russian prisoners of war in the hands of Afghan resistance. As prisoners of war these people are not refugees and they do not fall within the scope Canada's ongoing humanitarian programs for the displaced and persecuted.

With regard to the two prisoners who were in the United Kingdom, I can confirm they did not apply to come to Canada. A spokesman for the Toronoto group interested in prisoners indicated on the national radio network that his organization was not interested in sponsoring these two ex-prisoners because of what he alleged to be personal problems on their part.

With regard to the group of six prisoners still in Pakistan, the law requires that all applicants be interviewed for immigration to ensure they comply with requirements including health and background. The health aspect is particularly important for persons being sponsored by private groups because they must assume the costs of settlement.

A special team was assembled in September by the Department of External Affairs to proceed to the border area of Afghanistan to locate the POWs and conduct the necessary examinations. An operation of less than 48 hours duration was envisaged in order to determine quickly whether these applicants were able to meet minimum selection requirements. The attempt had to be abandoned for 2 main reasons: sensitivity on the part of the local authorities and lack of time and facilities within the constraints these authorities imposed on Canada, to conduct medical tests essential in making determination as to whether these people are addicted to hard drugs or otherwise inadmissible to Canada.

Faced with an impasse, the Canadian Government was forced to explore other possibilities including obtaining interim protection and assistance by a third country. This is because it is believed these applicants have the same health problems as the two Russian soldiers. Approaches have been made to several countries to determine whether these prisoners could be removed to safer surroundings where they could be examined in a more orderly way.

The Red Cross was also approached to ensure that they may intervene and use their good offices if there is any threat to the lives of the prisoners as they have done with a number of other Russian soldiers from the area. These people have been in the hands of their captors for two years, hence there is no reason to believe they are in imminent danger of execution. The Red Cross program is the appropriate response if danger does arise.

The Commission of Employment and Immigration, in cooperation with the Department of External Affairs, is exploring ways to bring them to Canada.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—NEW APPROACHES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next question was raised by Senator MacEachen on November 15, 1984 regarding Canada-U.S. relations and new approaches to trade.

The Speech from the Throne indicated that the "government is exploring with our neighbour new approaches to a better and mutually advantageous trading relationship".

The Agenda appended to the Economic Statement outlined that "Canada is the only major industrial country without unimpeded access to a market large enough to permit substantial economies of scale. If we are to foster growth through trade, we must obtain more secure and improved access to foreign markets on the broadest possible scale. This would require, of course, that Canada would also have to move to increase access to its domestic market".

The Government undertook to examine, as a matter of priority, and in close consultation with the provinces and the private sector, all avenues to secure and enhance market access. This will include a careful analysis of options for bilateral trade liberalization with the United States in light of various private sector proposals, as well as preparations for and opportunities provided by a new round of multilateral trade negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

The examination would address, inter alia:

- (1) Tariffs and non-tariff measures;
- (2) Investment and access to technology;
- (3) The constraints freer trade would place on Canada's domestic economic policies;
- (4) New institutional approaches which might assist in the management of the Canada-U.S. trade and economic relationship;
- (5) Complementary or alternative approaches to sectoral trade liberalization; and
- (6) Implications arising from Canada-U.S. free trade arrangement.

Such approaches will be explored in due course as the analysis proceeds.

AGRICULTURE

MARKETING OF POTATOES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next question was raised by Senator Corbin on November 20, 1984 regarding the marketing of potatoes.

In reference to the status of the Commission of Inquiry on the Marketing of Potatoes in Eastern Canada, this Commission will be disbanded within the next month. The Potato Marketing situation in Eastern Canada has already received a lot of study, most notably in the public hearings and deliberations of the National Farm Products Marketing Council in 1980-81. The federal Government is aware that problems exist in the industry but believes that the Commission would not be a cost-effective means of furthering federal decision-making. The Government is directing the National Farm Products Marketing Council to receive and consider the submissions that industry groups and the provinces have been preparing for the Commission of Inquiry.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

EXPORTATION OF GRAIN TO PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the next question was raised on November 20, 1984 by Senator Buckwold regarding international trade and the exportation of grain to the People's Republic of China.

International Trade

Although the People's Republic of China is itself the world's largest producer of rice and total cereal grains, it has consistently imported large quantities of cereals, primarily wheat, for many years. The principal suppliers of wheat to China are the United States, Canada, Australia and Argentina.

WHEAT IMPORTS — CHINA

Crop Year	Argentina	Australia	Canada	U.S.	EEC	All Sources (millions of tonnes)
July/June
1979/80	0.5	3.6	2.6	1.9	0.1	8.7
1980/81	0.2	1.4	2.9	8.7	0.6	13.8
1981/82	0.2	1.5	3.0	8.3	0.1	13.0
1982/83	2.0	1.0	4.2	4.2	1.4	12.8
1983/84	1.0	1.7	3.8	3.1	0.1	9.7

SOURCE: IWC World Wheat Statistics.

A succession of four record domestic harvests has enabled China to reduce its dependence on imported grain. The output of all grains rose from 321 million tonnes in 1980 to a forecast record of 404 million tonnes in 1984, including a record wheat crop of 83 million tonnes, the world's largest. However, given the strain on the country's internal transportation infrastructure, it is likely that imports will remain relatively substantial. China remains fully established as the world's second largest importer of wheat and the IWC forecasts purchases in 1984/85 of 10 million tonnes.

Partly because of the continuing dispute over textiles trade, China did not fulfill the annual purchase obligation in 1983 of a minimum of 6 million tonnes stipulated under the agreement with the USA. Similarly, transactions for shipment in 1984, the last year of the agreement, are also well below the minimum.

Trade with Canada

Canada is the preferred supplier. Cereal grains continue to be the largest component of Canada's trade with the People's Republic of China, with wheat accounting for approximately 65 per cent of Canada's exports to the PRC.

Canada has sold significant quantities of wheat to China since 1961 when the first three year long term agreement was signed in April of that year. The sixth and most recent long term agreement was signed on May 5, 1982 by representatives of the Canadian Wheat Board and the China National Cereals, Oils and Foodstuffs Import and Export Corporation (CEROILS).

The agreement, which is the largest to date, calls for annual shipments of 3.5 million to 4.2 million tonnes in a three-year period starting August 1, 1982. As was the case with previous agreements, separate contracts for the sale of specific quantities of wheat are negotiated periodically, normally every six months, under the new agreement.

Sales of wheat to date under the agreement total 9.6 million tonnes with quantities for the last half of 1984/85 remaining to be contracted.

CEROILS has opted to pay cash for purchases since August, 1981 although the current agreement provides for 12 month credit terms. All amounts due to the Canadian Wheat Board for previous shipments made on credit have matured and been paid.

Canadian marketing efforts in China have included frequent exchanges of visits between Canadian Wheat Board representatives and CEROILS officials. Canadian Grain Commission officials have been extensively involved with their Chinese counterparts on questions of grain inspection and quality control. In addition, the Canadian International Grain Institute (CIGI) has hosted participants from China at a number of its international grains industry and special courses. Our grain trade concerns have also been an important component of incoming and outgoing ministerial visits.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next question was raised by Senator Grafstein on November 20, 1984 regarding Canada-United States relations and what the government policy is.

(The answer follows:)

The Government made clear in the Throne Speech that it has already taken the initiative to restore a spirit of goodwill and true partnership between Canada and the United States. The Prime Minister and President Reagan met on September 25 and they agreed to meet annually to review this refurbished relationship. The Secretary of State for External Affairs and the U.S. Secretary of State met on October 15 and 16 and agreed to continue the practice of quarterly meetings to manage our bilateral relations. Many other ministers have, or will shortly be having, meetings with their U.S. counterparts and will be holding them on a regular basis.

The Throne Speech also indicated that the Government "is exploring with our neighbour new approaches to a better and mutually advantageous trading relationship".

On November 8, the Minister of Finance tabled with his Economic Statement, a document entitled "A New Direction for Canada". This document makes clear (page 33) that the Government will examine, in close consultation with the provinces and the private sector, all avenues to secure and enhance market access. "This will include a careful analysis of options for bilateral trade liberalization with the United States in the light of various private sector proposals, as well as preparations for and opportunities provided by multilateral trade negotiations."

Discussions with the United States on possible trade liberalization on a bilateral sector-by-sector basis have not reached the stage of negotiations. Any further action will reflect the approach announced by the Government in the Throne Speech and the Economic Statement.

There are a number of issues currently being discussed between the United States and Canada, acid rain and other environmental issues (Garrison Diversion, toxic wastes in the Niagara peninsula), fisheries management off both coasts, boundaries issues, protectionist threats to access to the U.S. market, and defence modernization to name but a few. Discussions on all of these issues are continuing. However, none of them are the subject of formal negotiations at this time.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this is probably the moment I should use to remind the Leader of the Government in the Senate that, though he has made a good start today in providing answers, there are still a large number of questions unanswered, some of which could have been answered earlier than today.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: I want to encourage the Leader of the Government to try to clean up all of the questions asked in the preceding week on the Tuesday of the following week, and if that is not—

Shall I wait until the honourable senator has completed his briefing of his leader?

Senator Roblin: No, I am listening carefully. I have had my briefing and am prepared for you.

Senator MacEachen: I remind the Leader of the Government that there are a number of very important questions which have not been answered. For example, there is the question on access to information and the question on press guidelines. Questions on these guidelines have not been answered. Later today there will be a debate on an inquiry initiated by Senator Davey, and it would be helpful to our debate to have up-to-date answers on the questions on access to information and press guidelines.

Personally, I have asked questions, not only on that topic but also on the topic of the date of the forecast provided to the new government by the Department of Finance. I need to know that date—and it is within the knowledge of the government—in order to deal with a number of matters that will be coming before the Senate. So, having reminded the Leader of the Government of these two questions, among many that remain unanswered, I finish by telling him that it would make life easier for all of us if we could establish the practice that all questions put the preceding week are answered the following Tuesday.

I congratulate the Leader of the Government for his start, but I think it is very inadequate and that it is not appropriate for so many questions to be left unanswered, in view of the long period of time that the leader has had to deal with those questions.

Senator Roblin: I guess I should share with my colleague the advice I got from the senator who sits behind me. He said, "Only a man who was not here in the Senate during the previous session could ever ask such a question."

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Are you embarrassed, Royce?

Senator Roblin: Those of us who were in opposition in the old days were accustomed to waiting patiently for the answers we eventually got.

An. Hon. Senator: You never waited that long.

Senator Roblin: I must say we eventually got them. I wish to make that clear and to say to my honourable friend that I will do my best to get him his answers as quickly as possible.

My honourable friend probably knows that we have a special staff of one whose job it is, among other things, to process these matters with my colleagues in the other place. I wish to say that we follow that course diligently. However, the problem is that it is not always possible, for one reason or another, to obtain answers as quickly as we would like; however, it is not for lack of chasing. Insofar as we are concerned, we will diligently pursue those matters until we do receive the answers.

SALTFISH ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-6, to amend the Saltfish Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Roblin, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

THE HONOURABLE MAURICE RIEL, P.C.

FELICITATIONS ON APPOINTMENT TO PRIVY COUNCIL

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to draw to the attention of this house that our colleague, Senator Maurice Riel, former Speaker of the Senate, has recently been appointed to the Privy Council.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have been scooped by my honourable friend. I had hoped to have the privilege of announcing this news to the Senate and congratulating my honourable friend, Senator Riel. I am happy to join with Senator Frith in extending the good wishes of the chamber to Senator Riel on his appointment to the Privy Council.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY ADOPTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, seconded by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to Her Speech at the opening of the Session.—(Honourable Senator Cools).

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, I would like to say that since this was supposed to be my maiden speech and since for the past several days I have been saying "Stand" when this order has been called, I feel a bit like a bride left at the altar. Since we all know that I am not virginal to politics it is, indeed, a distressing feeling because politics and I are seasoned bedfellows.

● (1440)

I would like to begin, honourable senators, by perhaps rolling back the clock. I was appointed to this chamber in January 1984 by the then Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau. As you all know, I feel very strongly about Mr. Trudeau. I feel especially strongly that Mr. Trudeau sought to mention me in his outgoing speech to our party faithful last June. I am proud to be part of the Trudeau legacy.

But more important than that, honourable senators, I would like to say that, on the first day that I entered this chamber, I felt proud to be among you. I felt proud to be around men like Senator Duff Roblin, a former premier of Manitoba whose grandfather, Sir R. P. Roblin was also premier of that province. I felt honoured to be with men like Senator Jacques Flynn, whose grandfather was the last Tory premier of Quebec, Mr. E. J. Flynn. Senator Flynn is not here today and while I am honoured to be in the same chamber with him, I must say I am glad that his grandfather was the last Tory premier of Quebec.

Honourable senators, I must tell you that I feel very honoured to sit with people such as Senator Hicks, a former premier of Nova Scotia. Senator Hicks is a gentleman who reminds me a little of a character out of Dickens.

I am honoured to share the chamber with Senator Robichaud, a former premier of New Brunswick, and Senator Godfrey, who once commanded Air Squadron 414 and tells me it has never been the same since. He further told me that he was sorry that I had not opted to be a senator from Rosedale, since he could then be the senior senator from Rosedale while I would be the junior.

I must say that my first months in the Senate were spent with some vigour. Senator Sparrow does not seem to be in the chamber this afternoon, but I must tell you that I travelled with the agriculture committee and feel very honoured to have played a part in producing the report called "Soil at Risk: Canada's Eroding Future". However, as we were received across the country in our travels with that committee, it was clear to me that people in this country are looking to the Senate for leadership. Far from the demeaning image that is frequently projected of senators dozing in the chamber, my experience has been that the people of this country are watching us and are expecting us to produce.

I am by nature a collector. I collect Canadiana and all sorts of other things, and when I was first appointed to the Senate a friend of mine presented me with a copy of an old book called Constitutional Issues in Canada written by a very famous Canadian, R. MacGregor Dawson. I am sure you are all familiar with the work of Mr. Dawson, but this particular book is interesting because Mr. Dawson has used quotations from the works of Lewis Carroll to punctuate his comments on the Canadian system of government.

Upon receiving this book, since I had just been appointed to the Senate, obviously the first thing I did was turn to the chapter entitled "The Senate". Honourable senators, I would like to read to you the quotation from Lewis Carroll's "Through the Looking Glass" that R. MacGregor Dawson chose to use to introduce his writings on the Senate of Canada. I quote thus:

They stood so still that she quite forgot they were alive, and she was just going round to see if the word 'TWEEDLE' was written at the back of each collar, when she was startled by a voice coming from the one marked 'DUM'.

'If you think we're wax-works,' he said, 'you ought to pay, you know. Wax-works weren't made to be looked at for nothing . . .'

Honourable senators, that rather touched me, because I do believe that we in this chamber, as a group, have had superimposed upon us an image showing us as dead, nearly dead, somewhat inert or terribly, terribly inactive. We must correct this.

I would like to continue by congratulating the new Speaker of the Senate, Senator Charbonneau, the new Leader of the Government, Senator Roblin, and the new Deputy Leader of the Government, Senator Doody. On the other side, I would like to congratulate our own Liberal leader in this house, Senator MacEachen, and our veteran deputy leader, Senator Frith. I would also like to simultaneously congratulate the two whips, Senator Phillips and Senator Petten. To the outgoing leaders, Senator Olson and Senator Flynn, and to the outgoing Speaker, Senator Riel, I would like to say a very special thank you from all of us.

I would like to extend my congratulations to all of the new appointees to this chamber. It may be rather unorthodox, but there is one more gentleman that I would like to congratulate. I have not yet heard anyone else congratulate him. He does not sit in this chamber; he sits in the other place. But on September 4, I am sure that every single political being among us and every decent human being among us was glad to see him elected. The man I am speaking of is the Honourable John Napier Turner. On election night, September 4, as the polls came in and as his defeat was virtually announced before the ballots began to be counted, it seemed to me that a very interesting phenomenon occurred. Normally, when candidates are going down to defeat, very early in the evening the canvassers and workers disappear. On this one particular night, it seemed to me that all of us were waiting for this one result. I think all of us as politicians, regardless of the colour of the party we belong to, would agree that the election of John Turner that night was a blessing for this country at the behest of the voters in Quadra.

Turning now to the Speech from the Throne, I would like to tell you that I listened very carefully when the speech was read and, although many of these items have been mentioned previously, I would like to re-emphasize some of them.

At page three, the following appears:

Let it be also the beginning of a new era of national reconciliation—

At page four, the following is found:

—a priority goal of my Ministers will be . . . to breathe a new spirit into federalism and restore the faith and trust of all Canadians—

At page five, the following is found:

Ultimately such a new consensus must be reflected in the fundamental law of our land—

At page six, the following is found:

The national Economic Summit will not be the culmination of this process, but its beginning.

Again at page six, the following is found:

—labour playing a critical role in the consultative process through which the new national agenda is established.

● (1450)

Honourable senators, I read that speech with great care and encountered close to a dozen references to "breathing new spirit," new "initiatives," and "beginnings." I found myself saying that that sounded somewhat familiar, so I reminisced a little historically and said: "My goodness, this country has had a new birth. It is almost as though Canada has just begun. It is almost as if little existed before; that prior to September 4, and prior to the election of Mr. Mulroney, Canada was in a state of darkness, and now, after September 4, Canada had been transformed into a state of grace."

I listened carefully and said that that sounded familiar. I said, of course, that is reminiscent of the Bible. So, I did some research and found the following in the Bible, in the Gospel according to St. John:

In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

I said to myself, "That's it; I've got it. All things were made by Him, and without Him was not anything made that was made."

I thought to myself, "I have the solution." I concluded that Mr. Mulroney is a man of deep religious conviction.

Furthermore, honourable senators, I had no collusion whatsoever and was not in contact in any way whatsoever with the Vancouver Sun, which, on November 24, published a small article entitled, "Holy Brian"! in which it said:

Prime Minister Mulroney is probably just being religiously careful to keep his political honeymoon going. The Prime Minister has described both medicare and universality of social programs as a "sacred trust", and now government aircraft have become "sacred instruments of travel."

It seems to me, honourable senators, that if my perception is accurate and Mr. Mulroney is a man of deep religious conviction, we, as Liberals, and we, as Canadians, have little to worry about. If, on the other hand, Mr. Mulroney is about to attempt to reshape Canada in his own image, then it seems to me that we, as Liberals, have a great deal to worry about.

The Speech from the Throne was subdivided into several sections. What I want to begin with is the one entitled, "Renewed Canadian Internationalism." The following is a quote from the Throne Speech:

It is the purpose of my government to renew this tradition of constructive Canadian internationalism.

I submit, honourable senators, that if one wants to know the full meaning of Canadian internationalism, all one has to do is go abroad and mention the name of Pierre Elliott Trudeau and discover the respect that this country has abroad.

[Senator Cools.]

I have been waiting to speak on this matter for two weeks. At the time I was to speak, it was still the month of November, and in terms of renewed Canadian internationalism I wanted to talk then about Canada's efforts internationally.

If I could draw on the history that is our very own, honourable senators, and draw also on the history which is embodied in these buildings, and even in this chamber, perhaps honourable senators could cast their eyes to two of the paintings which were donated by Lord Beaverbrook. To the right is the painting "The Cloth Hall at Ypres." To the left is a painting of Flemish peasants returning to their homes after the liberation, entitled, "Returning to the Reconquered Land." I am sure many honourable senators know that area very well; it consists of a few miles of land called "Flanders Fields". We all know the poem In Flanders Fields. That area claimed 100,000 unknown dead and a million casualties. It took 35 lives to regain every square metre of this area called Flanders Fields. I am sure many in this chamber have visited that area, and if, as a Canadian today, one goes through that area called Ypres Salient, one will discover that Canadians are very welcome.

These were the battlefields—Passchendaele, St. Julien, Ypres, and on and on.

Just as one goes past the Cloth Hall at Ypres, and proceeds down the byways, one arrives at a monument entitled "The Monument of St. Julien". That monument was erected in honour of 18,000 Canadian soldiers who withstood the gas attacks. Beside that monument is a very famous statue, that of a soldier with head bowed entitled, "The Brooding Soldier."

Around the altar in the Memorial Chamber in these Parliament Buildings the following words, taken from Pilgrim's Progress by John Bunyan, are inscribed:

My marks and scars I carry with me to Be a witness for me that I have fought
His battles who now will be my rewarder,
So he passed over, and all the trumpets
Sounded for him on the other side.

That, honourable senators, is Canadian internationalism.

If I sound somewhat emotional, it is because these particular subjects are quite moving to me because, honourable senators, I bear a Flemish name. If you open up the telephone books all through this area you will see the name of Cools countless times.

● (1500)

Honourable senators, I would now like to continue on this issue of renewed internationalism. I shall speak au courant because today marks the election of a new government on the Island of Grenada in the West Indies. As we look forward to the initiatives that Mr. Mulroney's government is going to take, I for one am very interested in the future role of CIDA and of Canada in the Commonwealth and in the Third World.

As we know, two years ago in Grenada there was carnage of the type that the British Commonwealth Caribbean has never previously experienced. I would like to share a few things with you, honourable senators, that perhaps you may not have heard of before—they are somewhat grizzly—but it seems to me that these are the forums where we should put these matters forward. I am sure that these are matters that at the time few would have known, other than those who were fairly close to the facts. I am related by blood since my cousin is a member of that government of Prime Minister Tom Adams in Barbados who beseeched the Government of the United States of America to execute what has become known as the Grenada rescue mission.

As we know, officials of the government and Mr. Morris Bishop were brutally murdered, and to this day there have been no appropriate funerals given to those dead. This is so because at the time of that brutal carnage and slaughter things were done to those bodies to ensure that they would be forever beyond forensic identification. For example, fingers were stripped so that there would be no trace of fingerprints; spinal cords were severed so that they could not be identified by height; dental structures were removed so that there could be no identification by teeth or dental mechanisms. It seems to me that we do not have to be in the secret service to understand that those kinds of skills are very rare in former colonies and, obviously, those skills were imported from somewhere else.

On the question of Canada's renewed internationalism, that has a personal note for me because I, too, was born in a colony—a colony called Barbados. Approximately a week ago my cousin, the Hon. Billie Miller the Minister of Education from Barbados, was in Montreal to celebrate with people of Barbadian extraction, the eighteenth anniversary of the Independence of Barbados. I left Barbados when I was 13, which is approximately 29 years ago, and a group of us, including the High Commissioner of Barbados and other people of that vintage, were sitting around the hotel room reminiscing. We talked about colonialism in a sugar society, in a "plantocracy", where race rules supreme. I remember vividly as a child, the late Sir Grantley Adams was mobilizing people of our vintage and descendants of free coloureds and mulattos to run against what was then called the Conservative Party of Barbados. That is the reason why I would never be a Conservative. The point I am driving at is that we were talking about the phenomenon of colonialism and how destructive it was for all of us.

I am sure that many of the older senators in this room will remember studying a particular poem which is called Gunga Din. As a colonial one understood what it meant to live in a society and to be constantly judged by one's inferiors, and to know at all times that certain positions were not available to one. Gunga Din was written by Rudyard Kipling. As you know Kipling was a poet of great colonial commitment. Gunga Din was the name of the little waterboy whose job it was to fetch water for the troops as they were fighting on the battlefields of India. Gunga Din was very much abused, beaten and cursed by his colonial masters. However, the ultimate aim of Kipling's poem is to somehow or other exonerate a particular human being who was able to perceive the ultimate charity in Gunga

Din. You will recall that Gunga Din throughout the poem was called "is dirty 'ide"—this is a British cockney speaking—"blackface" "eathen," "beggar," and "squidgy-nose". At one point in this poem we read the following:

An' a bullet come an' drilled the beggar clean.

In his dying state Gunga Din attempts to give water to this soldier. That soldier is greatly touched by this humanity and charity. Rudyard Kipling gives us those very famous lines when he says:

Yes, Din! Din! Din!

You Lazarushian-leather Gunga Din!

Though I've belted you and flayed you,

By the livin' Gawd that made you,

You're a better man than I am, Gunga Din!

Honourable senators, I come from a family that taught me these poems when I was a child. I was raised in a family which used words like "universal manhood suffrage" and who fought for universal manhood suffrage. I grew up around a bust of Mahatma Gandhi. Honourable senators, nothing in life has changed very much. I remain committed to improving the human condition.

• (1510)

Honourable senators, I move on now from renewed Canadian internationalism, hoping that the new government will be attentive and vigilant to the fact that Canada has a most important role to play in the Commonwealth Third World and in the Commonwealth Caribbean.

Honourable senators, I would now refer to two other sections of the Throne Speech, which were headed "Social Justice" and "Law and Public Safety."

In the section on social justice, the government makes a great commitment to women. I plead and pray that this commitment to women is real and not part and parcel of the rather hysterical, cosmetic, so-called "justice for women" which seems to be running rampant these days, particularly in the newspapers. This woman is one who believes she can have her personhood without robbing other human beings of their personhood. I hope the commitment in the Throne Speech is to a genuine and real womanhood.

The speech goes on to make mention of amendments to the Divorce Act, but says little about family mediation. As time goes on, I hope we shall hear more from government in this regard. I hope the new divorce proposals will remove all elements of culpability from divorce. Honourable senators, I intend to work towards ensuring that the new legislation will include, or at least that an attempt will be made to have it include, the new concept of shared parenting, joint custody, so that one spouse is not isolated from parenting at the wish and whim of the other. I hope the new legislation will reduce the deleterious effects on children of these marital disputes.

The speech mentions enforcement of maintenance orders, but it does not mention an amendment to the Income Tax Act so that perhaps spouses who are paying support for children over 18 years may be permitted to pay the children directly rather than making payments to the spouse, so that those paying spouses can glean some sort of shelter under the Income Tax Act.

I assure honourable senators that marital conflict and domestic dispute is something with which I am very familiar, since I spent ten years as Executive Director of a home for battered women. The section on social justice goes on to talk about assistance to victims of family violence. Again, I hope that the new legislation will include assistance to the perpetrators of family violence as well; in other words, for every battered wife helped, I hope we shall be helping a battering husband.

Honourable senators, the final section I wish to address, one that has caused me great distress, was mentioned earlier in Question Period by the Leader of the Opposition. Since Senator MacEachen has already read the quotation from the section on Law and Public Safety, I shall not read it again. However, honourable senators, I must say that I hope this talk of public safety does not mean that we shall be planning or talking of the return of capital punishment and that what it means, instead, is that we are going to completely overhaul institutions like the National Parole Board without dismantling the reforms that were intended by Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1896 when he introduced parole as "The Ticket of Leave Act."

Honourable senators, in this regard, I should like to read to you some passages by Mr. Justice Edson Haines who, as we know, is a former Justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario. I would point out that I do not have much faith in what I am about to read because, after all, it is a quotation from a newspaper clipping, and I think, by now, we are all media-hardened. I, for one, do not have a lot of faith in the accuracy of what is reported by the press. However, Mr. Justice Haines is reported to have said:

The guilty go free because the police just haven't discovered the evidence, or some rule has excluded it,—

The report goes on to state:

Haines said he has had "a brooding sense of disquiet" about Canada's system of justice, which he said is—on a "civil rights bender."

He is further reported to have said:

Someone contemplating a crime can say: "I'll do it, catch me if you can, provide a lawyer for me at your expense. Prove it beyond a reasonable doubt, but don't ask me,"

Furthermore, I would suggest, "parole me at the earliest convenience."

Mr. Justice Haines went on to say:

—Our law was formulated by our judges when a man could be hanged for stealing a sheep. The hangman has gone.

Honourable senators, based on what I have been hearing these days, the hangman seems to be coming back in full force.

[Senator Cools.]

I should like to declare for all to hear that I am a strong abolitionist of capital punishment.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Cools: I stand strongly opposed to capital punishment. It seems to me that what we have to do, instead of reinstating capital punishment, is take a good look at the Parole Act, the Penitentiaries Act, and consider total criminal review.

In conclusion, I should like to talk for a few moments about democracy. We live in an extremely wonderful and magnificent country—one we love and are committed to. As parliamentarians, we all understand that democracy is an extremely fragile process. It is so fragile that Niebuhr once said that man's capacity for justice makes democracy possible, but man's inclination to injustice makes democracy necessary. In other words, man's nature is good enough to allow democracy, but evil enough to render it necessary.

Honourable senators, I think this should be a signal to all of us. Daily I hear that Mr. Mulroney and the Conservative government were given, on September 4, an overwhelming mandate. I wish to correct that. Mr. Mulroney did not receive an overwhelming mandate—he received an overwhelming majority. There is a difference, honourable senators, and the difference is not semantics. The difference is political. Mr. Mulroney has received the mandate of a majority government. It is his majority that is overwhelming, not his mandate.

I should like to say a few words about politics. To many seated in this chamber I am a junior senator, a youthful senator—indeed, I am a baby to many honourable senators. I see Senator Macquarrie looking at me and, yes, I can repeat that truth: I am a baby to many honourable senators. But I would like to say that politics is about people. In the halls of this building there is a symbol of humanity—a draped figure who holds, in her left hand, the asp and the rod, the emblems of healing; with her right hand she extends sustenance. I offer these symbols to all of us here who are committed to our country.

Honourable senators, Mr. Mulroney is a most interesting man. He came into power being all things to all people. It seems to me that Mr. Mulroney is as a man who rode into power mounted on a tiger. Let us recall that Winston Churchill stated that "those who ride tigers dare not dismount." I shall repeat that: "He who rides a tiger is afraid to dismount." Moreover, honourable senators, the tigers are getting hungry. I invite Mr. Mulroney to dismount. I join with all Liberals here in inviting Mr. Mulroney to dismount the tiger.

Honourable senators, I will close by entreating all of us to be humane, sensitive and cognizant of the Aristotelian concept that "political society exists for the sake of noble actions."

I thank honourable senators.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Ernest G. Côtteau: Honourable senators, I should like to make a few brief comments which are related strictly to matters pertaining to my region of southwest Nova Scotia but which, I believe, are addressed in the Speech from the Throne. I want to say at the very outset that I am perfectly aware that a good questioner, in my place, could have made these comments during Question Period. Personally, I feel more comfortable making them now.

Before I do, I wish to associate myself with those who have preceded me in this debate in extending warm congratulations to Senator Charbonneau on his elevation to the office of Speaker of the Senate; to Senator Roblin on his new position as Leader of the Government in the Senate; and, of course, to Senator Phillips, who has become the Chief Government Whip in the Senate. These three gentlemen have earned the respect and admiration of all senators and I wish them well in their new roles.

I also wish to convey my sincere congratulations to Senator MacEachen on his new role as Leader of the Opposition in the Senate. As a member of the opposition, I consider myself fortunate in having him as my leader.

I also extend my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the motion for an Address in Reply to the Speech of Her Excellency the Governor General.

Honourable senators, I shall not attempt to find fault with the Speech from the Throne. Like other similar speeches, it is well written and it contains generalities which apply to about any subject one cares to exploit. I shall restrict myself to two particular aspects of the Speech. The first is that which falls under the heading of national unity. I was particularly impressed with that paragraph which reads, in part:

National unity also demands that the two levels of government cooperate in supporting official language minorities and in fostering the rich multicultural character of Canada. My government is committed to ensuring that the equality of the two official languages—so vital to our national character and identity—is respected in fact as it is in law. My Ministers acknowledge the need for ongoing improvements and for vigilance in this indispensable area of our national life.

[Translation]

I have another quote on the same subject:

The reality of Canada is one of distinct regional identities, each rooted in many generations of history; of diverse cultures; of regional economic strengths: a country of many parts whose people share a profound attachment to one Canada.

My Ministers are determined to achieve a national consensus which will reflect that reality.

Honourable senators, I wanted to quote these few passages because they are particularly relevant to the province of my birth, Nova Scotia, and they also reflect the new Government's desire and will to continue a practice established by previous governments, namely, to encourage the cultural development of minorities.

I would like to elaborate somewhat on the subject and explain why it is one of my priorities. As you know, Nova Scotia has a mixed population which includes an Acadian minority with strong roots, and spread throughout the province. It is well known for its invaluable contribution to the social, economic and cultural life of the province. Unfortunately, over the years, and for a number of complex and sometimes obvious reasons, many Acadians in Nova Scotia have lost their mother tongue as well as their culture, and we now estimate that out of a population of 80,000 Acadians, less than half still speak French today.

I am not saying this out of a sense of despair. In fact, I find it very encouraging that we have always had a militant elite whose numbers have grown over the years, as people became aware of the pressing need to resist, at all costs, the wave of assimilation that was threatening to engulf the Acadian minority.

These militants, with the financial assistance, co-operation and encouragement of both levels of government, have made remarkable progress after years of hard work. They have established their own francophone organization which operates on a provincial basis and whose membership comes from all Acadian communities in the Province. I may add that a major role was played in this respect by the Université Sainte-Anne de la Pointe de l'Église, the only French university in Nova Scotia.

Thanks to the efforts of these people, social action has become a part of all francophone communities in Nova Scotia, and has helped to restore the pride of young Acadians who in turn will, I am sure, do their part to develop Acadian culture. Last June, the CBC announced that a French radio station would be established in Halifax, and that it would start broadcasting in September 1985. This was very good news, especially since it would meet the pressing need for a French radio programming centre in Nova Scotia, something people had been trying to get across to CBC authorities for the past decade.

We are a bit concerned, however, because there are rumours there will be budgetary cutbacks in CBC programming.

I think I can speak for the francophone minority in Nova Scotia if I say that the eloquent phrases and noble sentiments expressed in the Speech from the Throne in referring to linguistic minorities were very much appreciated in Nova Scotia's Acadian communities. At least we have some hope that our attempts to restore our culture will not be paralyzed by budgetary cutbacks.

[English]

Honourable senators, there is a further point that I wish to raise, and again it is one that has to do with my region. I am prompted to do so by the following paragraph in the Speech from the Throne:

A national consensus is also needed to reduce the persistent isolation of Canada's regions, to meet the challenges of economic and social disparity, to revitalize the strength of our traditional resource industries, such as agriculture, forestry, mining, the fishery and tourism, and to ensure that our critical transportation and communication links better serve the national purpose.

At first glance, I was tempted to associate the implication of the noble thoughts expressed in the Throne Speech with the reality that exists in my home area. The reference to the fishery and tourism, and to our critical transportation and communication links, as expressed in the Throne Speech, fits in very well with our geographic and economic opportunities. Let me explain briefly.

Our economic life and well-being relies heavily on the fishery and on tourism. The market for three-quarters of our fishery product is the United States; and, of course, the key for us to maximize the return on our fishery is to transport it to the market while it is still in a state of freshness. Therefore we need to have the fastest means of transportation possible.

We have been able to do just that because over the years the tradition has been that good and dependable ferry services have existed which link our part of the province with two outside ports. We have the Princess of Acadia which runs daily between Digby, Nova Scotia, and Saint John, New Brunswick, and the M. V. Bluenose which runs between Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, and Bar Harbour, Maine. Both of those ferries are operated by CN Marine and play a vital role in our economic life in that they carry our fish to market and also bring in a large number of tourists. That kind of service is part and parcel of our community life.

The recent and sudden announcement by the Minister of Finance to the effect that the services of the M. V. Bluenose were to be reduced to six months per year, effective in the fiscal year 1985-86, shocked the entire community. Furthermore, in my opinion it simply does not square with those profound thoughts which I quoted earlier from the Throne Speech.

Needless to say, the local media, as well as the Halifax media, were quick to reflect the dismay which that announcement created in the area. I quote as follows from the Chronicle-Herald of November 16, 1984, under the headline "Proposed Ferry Cutback Creates Furor". The article is dated Yarmouth:

A proposed removal of winter service by the CN Marine Bluenose ferry service from Yarmouth to Bar Harbor, Maine, has upset fish processors, brokers and trucking companies in this region, who say the move would have a harmful impact on southwestern Nova Scotia's $58-million fresh fish and lobster fisheries.

The proposed reduction in the Bluenose service, slated for 1985-86, drew criticism Thursday from members of the region's fishing industry, many of whom only learned about the ferry service cut yesterday.

Last year's southwestern Nova Scotia lobster fishery was worth a landed value of $27 million, with most of that catch going into the U.S.

Nova Scotia, and more specifically southwestern Nova Scotia, is the leading exporter of fresh fish to New England, shipping approximately $31-million worth of fresh fish (whole or filleted) to the U.S. in 1982, a figure which represents about 74 per cent of the East Coast fresh fish exports to the U.S.

Honourable senators, while I realize that for anyone who may not be familiar with the environment of my region, the mere curtailment of a ferry service may appear to be of minor significance, however, it is not so for those like myself who live there and who would like to keep the economy going. Yarmouth has had sea links with New England going back at least two centuries, long before the advent of steam propelled ships which began in the mid-1800s. Apart from an interruption of a few years in the 1940s, financial support, in one way or another, has been found to maintain a ferry service or a link between Nova Scotia and New England, which is considered to be of vital importance to the entire province.

Honourable senators, I have no wish to belabour the point further at this time. However, I wish to assure the Senate that the people in my home region are gravely concerned about the threatened loss of a vital community ferry service. I believe they have already caught the ears and the attention of their respective representatives in the two levels of government. I have no doubt that their dissatisfaction will be made known to the proper authorities. I can only hope that their representations will persuade the minister that such vital and essential services should not be cut before a thorough and in-depth study has been made to assess the real value of such services to a fishing community.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Côtteau: Honourable senators, those are the only points that I wish to raise at this time.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, it is difficult to follow two such interesting speakers as Senator Cools and Senator Côtteau. I have enjoyed listening to both speeches and I congratulate the speakers. I was particularly pleased to hear Senator Côtteau presenting the problems that exist in his area of Nova Scotia. I recall that I used to have to do that for him, and I am glad to see that he is now assuming that responsibility. I am pleased to join in the traditional congratulations extended to Senator Charbonneau as Speaker of the Senate. I have always felt that it must be very difficult for a new Speaker to assume the Chair on the first day of a new Parliament with all its glare of publicity. I am sure you will all agree with me that he performed very well on that occasion and has done so since. When his duties become too onerous, such as during the snow storms of March, and when Florida appeals, I know that he will receive assistance from the Speaker pro tempore, Senator Asselin.

● (1540)

I extend my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. They are both able speakers with a great deal of experience. I must say that I prefer Senator Macquarrie when he speaks on a political platform because he is not quite so verbose and gets down to the point. I think he even tries to put a bit of humour into his speeches on these occasions. I congratulate the new Leader of the Government in the Senate. Shortly after the composition of the new cabinet was announced, I heard an interview on CBC Radio. The people involved were commenting on the number of portfolios given to Western Canada and it mentioned that Manitoba had received one more than the other provinces. The explanation given was that Manitoba did not receive one more than the other western provinces but, rather, Prime Minister Mulroney wished to give the leadership of the government in the Senate to Western Canada and wanted to pick the most able member with the most experience. I find no difficulty in agreeing with his choice. The Deputy Leader of the Government has been a very pleasant surprise. I am not sure that he has been a pleasant surprise to honourable senators opposite who tried to question him on one occasion. We are very pleased with his appointment and performance. I should like to mention Senator Flynn, the former leader of our party in the Senate. One of the Senate staff remarked to me that he had not seen Senator Flynn looking so well, so relaxed and so happy in years. I knew we were a hard bunch to ride herd on but I did not know we were that hard. We apologize for all the difficulty we have caused him over the years.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Apology accepted.

Senator Phillips: About this time every year we used to joke with our former whip, Senator John M. Macdonald, and ask him to show us the whip's books. I never did get to see those books but since I became whip I have learned that there is a surplus in that account. To have a surplus in any account is a very strange thing these days.

Hon. Jack Marshall: It is the only one in Parliament.

Senator Phillips: I am sure that his fellow Cape Bretoner, the former Minister of Finance, Senator MacEachen, wishes now that he had availed himself of Senator Macdonald's ability and perhaps he would have had a longer and more successful term as Minister of Finance.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): It was long enough.

Senator Phillips: I think the public would agree with you there.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Thanks for asking.

Senator Phillips: I extend my congratulations to the leadership of the Liberal Party in the Senate. I used to be very fond of watching Wayne and Shuster but eventually I became tired of them. I would just like to remind the Senate that the popularity of Wayne and Shuster has outlived that of the Liberal leadership in the Senate. I extend my congratulations and welcome to the new senators. I have always appreciated someone who changes their viewpoint, especially when they adopt my viewpoint. I am referring to those senators who were members of the cabinet in the other place and who advocate Senate reform. I appreciate the fact that they changed their viewpoint and followed the Pied Piper down the hall to the Senate where they met Senator Frith who welcomed them excitedly and told them that he was glad they had been appointed because he did not think they would make it in September if they ran. For once I think Senator Frith was right.

Senator Frith: I must read Hansard and see what it is I was right about.

Senator Phillips: I enjoy the architecture of the Parliament Buildings. There are so many symbols built into them that go unnoticed, which is unfortunate. I want to remind the Senate of one such symbol that can be seen on the East Block as you approach the building from the west. There are two arches over a window. One is in the form of a broad smile, which represents the Prime Minister; "God's in his heaven—all's right with the world." Immediately below that arch is a narrower one that represents the Leader of the Opposition. It is a scowl, indicating the fact that he has lost the election. Judging by the scowls on the other side, I would say there are an awful lot of potential leaders of the opposition.

I had hoped that the debate on the Speech from the Throne would deal more with the contents of the Throne Speech, and that we would keep the economic statement for a separate debate. However, we have done very well in merging the two and I hope that I can follow that pattern this afternoon. Before beginning to discuss the economy, I want to take honourable senators back to a situation in 1958 when the Liberal Party lost an election in very much the same way as they lost the one in September. Back then the Honourable Jack Pickersgill came up with the strategy. It was "the big lie; repeat the big lie; repeat the big lie; repeat . . . and eventually somebody will believe it." As I listened to opposition senators today I came to the conclusion that the Liberal Party has not updated its manual. Perhaps it could be described more as whine, whine, and whine.

Throughout the election campaign the annual deficit and the total national debt received considerable attention. That is as it should be. Seven years ago the total national debt was $22 billion. Today, it is $200 billion and everyone, including honourable senators opposite, must take notice of that and consider it in relation to government policy. There is no escaping the fact that approximately half of our tax dollars are consumed or wasted in paying interest on the Trudeau-Turner debt. Today's Montreal Gazette has an interesting article which says that the debt charges cost Ottawa more than the income tax yield. If honourable senators have any doubt that the national debt and the cost of servicing that debt are not an urgent problem they need simply remember that all the income tax paid in Canada today will go to service the debt. I think that that is a disastrous situation and one that has to be remedied.

I always enjoy the questions of my honourable friend, Senator Frith. I can recall the occasion when he was very curious about the colour of the books that Prime Minister Mulroney had referred to throughout the election campaign.

Senator Frith: Not the colour.

Senator Phillips: I do not think he was satisfied with the answer he received on that occasion.

Senator Frith: What answer? I didn't get one.

● (1550)

Senator Phillips: The books are very much like a lobster, Senator Frith. Before a lobster is cooked it is green and after it is cooked it turns red. That is the exact colour of the books today. They have been cooked by a number of Liberal finance ministers and they are as red as a cooked lobster.

Senator Frith: You should have been a poet instead of a dentist.

Senator Phillips: I do not mind that, as long as you do not suggest I should have been a Liberal. That would have been really hard to take.

While the national debt is extremely high at the present time, it is projected to grow worse each year. If steps are not taken to correct the situation, then, according to present projections, the national debt will be $410 billion in 1990 and it will take 76 per cent of our tax revenues to service the debt at that time.

Honourable senators, let us ask ourselves what the policy of the Grits is with regard to the deficit and the national debt. The Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons stated he would reduce the deficit by $15 billion in seven years. It is only fair to ask how this would be achieved. After all, there are only a limited number of ways in which the deficit can be reduced. They include a cutback of expenditures, an increase in taxes, or a combination of the two. I would love to know what the thinking of those opposite is.

Senator MacEachen: Growth in the economy.

Senator Phillips: I am afraid, honourable senators, that the leadership of the Liberal Party in the Senate does not support Mr. Turner in this regard since we have heard complaints about "cut, cut, cut". Mr. Turner has not objected to that, which leads me to believe that we now have two Liberal parties in Canada. We have the Liberal Party in the House of Commons advocating one policy and the Liberal Party in the Senate advocating another. I would love to see the Liberal Party return to the Civic Centre. If they do not want to have a leadership review then they can at least formulate a policy so that the people of Canada and we on this side of the house will know what they are thinking.

Senator Frith: And it would give you a little time to formulate policy, too, while you are watching.

Senator Phillips: I appreciate your interruptions, Senator Frith. As Senator Doody says, I am getting to you now.

It is interesting that the Grits in the Senate still support the Grafstein theory, that is, a higher deficit means more jobs. The Grits never seem to learn that high deficits were a major contributing factor to high unemployment. If honourable senators would care to read the Debates of the Senate, I draw to their attention Senator Doody's remarks in this regard. He said that if you carried the Grafstein theory through to its logical conclusion bankruptcy would mean full employment. That seems to be what the Liberal senators are advocating—bankruptcy to achieve full employment.

I should like to ask how high the annual deficit should go before it causes senators opposite concern. Do they want it to go to $30 billion, $35 billion, $40 billion or $50 billion? I am sure Senator Frith with his desire for information will tell us.

Senator Frith: What are we talking about? Are we talking about the Speech from the Throne or the Liberal Party?

Senator Phillips: Both. I am talking about your reaction to the Speech from the Throne.

Senator Frith: It is the same thing all over again; you can take the boy out of the opposition but you cannot take the opposition out of the boy. You just do not feel comfortable over there.

Senator Phillips: I enjoy being in opposition to you, Senator Frith.

Senator Frith: We can work that out by switching places.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I would like to compare the attitude of the Liberal Party with respect to its own affairs and its attitude with regard to government deficits. At the present time, the Liberal Party has a deficit. That is not unusual following an election, especially when we consider who managed the campaign. Naturally, the Liberal Party has a deficit. However, its constitution calls for a leadership review. Iona Campagnolo says, "We cannot afford a leadership review, we have a deficit. We cannot have a leadership review until the deficit is eliminated." However, when it comes to the government deficit it is an entirely different matter. When they are dealing with their own money they follow finance minister Wilson; but when they are dealing with public money they follow finance minister MacEachen.

The Liberal Party has left us a very unusual heritage, one that I am sure they regret as much as we do. They have left us high unemployment, inflation and high interest rates. Primary industry is in trouble. I am speaking of the three primary industries in this country, namely, farming, fishing and forestry. They are all in difficulty. The mining industry is in difficulty. In fact, I have not heard of one section of the economy that is in good shape. Some six weeks ago Liberals were saying that there is no solution and that it is not the government's fault; today, they ask for an instant solution.

I have enjoyed going back over the speeches of former finance ministers in which they have projected unemployment at 10 per cent to 11 per cent until the 1990s. In case honourable senators would like to look up the debates in the House of Commons they can find that Minister of Finance MacEachen made those projections, as did finance ministers Chrétien and Lalonde. I like to think of the Grits as sort of a mint when it comes to unemployment. They turned out the unemployed the way the mint turns out pennies. They said that they had to be front line soldiers in the fight against inflation.

Throughout the debate on the Speech from the Throne, there were many expressions of concern about the universality of social welfare. In fact, in Question Period today one senator made her maiden speech on that subject.

I have a bit of information which I am sure honourable senators will enjoy. It is from the P.C. research and entitled "Gritwatch". I would like to quote the Honourable Donald Johnston from March 9, 1984, when he said:

These programs are not carved in stone. We have to look at them. What is the need? I think that question has to be addressed.

I presume that is the same Donald Johnston who was a leadership candidate in June. Further, he is quoted as saying:

All programs can be improved. This question of universality. That's a buzzword which I don't even like to hear these days.

The point is the social programs have to be married to the economic requirements of the country so that people use those programs to help themselves get back into the mainstream of economic activity. As one observer said and I quoted him yesterday, "let's turn them into trampolines, let's turn the safety nets into trampolines." I think it's a very good metaphor. That's what we need to do.

Some honourable senators will say that the Honourable Donald Johnston was too far to the right to be a Liberal. In contrast to that, let's have a look at the remarks from some of the members of the left wing. The Honourable John Munro was also a leadership candidate and he is quoted as saying:

● (1600)

The Government is wasting millions of dollars by sending monthly pension cheques to wealthy senior citizens and baby bonuses to families who do not need the money. Such funds should be redirected to help the most needy.

It is interesting, honourable senators, to find out where this speech was delivered. It was delivered at the Liberal Biennial Policy Conference in Ottawa on November 7, 1982.

The Honourable Monique Bégin also made statements in that regard. I shall not read her comments but they can be found at page 20342 of House of Commons Hansard.

On the same date, the Honourable Marc Lalonde also had remarks to make on the same subject. I hope God will forgive me for quoting Marc Lalonde—

Senator MacEachen: But will Marc forgive you?

Senator Phillips: I shall quote him, anyway:

The current crisis we're living in makes people think much more deeply about a number of issues than they used to and to realize that there are no free lunches and that we can't plan on the basis that there's a kind of growing federal pie from which everybody can get an increased share.

When you see a financial situation where the government is not getting the revenue that it used to, where the economy is not growing, where public funds have to be used extremely sparingly and targetted better than ever before, then you have to ask yourself questions like this.

Honourable senators, the date of the quotation from the Honourable John Munro was November 7, 1982; the date of the quotation from the Honourable Marc Lalonde was November 3, 1982 and the Honourable Monique Bégin made her remark on November 3, 1982. It seems to me, honourable senators, that there must have been some sort of internal struggle within the Liberal Party. Certainly, the idea of universality being questioned is not new to the Liberals. But here again, we have the Liberal Party in the Senate with one policy and the Liberal Party in the House of Commons with another.

On occasion, I have enjoyed offering advice to the government. I do not think I can completely forgo that habit and I shall just mention briefly my favourite subject, Canadair. I advise the government to avoid situations such as we have seen develop with Canadair. A helicopter industry has been started up and I hope that the government of this day will carefully scrutinize the activities of that industry.

Honourable senators, I want to mention briefly one thing of particular concern to my province and that is the high cost of electricity. In Prince Edward Island, electricity costs three times as much as it does in any other part of Canada. This factor affects our ability to attract industry, particularly those industries involving agriculture where a heavy electrical cost is involved in preparing frozen foods, et cetera. The Prime Minister and the government have made some initial moves in this regard and I hope that they will continue to do so.

Honourable senators, I would like to mention briefly the importance of committee work within the Senate. I take as an example the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry. These are three primary industries which account for more than 58 per cent of our GNP and, as I said earlier, all three are in difficulty. I hope that this committee will be able to make some recommendations to the government. I am not expecting solutions, but I hope that the committee will be able to make worthwhile suggestions and that, in turn, the government will give serious consideration to those representations.

Honourable senators, in the House of Commons the Conservative membership flows over to the left side of the house and that is referred to as the "rump". One of my Liberal friends in the House of Commons also referred to the Liberal Party in the Senate as the "rump". In closing, I would like to offer some advice, and I am sure it will be accepted in the spirit in which it is given. I have noticed that my Liberal colleagues are very much like colts that have been let off their bridles. You have been let out to play and are now galloping all over the place, not quite sure where you are going but enjoying your new freedom. It is nice to watch you enjoying that freedom. I have never been gagged in Parliament so I can understand your enthusiasm for that freedom.

I had a friend in Ottawa who once owned a very valuable jumping horse. He took it over to Quebec to a minor fair to display it, then took the horse home and let it out of the trailer.

The horse went galloping through the fields, stepped into a groundhog hole, broke its leg and had to be destroyed. The reason I am telling you this story, honourable senators, is to point out that there are many holes in the field in which you are galloping, and I hope that you, too, do not meet with disaster.

I was amused to find that a number of Liberal senators—

Senator Frith: I presume that comment related to the part of the Speech from the Throne on capital punishment.

Senator Phillips: Exactly.

Senator Frith: Perhaps you would like to develop it further.

Senator Phillips: A number of Liberal senators have recently gone to the Toronto Star to tell us what they are going to do. I have no objection to their activities but I would like to refer particularly to the remark of Senator Gigantès where he said, "Just watch us." I am watching you, honourable senators. I want to hear you explain why the Petroleum Compensation Charge was allowed to lapse into a negative balance. I note that it is now a deficit; it is a book-keeping entry and it now has a negative balance. I would like to hear Senator Gigantès explain that.

Those of you who complain about not getting answers to your questions should recall my questioning of Senator Austin when he was a member of the cabinet. I asked him regularly what were the salaries of Joel Bell and Maurice Strong. It took four years of questioning and I never received an answer. It took Prime Minister Brian Mulroney only three weeks to reveal that Joel Bell was receiving a salary of close to $400,000 a year. I wonder what his salary would have been had Canadair been making a profit of $2.5 billion per year instead of losing that amount. I am anxious to hear Senator Davey explain those salaries, and the secrecy that surrounded them.

Honourable senators, today's Globe and Mail introduced a most interesting topic and that was the story about former Transport Minister Lloyd Axworthy.

● (1610)

Senator MacEachen: I thought you were going to refer to all those patronage appointments. There were two in the Prime Minister's riding alone.

Senator Phillips: We have discussed your patronage appointments; we have not made any patronage appointments.

Senator Frith: If we were to believe that, we would believe anything. That's incredible!

Senator Phillips: It is interesting, honourable senators, to recall the whining about the Chiefs of Staff and their salaries, as well as the amount of money ministers are receiving to run their offices.

Compare that with today's story in the Globe and Mail. In a few months the Minister of Transport was able, for some unexplained reason, to overspend his budget by $1 million. That took place in the short space of a few months, but no one found out about that. Just think what a Chief of Staff could have done then?

[Senator Phillips.]

The number of staff in his office grew to 75. Surely, as he went in and out of the office, he must have noticed 75 people. He has said that he did not know anything about them. Where were they hidden? Where were they working if he did not notice that they were there?

I particularly want to put this on the record for those who complain about the salaries the Chiefs of Staff are getting. Let us have a look at one or two of those salaries as outlined in the Globe and Mail.

David Miller, a policy advisor on the western rail rates, received a salary of $75,850 a year. Isn't that terrible, honourable senators? I am sure those who complain about the salaries being paid to the Chiefs of Staff must feel somewhat embarrassed by that.

Let us have a look at one Greg Shilladay. Mr. Shilladay was a former reporter in Winnipeg, the article states, and was Executive Director of a group promoting the benefits of the government freight rates legislation. He received a salary of $116,933 a year. I suppose he made that as a reporter in Winnipeg, but I rather suspect—

Senator Frith: What part of the Speech from the Throne is this on, universality?

Senator Phillips: Yes, universality. We are trying to be helpful.

Senator MacEachen: That is the "sacred trust".

Senator Phillips: It also touches on the social conscience, as I can tell from the reaction by the Honourable Senator Frith.

Senator Frith: He has no teeth to drill, so he is bashing Liberals.

Senator Phillips: I suspect, Senator Frith, that the main beneficiary of the freight rates legislation of the Liberal Party was Mr. Shilladay.

When honourable senators opposite have things they want explained and put a lot of questions, remember that we, on this side, also have questions hanging over from the last session. We have many questions which will arise as information becomes public, and we hope that you will be just as co-operative in granting explanations as you are in putting questions.

Senator Frith: You can count on that!

Motion agreed to, and the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne adopted.

On motion of the Honourable C. William Doody, ordered that the Address be engrossed and presented to Her Excellency the Governor General by the Honourable the Speaker.

THE CABINET

ACCESS TO INFORMATION—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Keith Davey rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, November 29, 1984:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Government's preoccupation with secrecy.

He said: Honourable senators, in launching this inquiry, I am passing curious to find out why this government finds itself in this secrecy jackpot. Some may laugh, and some may think I overstate the case, but when the government's conduct is to be found on the nation's comic pages, something is wrong somewhere. I have a copy of yesterday's Ben Wicks "The Outcasts" comic strip which appears in a number of daily newspapers across the country. Let me just describe what is depicted in that clipping: It consists of an elderly gentleman and, I presume his wife, walking along, and she says: "I don't like all this talk of secrecy in the cabinet, Bill." In the next frame she says: "We have a right to know what's going on." In the next frame he says: "It's all a lot of media rubbish—Brian's got nothing to hide". And in the final frame, popping up out of the sewer, clearly is the Prime Minister saying: "Right on, Bill. You tell her."

That may not seem funny to everybody, and may not seem quite fair, but it makes my point, which is that it is not just the Liberal politicians who are concerned about this government's penchant for secrecy.

Of course, all of this secrecy, honourable senators, comes from a leader and from a government which before and during the election campaign promised us a virtually limitless horizon of open government. Fresh air, open doors, open ideas, sunshine and a whole new era of public dialogue and access was repeatedly promised.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear.

Senator Davey: Well, an honourable senator has said: "Hear, hear." Let me tell you what has happened. I propose to describe very briefly the dimensions of the problem which permeates this government. In fact, I will use only one source, Canada's self-proclaimed national newspaper which, as honourable senators will realize as recently as last August, had an intense and indecent love affair with Brian Mulroney and his Conservative team.

Let me put on the record an editorial which appeared, not in the Toronto Star, Senator Phillips, but in the Globe and Mail, of November 27, 1984, entitled: "Not open Government". That reads as follows:

The excessive secrecy—

You will like the opening:

The excessive secrecy of the Trudeau Liberals gave way, in the early weeks of the new administration, to the excessive secrecy of the Mulroney Conservatives. Prime Minister Brian Mulroney put out the word that all departments were to check with the Prime Minister's Office before handing out information. External Affairs Minister Joe Clark ordered members of his department not to speak to journalists—even socially—without permission.

Something had to give, and Mr. Mulroney responded last Friday by issuing less onerous guidelines. But there was a catch: Although civil servants were encouraged to provide factual information, they were told to do so only on the record—that is, with statements attributable to them by name.

The move, said Mr. Mulroney, was designed to "contribute to open government." Civil servants are there not to criticize or applaud the Government's actions, he said, but to provide factual details about the Government's operations—the implication being that no civil servant should feel abashed about having his or her name attached to a purely informative statement.

In theory, this is reasonable. In practice, even purely informative statements may embarrass the Government, as we saw in the affair of the Mulroneys' nanny. Last May, Mr. Mulroney assured a Hamilton television interviewer that, if he formed the Government, his nanny would not be on the Government's payroll. When Privy Council personnel supervisor Sam Morel confirmed after the election that the nanny had been put on the public payroll—a purely factual statement—he was told by William Fox, Mr. Mulroney's press secretary, to stop talking to the press.

Politicians are sensitive. Civil servants know they are sensitive. If those servants are to be held personally responsible for any information handed out, they will err on the side of safety by saying nothing—which is doubtless the effect Mr. Mulroney intended. There are a number of names for this, but "open government" isn't one of them.

● (1620)

How do we explain what is happening? What is my own theory? For openers this Tory government simply does not understand the mass media. A healthy tension between journalists—I love those nervous laughs by some honourable senators—and politicians must be at the heart of any democracy. Throughout it all, the press must be both free and unfettered in its opposition to every kind of institution, most especially governments.

I remember Pierre Elliott Trudeau after the 1980 election observing that now the Press Gallery will become the official opposition. He was right. That is exactly what happened. It is exactly what will happen to this government.

The media, honourable senators, is never opposed to Liberals or to Conservatives per se, but, invariably, to governments, whatever their political stripe, as institutions. There is only one way, I say to my honourable Conservative friends, to deal with this reality and that is openly, honestly, fairly and with broad dialogue. Sometimes when I reflect on the Trudeau years and what I might describe as Pierre Elliott Trudeau's hard line in dealing with the press, as direct and delightful as it often was, I sometimes wonder if, politically, it was not counterproductive. Nor, however, can the media be co-opted, not with this or that political appointment, not with this or that luncheon at the National Press Club. That kind of condescension could be extremely counterproductive, especially with journalists who are, after all, the sons and daughters of both Vietnam and Watergate. It is not too surprising that cynicism is often their stock in trade.

Let me suggest a second reason why this government is so preoccupied with secrecy. It relates to the government's knee-jerk camaraderie with and obvious envy of everything American. Not surprisingly, Ronald Reagan's thespian skills in handling the American mass media have not been lost on this new Tory government. The ground rules are quite simple. They are the following: One, where possible tell the people what they want to hear; two, where not possible, evade and obfuscate; three, do not take the print media very seriously because, after all, all they do is order society's agenda; four, plan your life around those twenty-second television clips which determine what most Americans think about people and events; and five, when necessary, talk directly to the American people—use television and go over the heads of the journalists and that way avoid that awful media filter.

I concede at once that Ronald Reagan performs superbly. It remains to be seen whether or not the Prime Minister can be as effective. Certainly, he is going to try, which is, of course, no criticism. However, this government will do well to remind itself that this is not yet the United States of America. Far more of us vote; far more of us are intensely interested in public affairs; and, for that matter, honourable senators, we enjoy in this country a public broadcasting service. I say to my Conservative friends: Please keep your mitts off the CBC.

I think there is a third and probably most significant explanation for this new government's preoccupation with secrecy. Why is it so frightened of the mass media? Why is it so frightened to be an open government? The reason is the government's profound lack of confidence in its programs and its policies, lack of confidence, that is, not in their own opinion of those programs but of what the media and of what the people of Canada might think about those programs. That, of course, is elitism which is a traditional Conservative value. This lack of confidence, I would suggest, breeds that insecurity which leads inevitably to slip ups and gratuitous mistakes. Joe Clark's goof with that St. Catharines radio station the other day is an excellent case in point. Mr. Clark, of course, is a decent man. So is Michael Wilson, which makes his tape recording of those meetings in Winnipeg all the more distressing.

Last Friday the Toronto Star carried a brilliant editorial cartoon. I say that as one who has been caricatured often and usually in quite unfriendly ways. I shall send a copy of this cartoon to all honourable senators. It is cut into four quarters. The first depicts the great comedy team of Laurel and Hardy; the next is the great comedy team of Abbott and Costello; the next one depicts Martin and Lewis; and, in the final quarter we have Clark and Wilson. I hope that this will remind my Conservative friends of what happens to a government when its principal preoccupation is with looking good, because that is exactly when it looks bad.

In conclusion, I trust that sooner or later this new government will allow its actions to speak for themselves minus all that flackery and secrecy. Until then we can only conclude that PC stands for paranoid Conservatives. In the meantime, I trust that others will join this inquiry into that secrecy which is an early hallmark of this new Tory government.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator Gigantès, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

FIRST REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Arthur Tremblay, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, which was authorized by the Senate to incur expenses for the purpose of its examination and consideration of such legislation and other matters as were referred to it, reported, pursuant to Rule 84, the expenses incurred by the Committee during the Second Session of the Thirty-second Parliament.

(For text of report see today's Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate.)

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Leo E. Kolber: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In this morning's Globe and Mail, an article headed "Production, Employment Drop Sharply" reads in part:

Production and employment by Canadian manufacturers took a sharp drop last month to their lowest levels in two years, according to a survey by the Purchasing Managers Association of Canada.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Shame.

Senator Kolber: Their spokesman, Mr. Dan Creighton, is quoted in this article as saying, "I was absolutely dumbfounded, I spent all last night on the figures. I couldn't believe them."

We are told that the main thrust of the government's economic policy is to instil confidence in the private sector. According to this article, these figures would seem to indicate a total lack of confidence.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: A joker.

Senator Kolber: Yesterday the Minister of Finance once again told us that interest rates would fall to 6.5 per cent between 1986 and 1990. Yet, he insists on borrowing long-term money at 12 per cent, when he knows full well that there is a wide range of options that he could undertake if he really believes his forecasts. How can the Minister of Finance instil confidence in the private sector when his own actions clearly tell us that he does not believe his own forecasts?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I must say that I enjoyed my honourable friend's presentation. He was certainly as one-sided as he could probably get. I have to tell him that I am not in a position to answer oral questions for the Minister of Finance today. I will take his question as notice and give him a written answer in due course.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FUTURE ROLE OF CANADIAN FORCES

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, reference was made in the Speech from the Throne to a re-analysis of Canada's defence position, from which most of us presumed, since it referred back to 1970, the time of the last white paper, that this would involve the preparation of further statements on paper concerning the future of our armed forces—their duties, their mandate and their support.

I understand that a journalist, namely, Peter Newman, has recently written that there is a time schedule in existence and that it refers to the production, firstly, of a green paper and, secondly, a white paper. My question is this: Is there such a time schedule? If there is, will the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us what it is?

Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate also clarify for us what we may expect to find in a green paper and what we may expect to find in a white paper? I think there are some members in this chamber, other than myself, who are not quite sure of the use of these terms. It may very well be that there are other coloured papers, such as beige, pink or blue, and if there are I would like to know about them as well.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can assure my honourable friend that it is unlikely there will be any pink papers, although there may be some blue ones. However, that is as far as we are willing to go.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): And red Tories?

Senator Roblin: Red Tories are an interesting breed. I even have a distant relationship with some of them.

I wish to tell my honourable friend that I read the article, just as he did. I must say it prompted the same query in my mind as to if there is a timetable in existence, and what it is. This was a story written by a usually well-informed journalist, but I myself have no information on the topic yet.

When I saw the newspaper article I asked for further details, just as my friend has done. When I receive answers I will be glad to pass them along to him.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Will you enlighten us with respect to the difference between the coloured papers?

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend does not really know the difference—

Senator Frith: I do not know, I must confess.

Senator Roblin: —then I will undertake to enlighten him.

Senator Frith: That is taken as notice, too, then.

EDUCATION

POST-SECONDARY—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. As he knows, this is the time of year when young people are beginning to make their plans for the forthcoming summer and for the forthcoming academic year. In view of the fact that the Summer Canada program has been cancelled, will the Leader of the Government ascertain if it is the intention of the government to announce a new program to replace the cancelled one, before Parliament adjourns for the Christmas recess? The point is that, since students discuss their plans for the forthcoming year with their parents during the Christmas holiday season, it is desirable that they have at hand that type of information when those discussions take place.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I can tell my honourable friend that my understanding is that the minister in charge of this activity has already announced that there will be a program for student employment in the summertime. The details of that program are not yet available, nor is the time of announcement. However, it is an undertaking of the minister, as I recollect her statement on the matter, and a decision will be made in reasonable time for use this summer.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, perhaps the Leader of the Government could tell his colleague that the details of the program would be greatly appreciated by those who have to make plans in the real world.

As the Leader of the Government knows, a ceiling has been placed on the amount of money available for the Canada Student Loans Program in the forthcoming fiscal year. My question is: Has a study been conducted to ascertain that this ceiling will not have the effect of closing the doors of our colleges and universities in the face of young Canadians anxious to improve their educational qualifications? I think we are all concerned that every young Canadian who wants to better himself or herself in a college or university has every practical assistance in achieving that end.

• (1410)

Senator Roblin: I think we are all interested in the policy that my learned friend talks about. I imagine the emphasis of the government will be on making sure that those students most in need and most qualified in an academic sense receive the opportunities they deserve.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I notice that the Leader of the Government makes reference to students who are "most qualified". I am sure that in his talks with his colleague he will insist that students coming out of high school with high academic records are not always the most qualified. I think if he were to talk to the Prime Minister, the Prime Minister would insist that that was true, from his personal experience of the students with whom he was associated as an undergraduate.

My third question is: Can he assure the people who are concerned about the education of Canadian youth that the formula by which Canada's contribution to the provincial governments for the support of post-secondary education will not be cut in the forthcoming fiscal year?

Senator Roblin: In respect of the latter question, I have to tell my honourable friend that a series of meetings is planned with the provincial governments, including provincial treasurers and, I think, provincial ministers of education to discuss the questions and the problems involved in the areas of their jurisdiction. Until those discussions take place, there is nothing more that I can say about the matter.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PALLIATIVE CARE—USE OF HEROIN—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. A colleague of his in the other place, Mr. McGrath, has presented a private bill that will allow doctors to prescribe heroin for people dying of cancer. This bill would allow doctors in hospitals or in palliative care units to prescribe heroin at their discretion. Essentially, as I think my friend knows, the same position is taken by the Canadian Medical Association. Also, a segment of the U.S. television program 60 Minutes was devoted to this subject within the last week.

I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he can tell us what the government's position will be on Mr. McGrath's bill, if he knows. If not, perhaps he could find out for us what that position is.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, as my honourable friend stated, this is a private member's bill and will be dealt with in that way.

Senator Frith: As my friend and others know, sometimes the government takes the position that it will support a private bill. That happened in the last Parliament with reference, I believe, to Mr. Ferguson's bill with regard to farmers' loans.

My question is—and perhaps my friend has given me the answer: Does the government intend to support or in any way aid that bill to achieve second and third reading, or is his answer to me that they do not and that it will not receive any treatment different from any other private member's bill?

Senator Roblin: My previous answer applies.

Senator Frith: My interpretation of your answer applies? That is not answering my question. Your answer is that it is a private member's bill and the government has no intention of treating it other than as a private bill, is that your answer?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend can ask the questions, but I have to give the answers. The answer that I gave is the answer that I intend to stick to.

Senator Frith: And, of course, I have the right to treat those answers as inadequate. What is so complicated about my question? It is a very simple, straightforward question. As a matter of fact, I thought it was a very straightforward question and one that could easily be answered. Now what is the answer?

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Order, order!

Senator Frith: No answer, I take it.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, on a point of order, I would refer my honourable friend to the Rules of the Senate. Perhaps because of his bitterness, might I say that time after time he has been breaking the rules? Rule 20(4) states:

A debate is out of order on an oral question, but brief explanatory remarks may be made by the senator who asks the question and by the senator who answers it.

Senator Frith: Pardon me. What rule are you reading from?

Senator Walker: I know that my friend has never heard of it before. I was reading from rule 20(4) of the rules. I shall read it again:

A debate is out of order on an oral question—

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: This is not a debate.

Senator Walker: Then you tell me what it has turned out to be.

—but brief explanatory remarks may be made by the senator who asks the question and by the senator who answers it.

In other words, there is no room during Question Period for a debate.

The Deputy Leader of the Opposition is constantly debating. I have seldom heard him ask an orderly question.

An Hon. Senator: They are intelligent.

Senator Walker: Yes, they are intelligent, but he always wants more than just a brief answer; he wants a debate. No matter what answer he receives, he goes on to something else. I think it is time that we started to live up to the rules—particularly my honourable friend.

Senator Frith: On the point of order, I am familiar with that rule—

An Hon. Senator: Are you?

Senator Frith: It is a matter of interpretation as to whether insistence on an answer constitutes debate. In my view, insisting on an answer, or asking a supplementary, or trying to get clarification of an answer, does not constitute debate.

When my honourable friend was sitting on this side, and when the now Leader of the Government was sitting in my present seat, he not only frequently debated the answers to questions but turned delayed answers into a debate.

At that time—and my colleagues can confirm this—I was asked to call the now Leader of the Government to order because he was debating delayed answers, let alone debating during Question Period, and I refused because, in most cases, the debates turned out to be interesting between him and Senator Argue or between him and someone else.

I take it, therefore, that this interpretive question is being interpreted by Senator Walker on the basis of saying that he does not find my supplementary questions as interesting and wants to call them debate. That is his opinion, but in my view there is no question that there was a great deal of debate during Question Period when my honourable friends sat on this side of the chamber. That was on the basis of debate, and mine was not.

Senator Walker: Never mind what happened when we were sitting over there.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Walker: That is in the past, and we are now sitting on this side of the chamber.

Senator Frith: Maybe you would want the jury to ignore that.

Senator Walker: You are sitting there now and you are angry; you have been angry ever since the election.

Senator Frith: There are more smiles on this side of the chamber now than there ever were when you and your colleagues were sitting on this side.

Senator Walker: It is nice to listen to you, and it is interesting to see how you vent your spleen on us by not asking questions and how you get into a debate time after time. If I may, I will illustrate that each time you get up to give us one of those fancy curves of yours.

We enjoy it; it is lots of fun, and we are all having a good laugh about it, but His Honour the Speaker has his duty to perform. I am not asking him at the moment to intervene, but I certainly will if you insist on doing things the way you have been doing them.

Senator Frith: Nice try, but I don't scare that easily.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—NEW APPROACHES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Michael Kirby: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

I read with considerable interest the answers the leader tabled yesterday in response to earlier questions asked by the Leader of the Opposition and by the Honourable Senator Grafstein. Both questions dealt essentially with the same subject, Canada-United States trade relations.

Both answers quoted the following line from the Speech from the Throne, that the "government is exploring with our neighbour new approaches to a better and mutually advantageous trading relationship."

My question is simply this: Having read the answers, and having realized on so doing that one answer talks about consultations within this country with provinces and with the business community—the answer to the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition—and that the answer given to Senator Grafstein's question, points out that, in fact, there are no existing on-going negotiations with the United States on any trade issues—

An Hon. Senator: Question!

Senator Kirby: That leads to the following question: Is it fair to say that the statement in the Speech from the Throne, which talked about exploring new approaches, on-going at the present time, with the United States was, in fact, simply empty rhetoric, or, in fact, is there something on-going that is not contained in the two answers given yesterday?

● (1420)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, to the best of my knowledge, the two answers which were given yesterday represent the situation as seen by those who are answering the questions as of this moment. If my honourable friend will be patient for a while, he will see that there will be developments in connection with our trade relations with the United States which are new and novel and not encompassed in the present discussion.

Senator Kirby: I have a supplementary question. It seems to me that the question of when that future date is going to be is of some importance to us. The International Trade Commission in the United States is, as I am sure the Leader of the Government in the Senate is aware, currently holding hearings on sectoral free trade with Canada on a variety of issues. I am sure the minister is also aware that it is a fact that the International Trade Commission must report to the office of the U.S. trade representative by March 11.

My question is: Will the Canadian government's position be established by March 11, or will we once again be left in the situation in which Canada will be reacting to a position established by the United States?

Senator Roblin: I think that the implication of the question is that by some sleight of hand we can influence the decision of this study in the United States. Perhaps we can. I know that appropriate representations will be made by the government when a suitable moment arises to do so.

Senator Kirby: I have a final supplementary question. I watched with interest the relatively slow pace of developments in this area, and I should like to ask the Leader of the Government whether or not this has anything to do with the fact that, since his government came into office, both the current Premier of Ontario and the Honourable Frank Miller—who, from news reports, has a good possibility of being the next Premier of Ontario—have given very strong public speeches against any move to greater trade liberalization with the United States. In light of the well-known connections between the so-called "Big Blue Machine," which has worked for Premier Davis and will, inevitably, work for his successor, and the work that they did with the current government, I wonder whether or not these positions of the Government of Ontario are, in fact, what is causing the federal government to go slowly on this issue.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Which language are you speaking in?

Senator Roblin: I am not quite sure which language Senator Kirby is speaking in. I will have to read Hansard in order to find that out. The pace of negotiations has something to do with the eye of the beholder. Sometimes it seems to those engaged in the operation that the pace is quick enough, but it is often the case that it does not seem to be very fast for those who are looking at it. I suspect that is the problem with my honourable friend. He would much rather be in the position of entering into negotiations than just looking at them, and I do not blame him for that. I am not in a position to answer for the policies of the Government of Ontario, in any respect, but I can say that the policies of the Government of Canada have been clearly outlined.

TRANSPORT

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION FUND—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, amendments were introduced in Parliament during the last session to the Western Grain Stabilization Act, with the result that certain sums of money were paid to producers this year. I would guess that the maximum would be somewhere in the neighbourhood of $4,000. Almost $800 million is now in the fund. Due to the drought, income in the west is very low. Some people are calculating that there will be as much as $800 million or, from an individual producer's standpoint, perhaps as much as $12,000 to $15,000 per farmer paid out of that fund this coming year.

My question is based on the fact that the government is cutting back on many programs, which was a great disappointment to me and to many farmers in northeastern Saskatchewan. What was an absolutely firm commitment on the part of the federal government to pay $16 million was changed by Mr. Wise and this government and the amount was reduced to $8 million.

An Hon. Senator: Shame!

Senator Argue: Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate assure us that the Western Grain Stabilization Act will in no way be caught up in the government's general program of reducing expenditures and reducing some of those very beneficial programs? This is a question which obviously comes up from time to time in the minds of western producers.

I would be pleased, and they would too, if we could have his assurance that the fund will remain at least as generous as it is currently; that any amendments would be to improve it from the standpoint of the farmers; and that farmers will not be subject to any cutback.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend makes a laudable reference, I think, to the problems being experienced, particularly in his home province, arising from the recent drought. Undoubtedly, that has been a very important negative factor for the farmers of Saskatchewan.

I can assure my honourable friend that the Western Grain Stabilization Fund will be amended and, I think, when he sees the amendments, he will find that they represent an improvement over the present situation. Beyond that I cannot go until the bill is ready for presentation.

Senator Argue: I am glad of that assurance by the Leader of the Government. I would point out that the cutback on disaster relief is not part of my question. My understanding is that the $16 million, matching the provincial government's contribution two to one, had been approved by the Treasury Board meeting in session when the previous government was in office, and that, even though Treasury Board under a previous administration had approved the $16 million, that sum was among the items caught in the cutbacks of the present government. In fact, it was reduced by 50 per cent.

AIRPORT CAR RENTAL SERVICE

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a further question which has to do with the government's policy regarding counters at airport buildings where rental car franchises are exercised.

For some time now, there has been a demand, and I think a legitimate one, to increase the number of counters at airports across Canada by one or two so that there can be greater competition.

There are particular persons in my province, both at the Regina and Saskatoon airports, mainly with Holiday, who have counters but who are anxious that their firm have a chance to, at least, maintain its position across the country and, hopefully, to increase its position so that competition is increased and they will have a chance to exist and do business.

My understanding is that the tenders are out and that Friday is the deadline.

The current Minister of Transport seemed to be favourably disposed to these requests when he was in opposition. The former Minister of Transport, Mr. Axworthy, as I understand from correspondence and from other evidence, had agreed to these changes, but, apparently, there is no longer a disposition to agree.

I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to use his good offices to bring this question to the attention of the Minister of Transport to see if it is possible, even at this late date, to postpone the closing date for the tenders, to have a further review, and hopefully to open it up to greater competition, and so allow some of the little guys to have a chance at this business. I pose this question in a non-controversial way in the hope that something positive can be achieved.

This issue is too important to allow it to die if an unfavourable decision is made, because I think it is the duty of the Senate to consider all of these matters. I am hopeful there can be a stay or a postponement of the deadline for those submissions so everyone can consider the whole question of increasing business and increasing competition.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I thank my honourable friend for informing me that he was going to raise this point. I appreciate his courtesy.

The question of the number of desks for automobile rentals at airports is an old one. It has been before the government on many occasions in the past and, for one reason or another, the number of desks has been limited.

According to my information, they are rationed by tender so that those who offer the best premium for use of the desks have a right to do so, although the number is, indeed, limited. That, however, does not help him at all in terms of an answer to his question. I would like to refer his anxiety to the Minister of Transport as quickly as I possibly can so that, if there is any disposition to change the rules in order to accommodate the point he makes, we will lose no time in doing so. Naturally, I cannot say what the answer will be, but I will do my best to advance his cause.

● (1430)

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate also ask the Minister of Transport if there is any particular reason why those firms to which we refer at the moment have the priority parking spots at the airport? No doubt the Leader is aware of this, because he also leaves the airport by the main door where all of the rental cars are parked. It might be interesting to find out why they have the best parking spots, those closest to the door, while other people who use the airlines frequently must walk quite a distance to the parking lot.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I do not know the answer to that question so I will have to take it as notice. I suspect, however, that the rental companies feel that they have bought and paid for that space with the premium that is offered with the right to have a desk. Perhaps that is the reason.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. I appreciate the comment of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I simply point out that, at least at some time in the past, there were only three desks, whereas it is my understanding that now there are generally four.

There is a further problem: namely, that in allowing a company like Holiday, for example, to bid, it was said that anything owed to Transport Canada by its franchise operations had to be borne by the company itself before tendering would be allowed. It seems to me that, on the surface, that looks rather unfair. I think it is a matter that has been taken into account. In any event, I appreciate the answer of the Government Leader in the Senate and I wish him well. If we have a favourable reply, there will be no need to raise this matter on another occasion.

FINANCE

DOCUMENT ENTITLED "JOHN TURNER AS MINISTER OF FINANCE: AN ERA OF ECONOMIC DECLINE"

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. What is the purpose of a November 13 Progressive Conservative document entitled: "John Turner as Minister of Finance: An Era of Economic Decline"?

An Hon. Senator: Shame!

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not really think that that is a publication which emanated from the Government of Canada. As such, it is not one that comes within my purview.

Senator Davey: Can the government leader give an assurance that the document was not produced at public expense?

Senator Roblin: I am not aware that the Progressive Conservative Party relies on government funds for the development of literature of any kind.

Senator Davey: I would ask the Government Leader whether this document was not produced at public expense. It either was or it was not. Is he saying that it was not?

Senator Roblin: I want to be perfectly sure that my answer is correct so I will take the question as notice.

Senator Davey: If I may, honourable senators, I will ask a supplementary question. If the document was produced at public expense, would the Leader of the Government let us know how much it cost to research, write, edit and produce it? I would also like to know to whom it has been distributed and to whom it will be distributed. My questions are based on the assumption that it was produced at public expense.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I am not going to accept that question until I know whether the government has any responsibility for it. I will tell my honourable friend, however, that I will be glad to make similar enquiries about any publication made by his party under similar circumstances.

Hon. D. G. Stuart: God bless you!

INDIAN ACT

STATUS OF WOMEN—REMOVAL OF DISCRIMINATORY PROVISIONS

Hon. D. G. Stuart: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It has to do with proposed amendments to the Indian Act, which amendments specifically refer to clause 12(1)(b) and would give equality to Indian women. My question is:

[Senator Argue.]

When will the government bring in the amendments to this act, as it promised to do in the last election campaign?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I believe that a similar question was addressed to the Minister in charge of this department in the House of Commons. If my recollection is correct, he said that amendments would be forthcoming relatively soon, although he did not give an exact date; nor can I.

Senator Steuart: As a supplementary, the Leader of the Government will recall that on the final day of the last session Senator Charlie Watt had greatness thrust upon him when he helped to stop the Liberal government from bringing in an amendment, because he and others, including myself and some honourable senators on the other side of the house, felt that the amendment proposed at that time by the Liberal government did not answer the question and, in fact, raised more questions than it answered.

During the course of the election Mr. Mulroney, the Prime Minister, promised the women of Canada, and specifically the Indian women of Canada, that the matter would be dealt with, if and when the Progressive Conservative Party were elected, on an emergency basis. I believe that the reason he said "emergency basis" is that if the matter were not dealt with in connection with the Charter of Rights, those Indian women who have been discriminated against would find themselves in an untenable position and they would have to appeal to the courts in their thousands. The situation would be hopeless from their point of view.

During the election the matter was regarded as an emergency, and the minister is now saying that legislation will be introduced quickly. In my view, this matter is important not only to Indian women but also to all Indian bands across this country. My question to the Leader of the Government is: Will the legislation be introduced before the Christmas recess?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I can tell my honourable friend that one of the problems facing the government involves precisely the point he has raised, namely, that the proposed legislation introduced in the last Parliament was not completely satisfactory. The minister's efforts are now devoted to framing new legislation in a way that is more acceptable to all of the parties concerned. That is not an easy task, and we should allow the minister a little leeway to do the best job he can with respect to that.

THE INUIT

STATUS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. The question of equality among native people has been a matter of concern to our people for some decades.

Since the late 1800s the discovery has been made that native people do exist in this country. During that time, the native people were known as Eskimos. Indeed, at times, they were not given a name, but were simply called savages. The Inuit in the north have largely been forgotten and have not been taken care of fairly in terms of opportunities, benefits, and so on.

My question to the Leader of the Government is: What is the intention of the government in terms of satisfying the concerns and needs of the Inuit in the north? In some respects they come under the Department of Indian Affairs, and in others they come under the provisions of the Indian Act. Even now the Inuit do not enjoy the same benefits as are enjoyed by these Indians across the country who are called status Indians. Is the government giving any consideration to legislating a new act to meet the needs of the Inuit, separate from the Indian Act?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend is one of those senators who has no enemies in this house. We cannot help but like him, even when he poses such a question which, of course, is not capable of being answered in an oral Question Period in the Senate. The best that I can do is to say that I will regard his question as a written one and will see what information I can provide that will answer the points he has raised.

● (1440)

Senator Watt: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Bill C-47, to amend the Indian Act, was introduced in the last session. One of the concerns of Indians across the country, including myself, was that the bill took care of the present generation but the succeeding generation and the generations following were not as secure. Is the Conservative Government planning to expand the rights of native peoples not only to take care of the present generation, but to take care of the second generation and generations following?

Senator Roblin: I suspect my honourable friend is referring to the rights of Indian women. If that is the case, he will have to wait until the minister presents the bill to see its contents. Then, I am sure it will be vigorously debated in this chamber.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. I am sure that the minister recognizes that if this particular amendment is left until after the Christmas break, it will be dangerously close to the final proclamation of the Charter and may be too late. I ask the leader to make representations to the minister, that if there is to be a change the legislation will be brought in as quickly as possible, either before the Christmas break or immediately afterwards.

Senator Roblin: I can assure my honourable friend that the minister in charge of the department concerned is very alert to the time sequence which he has mentioned and that we may expect him to take it into account.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—AID FOR VICTIMS OF INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT AT BHOPAL

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to draw to the attention of the Leader of the Government in the Senate the situation that prevails presently in India. I am sure that we have all been greatly troubled by the series of tragic events in India, a country with which we have maintained very close relations. The most recent event, of course, is the very serious industrial accident which has caused great loss of life and has beset the Indian authorities with great medical problems. I wonder if the Leader of the Government can tell us if the Government of Canada has had discussions either in Ottawa or New Delhi with the Government of India with a view to offering assistance, particularly in the way of supplies and equipment in the medical field.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend has correctly described the relationship between Canada and India. It is a close one and we have a warm fraternal interest in what goes on there, for ill or for good. I know that in this particular matter our diplomatic officials have been alert to the situation and if any requests come to them for Canadian assistance, such requests will receive careful consideration.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the Leader of the Government for telling us that there have been discussions on this subject between our two governments. I wonder whether the government might not suggest to the Secretariat of the Commonwealth that this might be an occasion to demonstrate Commonwealth solidarity to a sister member of the Commonwealth by co-ordinating some expression of support, if not in the form of materials, then in the form of political support. A gesture of this kind might be very well received by a country and by authorities that have been somewhat beleaguered in recent months and weeks.

Senator Roblin: It is an interesting suggestion. I do not think we would like to give "political support" to the Government of India at the moment. In view of the fact that they are engaged in an election process, to do that might prove to be a sensitive issue. However, the thrust of the suggestion that we should consult with our Commonwealth friends to see what practical measures can be devised to be of use in this situation is an interesting one, and I will make sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs is made aware of my friend's idea.

[Later]

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I wonder if I could follow up on my previous question and give it a domestic application. In view of the concern that must have been stimulated by the serious industrial accident in India, is the government contemplating a review to ensure that safety measures and precautions are taken here to avoid the occurrence of an incident of that particular type in Canada? Perhaps the Leader of the Government would like to consider the question and give us an answer later.

Senator Roblin: There has been a succession of industrial accidents around the world. A good many of them may have something to teach the world society with respect to safety measures. However, I am not sure whether this particular incident comes within that category because I do not know enough about the situation yet. I understand that representatives from the United States are in India now to try and ascertain the cause of the disaster. My impression is that if any information is gleaned from that disaster that could be applied to the Canadian situation, I would certainly be very happy to see that it received some attention.

THE ENVIRONMENT

POLLUTION—NIAGARA RIVER AND GREAT LAKES

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I would like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government. In view of the recent report by environmental experts stating that the water of Lake Ontario is being endangered by chemical waste dumped into the Niagara River system, would the leader inform this chamber what steps the government has taken to control this very serious matter?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think the minister has made a fairly complete statement in the other place on the government's policy in respect to this matter. We have been somewhat disappointed by some of the reactions of our American neighbours who have not been as forthcoming or as endowed with the sense of urgency which we all share with respect to the problem. If I recall correctly, the minister stated that he is taking further steps to see whether some more effective measures than those that have already been discussed may be taken.

Senator Haidasz: Would one of the steps being taken by the new government be a review of the cancellation of the proposed toxicological centre for Guelph, Ontario? I ask this question because I believe this centre was one of the items involved in the cuts announced by the Minister of Finance and, above all, because of the need that exists for such a centre. In view of the some 260 chemicals already on the market, many of which are dangerous to the environment, and in view of the fact that more and more chemicals are coming on to the market, there is a need for effective testing before these chemicals are foisted upon the public.

Senator Roblin: I will take my honourable friend's question as notice.

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question to that asked by Senator Haidasz. I suggest to the Leader of the Government that in making his representations to the Minister of the Environment with regard to the pollution of the Niagara River and the Great Lakes, he urge our minister to have an early meeting with the new head of the Environmental Protection Agency of the United States to review this very serious matter and to try and talk some sense into those people in the United States with regard to the attitude they have taken thus far.

Senator Roblin: I can assure my honourable friend that the minister intends to meet the new head of the Environmental Protection Agency at the earliest date convenient to both of them. However, I cannot assure him that she will take with her the attitude that he recommends.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

LEBANON—GOVERNMENT AID

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in reply to the Hon. Pierre De Bané's question concerning the Canadian Government contribution of $5 million to the Government of Lebanon. Since it is a lengthy one I ask that it be taken as read and printed in today's Hansard.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

It should be remembered that this contribution, approved in June 1983, was to be directed to Lebanon's rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts, and not for the relief of short term suffering. Canada has already been contributing through CIDA's humanitarian assistance program to the relief of suffering in that country. This program has channelled some $4.5 million to such organizations as the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees (UNRWA), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the World Council of Churches (WCC) for the relief of suffering and the provision of emergency supplies over the last several years.

On the reconstruction side, the Canadian Government in approving the $5 million proposed that consideration should be given to working in a sector or sectors where Canada had particular expertise and where Canadian companies might participate more widely in the overall construction effort.

It was also left open to consider if co-financing of reconstruction efforts with other agencies like the World Bank might offer significant administrative and multiplier effects for the contribution.

The fund has not been spent to date because of the slow process of reconciliation within Lebanon. It is crucial that reconstruction efforts not commence until there is reasonable certainty that renewed strife will not destroy the rebuilding efforts. The World Bank and others have not yet indicated a willingness to commence their reconstruction efforts and thus we are awaiting a general move in that direction.

The Canadian Government, however, is continuing to support modest efforts at relief work in Lebanon through the Mission Administered Fund (MAF) which the embassy in Beirut dispenses. These funds, $350,000 in fiscal year 1984-85, assist in the rehabilitation of such emergency services as in the health, water, sanitation and energy sectors.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jacques Flynn moved second reading of Bill C-7, to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes.

He said: Honourable senators, this being the first time I rise in this chamber since the opening of the First Session of this Parliament—except once to ask a question—I should like to congratulate all new appointees, the Speaker, the Speaker pro tempore, the leaders, the whips, and the new senators. I share all the sentiments which have been expressed to them so far.

And now, directly to Bill C-7. I find myself in a rather ironical situation: I am sponsoring a bill which, in fact, is a creature of the former government. Can you imagine, here I am on this side of the chamber moving second reading of a measure of the Trudeau government and of former Minister of Finance Marc Lalonde. That is the chore my leader has saddled me with today.

It is not really as bad as all that, since this bill stems from the budget proposals of last February 15 which was not as disastrous as a certain budget brought down by the current Leader of the Opposition a few years ago. Unlike the famous MacEachen budget, the February budget had been endorsed by most people.

So it was on February 15 that the provisions of this bill were made public during the speech of the Minister of Finance. Then there was a rather extensive and detailed public debate with the result that, in April, the government tabled the draft of a budget bill which was referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of the House of Commons. The committee considered the bill and issued a favourable report.

No bill as such was tabled in Parliament before the summer adjournment in June and, therefore, before the dissolution in July. However, keeping in mind the evidence heard in committee and the comments of the public, the government released in August a technical version of the provisions which it thought would eventually be included in a real bill. Except for very minor changes, Bill C-7 is a faithful reproduction of the document published last August by the former government.

This kind of bill—roughly one hundred pages and even more clauses—can hardly be debated or fully explained at the second reading stage. Department of Finance officials have provided me with a text where they have summarized the most important clauses of the bill. Since I want to be as accurate and as technical as possible, I intend to read the notes I was given.

● (1450)

[English]

The most important change in Bill C-7 from the August draft is to make the small business tax simplification amendments effective for the 1985 and subsequent taxation years—to provide certainty to taxpayers in the effective date of those amendments. As well, two proposals relating to tax administration were not included in the draft which I mentioned previously. One of the proposals, which would have increased the time for filing a notice of objection from 90 to 180 days, was not proceeded with due to more efficient procedures being introduced at Revenue Canada. The other proposal, which would have permitted the taxpayer to provide satisfactory security rather than make immediate payment for taxes in dispute, was not proceeded with in light of the government's commitment to act quickly on its undertaking to end the requirement that taxpayers disputing the amount of their tax must pay the assessed amount pending a court determination of the matter.

I will now deal with the contents of the bill. Virtually all the measures in Bill C-7 are relieving and have been well received. Among the most significant of these measures are the simplifying and relieving amendments to the taxation of small business which reduces the cost of tax compliance for small business by (1) eliminating the cumulative deduction account, which limited access to the small business tax rate to $1 million of accumulated income; (2) repealing the distinction for non-qualifying business which applied to certain professional and other service businesses; and (3) simplifying the rules relating to personal service businesses, specified investment businesses and corporate partnerships. These measures were based on broad consultation and have been enthusiastically received by small businesses and tax professionals.

Bill C-7 contains important amendments for farmers. A new farm capital gains roll-over is being made available to a taxpayer who disposes of qualifying farm property owned by him or his spouse at the end of 1983. The tax on up to $120,000 of the taxable capital gains arising on such a disposition may be deferred by transferring the amount of the taxable capital gain to a registered retirement savings plan. Also, there are a number of improvements to the existing income tax provisions allowing tax free transfers of farm properties within a farmer's family.

Bill C-7 revises the rules regarding the taxation of charities. The amendments, which mainly affect charitable foundations and have little impact on charitable organizations as such, are the culmination of extensive consultations with charitable groups that took place in 1982 and 1983.

The bill contains important relieving changes to the administration of the tax system, including amendments relating to appeals, re-assessments, tax refunds, instalment payments and penalties on late filed elections. For example, taxpayers with federal taxes of $1,000 or less will not be required to make quarterly instalments. The Tax Court of Canada will be allowed to order Revenue Canada to pay the costs of a taxpayer's successful appeal. On this point, may I say that I am very pleased because I remember very well that I suggested such a change in the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on a previous occasion and, at that time, I received assurance from the minister that something would eventually be done.

The four-year limit on re-assessment of tax will be reduced to three years with respect to the 1983 and subsequent taxation years.

There are many other relieving or clarifying amendments contained in the bill, including rules to clarify the treatment of third-party payments under spousal separation agreements, technical improvements to the small business inter-generation rollover and some simplification to a number of other provisions such as the computation of the auto standby charge and the transfer of resource assets.

Finally, there are only three tightening amendments included in the draft bill. One is a measure to eliminate the inappropriate tax reduction and tax deferral opportunities that arise through the use of offshore investment funds.

A second change generally prevents benefits from an unregistered pension fund or plan from being transferred tax-free to a registered pension plan or a registered retirement savings plan. That change is necessary to ensure that the contribution limits that apply to registered plans are not inappropriately increased by use of unregistered plans.

In addition, the draft bill contains provisions to ensure that scientific research tax credits cannot be used to reduce a taxpayer's liability for interest on unpaid tax instalments.

On the whole, as I have indicated, the bill contains, nearly exclusively, relieving features which the public generally favours. It is very important that this bill receive the approval of the Senate and, subsequently, Royal Assent before the end of the year because most of these provisions are applicable to the present, 1984, taxation year, and also to be able to print the new forms as soon as possible.

Honourable senators on this side of the chamber and on the other side may wish this bill to go to committee. I will move that it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce which will have its organizational meeting tomorrow morning. Therefore, assuming that the bill receives second reading today, that committee could have this bill as its first topic for discussion.

In any event, in the other place, the bill was passed very quickly in Committee of the Whole. Also, since this is essentially their bill, I doubt whether my good friends on the other side would be opposed to it. We on this side of the chamber support the bill. Since we want to be able to proceed with the new government's legislation, I would hope that the debate on this bill would be completed fairly quickly. I commend the bill to the Senate.

On motion of Senator Petten, for Senator Kolber, debate adjourned.

CUSTOMS ACT CUSTOMS TARIFF

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Lowell Murray moved second reading of Bill C-9, to amend the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff.

[Senator Flynn.]

He said: Honourable senators, this bill, which I have the honour of presenting for second reading this afternoon, is of respectable—and some might say impeccable—bi-partisan ancestry. I would hope that that fact alone would commend it to honourable senators. To change the metaphor, this bill bears the fingerprints, so to speak, of four different governments: the Trudeau government pre-1979 which conducted the multilateral trade negotiations known as the Tokyo Round under GATT; the Clark administration, formed in June 1979, which continued those negotiations and signed the Customs Valuation Agreement, which is the matter with which we are concerned in this bill; the Trudeau administration, formed in March 1980, which prepared the legislation based on the GATT agreement, following consultations between the Tariff Board and the private sector in Canada and discussions between the government and our trading partners. The then Minister of Finance, the Honourable Marc Lalonde, presented, with his February 1984 budget, notices of ways and means motions containing provisions that were similar, if not identical, to many of the provisions that we have before us in Bill C-9.

Finally, the Mulroney government now takes responsibility for this matter and presents this bill to carry out Canada's international commitments to implement certain recommendations of the Tariff Board and to respond to representations made by the private sector. As the Right Honourable John Napier Turner might have said, "We have no option."

Honourable senators, successive rounds of multilateral trade negotiations led to significant decreases in tariff rates. When the time came for the Tokyo Round, nations began to focus their attention on other ways of liberalizing world trade and opening it up. In particular, they turned their attention to ways of standardizing other major features of their customs and tariff regimes. The object was to ensure that the rules of the game were the same for exporters and importers, no matter what the country of origin.

One of the major successes of the Tokyo Round was the signing by the major trading nations of the new customs valuation code, a neutral and uniform method for valuing imported goods.

As honourable senators know, most tariff rates are expressed as a percentage of the value of the goods on which the duty is being levied. The problem was that different countries had different means of expressing the value of the goods on which duty was being imposed. For example, Canada used something called "the fair market value system" to establish the amount on which duty would be levied, and the fair market value system was the price at which identical goods were sold in the exporters home market.

Well, the new customs valuation code of GATT, which this bill will implement for Canada, establishes something called the "transaction value system". What that means, in very general terms, is that the duty will be levied on the price that the Canadian importer pays to the vendor from the exporting country. There was some reluctance, and some cost to Canada, to abandon the old system and to move to the new system. The fair market value system, which had been in place in this country for many years as a means of establishing the value of imported goods for duty purposes, was, I am told, unique. Certainly, there was no great groundswell of public pressure demanding that it be abandoned here. But the benefit of the new system to Canada as an exporting country is that it provides a standard set of rules internationally for valuing goods for duty purposes.

Honourable senators will appreciate that the existence of a variety of ways of valuing these goods in many countries enabled countries to use the customs valuation system as a way of erecting subtle and not-so-subtle barriers to trade. That will not be possible under the new system. Arbitrary values are not allowed, and Canadian exporters will know how their goods are being valued for duty in the countries to which we export. Canadian exporters, and all exporters, will be able to make decisions based on the knowledge of the rules of the game.

In return for this certainty for our exporters, Canada, of course, has had to accept that the same regime be applied to our imports, and that brings me to the cost and the inconvenience of changing systems to Canada and how we are dealing with that.

The systems in effect in other countries were much closer to the new system than was Canada's. Canada saw that its implementation of the new code would require much more extensive reorientation of its customs practices than would be the case with most of its trading partner countries. Moreover, the Canadian government correctly foresaw that changing from the old system to the new system would have the effect of lowering the base on which some goods would be valued for duty. That being the case, the level of protection offered by the tariff would be diminished.

When Canada signed the new agreement it attached two conditions thereto, conditions which were agreed to by our trading partners. First of all, it was a condition that the code would be implemented in this country four years later than in the countries of our trading partners; that is to say, we would implement the code on January 1, 1985. The second condition that we insisted upon was that we would reserve the right to increase tariff rates to compensate for the lower valuation of some goods that would take place as a result of our changing systems. We reserved the right to increase tariff rates in order to maintain the same level of protection that would have applied had we not signed the agreement.

Part I of this bill proposes the amendments to the Customs Act necessitated by the introduction of the new code as of January 1, 1985; Part II contains amendments to the Customs Tariff to implement the tariff rate increases that are necessary to offset the reductions in the valuation base that I referred to. I may say that there are approximately 100 tariff lines involved in these increases.

The government wants to emphasize that the overall effect of the proposed measures, when combined with the adoption of the new valuation system, will be neutral. The intention is to maintain the current level of protection and not to increase it.

There are several other matters in Part II of the bill to which I should allude briefly before I resume my seat. Under the old system, there was a provision to enable the Minister of National Revenue to establish the value for duty for certain classes of goods when the value could not be otherwise determined under the law. What I am talking about here are the so-called "used goods" and "goods of less than prime quality." The Minister of National Revenue would, by prescription, establish the value of those imports for duty purposes.

That kind of ministerial prescription is not allowed in the new code. Therefore, in order to protect Canadian products, the Tariff Board recommended a 25 per cent increase in the duties which would otherwise be applicable under the new transaction value system to goods defined as "used goods" and "goods of less than prime quality". This bill authorizes the Governor-in-Council, by regulation, to define what are used goods and goods of less than prime quality, and it enables importers who are affected by these provisions to avail themselves of the appeal procedures of the Customs Act.

The bill also provides for amendments to the Customs Tariff in respect of duties on items classified as "made in Canada" or "not made in Canada." As part of the multilateral trade negotiations, Canada had agreed to review those items on which the dutiable status depended on whether they were of a class or a kind made in Canada or not made in Canada. Some of our trading partners, the United States in particular, expressed concern about this rather broad classification. In particular, their concern was that specific goods could change in status from "made in Canada" to "not made in Canada", or vice versa, and that this introduced an element of uncertainty into the system. In any event, Canada agreed to review that whole classification. The Tariff Board was assigned to conduct a review. It did so; it made a number of recommendations, 19 of which are proposed to be implemented by this bill.

● (1520)

Part II of this bill also implements, effective January 1, 1985, the expanded duty-free product coverage of the GATT agreement on trade in civil aircraft. Canada already extends duty-free entry to most of the 32 new product categories now covered by the agreement and only minor inclusions need to be made to our duty-free provisions. On the other hand, the government is confident that our export opportunities to other signatories' markets, including the United States, Japan, and the European communities, will be improved as a result of their having removed tariffs on these 32 categories of products.

The bill ratifies retroactively a number of changes made in the February 1984 budget, in particular an increase in the limit for duty and tax-free entry of unsolicited gifts to $40 from $25. There is also the extension of duty-free entry to a wide range of capital equipment used by semi-conductor manufacturers. I am informed that these companies now export over 90 per cent of their production, and this measure will assist them in lowering their costs, thus improving their competitiveness.

A number of other minor changes are included in the bill which respond to requests from the private sector or resolve certain technical administrative problems for customs officials.

Honourable senators, the significance of this bill is that it enhances Canada's contribution to the multilateral trading system by bringing our customs valuation procedures into line with those of our trading partners. These measures are also important because they are of benefit to many sectors of the Canadian business community. Therefore, I have no hesitation in commending the bill to honourable senators. Insofar as the government is concerned, we would move at the appropriate time that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, unless honourable senators feel that that is unnecessary.

On motion of Senator Hays, debate adjourned.

THE CABINET

ACCESS TO INFORMATION—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Davey calling the attention of the Senate to the Government's preoccupation with secrecy.—(Honourable Senator Gigantès).

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I think this preoccupation with secrecy is getting to be a bit much when it extends to what is published in Hansard and our colleagues on the Government side start changing what they said without letting us know.

For instance, I remember clearly that the Leader of the Government called me a "sacré bleu", which is a damn Tory or a sacred Tory. However, upon reading Hansard, I noticed that this had been edited to read "sacrebleu". I protest. I have never been called a "sacré bleu" in my life. It is the first time anyone ever called me that. It is a bit of a shock and no one will ever believe it, but I see it as another verbal trophy to add to my collection.

I think it was unethical of the Leader of the Government to change the text from "sacré bleu" to "sacrebleu". I must protest. Such things should not be allowed to happen. It worries me. This kind of information management is excessive. There may be another example I did not see.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: If you go on like this you will be fine.

Senator Gigantès: I want to thank my colleague Senator Flynn. He is universally loved and admired because of his infinite capacity for lively give-and-take.

[English]

I read Senator Phillips' speech, but due to the fact that I have new glasses perhaps I missed something he had said, and I should like to ask Senator Phillips to forgive me if I did. I distinctly remember him saying that the government was sort of changing things by providing a kind of trampoline, you know, one of these little contraptions of cloth in a frame of metal on which you bounce.

[Senator Murray.]

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: That was Donald Johnston's comment.

Senator Gigantès: You were quoting Donald Johnston approvingly, but it is not recorded in Hansard. I do not know why it is not there because I have poetic visions of Tories on a trampoline bouncing up and down simultaneously pointing an accusing finger at the Liberals—

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Who are 211 strong!

Senator Gigantès:—holding handkerchiefs to their eyes to staunch their bitter tears at the depredation you committed and patting themselves on the back all the time—a difficult exercise which Jane Fonda would be proud of.

I should also like to thank Senator Phillips for providing us with proof that both partisanship and non-partisanship are necessary in this chamber. He said something with which we all agree. He said: "I do not mind that, as long as you do not suggest I should have been a Liberal." Perish the thought. We never would, Senator Phillips. We fully agree with you. You provide a splendid example by that statement of how bipartisan we can be. Every honourable senator would agree that they would not want you to be a Liberal.

Why do I talk so much about Senator Phillips in this context? It is because he intruded into the information and secrecy field by accusing us of "the big lie." He was probably joking. He is a Canadian and I assume that all Canadians who are not proven criminals are nice. He brings to mind a guard I had in a prison camp in Korea who, at first sight when one listened to him, appeared very dreadful. Senator Doody reproached me the other day about my lack of decorum and I want to say that as a new senator I try to pattern myself after my elders and I imitated the Honourable Senator Phillips. In any event, he reminds me of that guard who turned out to have a very good heart underneath. I can appreciate that if one digs deep enough, one can reach the rough diamond that is hidden under a rough exterior.

He also reminds me of a story which Mr. Diefenbaker told me. That gentleman had a sneaking liking for me because I was the only journalist who wrote in the Globe and Mail in 1957 that he was going to win the election. I was a good reporter; he won the election. I recall Mr. Diefenbaker telling me that Senator Phillips was an example of how either election or appointment can be an error. He never understood how the wonderful people from Prince Edward Island, the home of Confederation, elected him. He admitted that he had asked that Nathan Phillips be appointed to the Senate and instead they made a mistake in his office—the offices of Tory governments and chiefs of staff—and they sent the name of Mr. Orville Phillips to Government House, and then it was too late to do anything else.

Senator Phillips spoke of the big lie. He mentioned that he has not heard of one section of the economy that is in good shape. He also said that this was the fault of the Liberal Party. He said we have left them with a terrible heritage. Since we are speaking of information, I hope they are going to start telling the truth.

● (1530)

Honourable senators, I will use some statistics from the OECD because I daren't use statistics from Statistics Canada for fear of some poor employee of Statistics Canada finding himself decapitated by Mr. Erik Nielsen. The OECD figures tell us that from 1968 until 1983 the Canadian economy grew, on average, at a real rate after inflation of 3.4 per cent per year, faster than that of the United States, Germany, Italy or the United Kingdom. Only Japan's economy grew at a faster rate.

Compared with 1968, by the end of 1983 an additional three million Canadians were employed. This is an increase in employment of 42 per cent. The average increase for the United States, Germany, Italy, the United Kingdom, France and Japan was only 15 per cent. Canada's record for absorbing new workers into the economy has been unmatched. We have unemployment because many more people entered the work force than before. In 1968 two and a half million women, 30 per cent of working-age women, were employed in Canada. In 1983 the figures were 4.5 million or 52.6 per cent. Honourable senators, that is an explanation of unemployment. Our labour force grew 3.7 times in those 15 years. In contrast, the labour forces of the other six major OECD countries grew at half the Canadian rate.

Honourable senators, I turn now to real disposable income per capita, that is, what is left in your pocket after taxes and inflation. In Canada, during those 15 years, it grew by 60 per cent and in the U.S. by only 35 per cent. If one looks at the economic progress of the seven principal members of the OECD, the United States, the United Kingdom, Germany, France, Italy, Japan and Canada, over the past 15 years, presented in the form of a graph, that graph would show ups and downs in all seven cases. Sometimes, when one country is up, another country is down. But 15 years is a long enough period to establish a trend, and Canada's trend during that period was unmatched.

Why do I say this to my honourable friend, Senator Phillips? Instead of jumping up and down on that imaginary trampoline, patting himself on the back along with Mr. Wilson, pointing accusing fingers and stanching crocodile tears, why does he not tell business that this economy has performed well? When the government does not say that, it destroys confidence.

We are told today by Mr. Creighton of the Purchasing Managers' Association of Canada that there is a lack of confidence. We were told that the mere election of the Tory government was going to produce marvellous opportunities for investment; thousands upon thousands of jobs; and millions of dollars would be pouring into Canada for investment. What do we see? Read it in the Globe and Mail. Honourable senators, I will not give you the figures because they are too dismal and I do not like to rub it in. Since October, retail sales are down; employment is down; and production is down. Honourable senators, those facts hardly strengthen the argument—"I showed you what we did." The government should not destroy the confidence in the Canadian economy by its Jeremiah whining over this issue; it only keeps the economy limping.

I revert now, honourable senators, to the business of information. I am, as is Mr. Fotheringham, whom I am sure you have all read, an ink-stained wretch of long standing. I have operated as a journalist in 59 nations. I should like to give you some facts about how the press feels on the subject of information and governments. Any decent, self-respecting reporter believes that, basically, his relationship with a government must be adversarial. Joseph Pulitzer put it best when he said, "Our job is to throw the rascals out." That is what reporters believe about government, whether it is this government or the previous government. They do not trust a politician. There is a saying in every newsroom, "If a politician tells you it is Tuesday, it is probably Friday." That is what they feel about politicians. They are skeptical by nature. St. Thomas is their patron saint. They want to put their fingers in the marks of the nails before they believe anything, and that is good for our democracy.

They are all terribly afraid of corruption. They all speak of a great Canadian journalist called Max Freedman who ably represented the Winnipeg Free Press and the Manchester Guardian in Washington. He was the pride of his profession until he allowed himself to be co-opted by the news management techniques of Lyndon Baines Johnson. His career was ruined. He lost the respect of his readers, of his editors and of his peers. Journalists are very frightened of that and are going to be very suspicious of this government's news management techniques.

Moreover, the press holds the firm belief that it has the right to know, especially those things which you do not want the press to know. It matters not which party is in power; the press does not believe that the party in power has the right to hold secrets unless they are secrets affecting national defence. If it is anything that the government wants to keep secret because, by keeping it secret, it will make the government appear in a better light, regardless of the political party to which the government belongs, the reporters will redouble their efforts to find that information and bring it out. It is their job; it is how they will operate; and it is how they are operating.

My journalistic colleagues inform me that we have a problem. Now public servants are afraid to speak, which is exactly what the government wanted to achieve, because they might be identified as somebody's source and be punished. But that is not a very difficult thing to get around. Journalists know how to do it. One of them told me he had received a document in a brown envelope. He did not know who the sender was, but, from the nature of the document, it would have been possible to identify the author of the document, who may not have been the sender. The author of the document may have been perfectly innocent, but she was the one who risked being punished. This journalist, who cared about this particular public servant, gave the document to a professor who works in a think-tank, and the think-tank will put these numbers through its number-crunching machine. I assure honourable senators that I will be delighted to bring the information produced by this machine before this chamber. I would point out that I refused to look at the document in question because I might have been able to identify this public servant and do him great harm by speaking about it.

Honourable senators, there is another aspect to this, and that is the insult of these guidelines to a public servant. I have served as a journalist in 59 countries and have not found a better public service than the one we have in Canada, although it has its defects—all bureaucracies, private and public have defects.

[Translation]

But I do not know of any public service so honest, responsible, dedicated and loyal.

The other day, a public servant, who is not a Conservative, spent two hours convincing me that there is some good in the guidelines laid down by the Conservative Government. He was doing it out of conscientiousness because he works for the Government. The Government is his employer and he saw it as a duty to stand up for his Minister.

Our public servants are loyal and decent; they carry out their duties and stand up for their employer, but you are insulting them when you indicate by those guidelines that they do disloyal things: this amounts then to an incentive for disloyalty. You are ruining the high level of decency and honesty in the Canadian public service. You should be ashamed because we do need a public service such as ours.

[English]

I have seen other public services in many other countries. I can tell honourable senators that we are lucky to have one such as ours. We should not be insulted because our public servants are loyal and decent Canadians.

• (1540)

If I may be permitted, I will tell honourable senators a story. When Mr. Clark took office, one of his minions—I would never suspect Mr. Clark of doing this himself—asked a public servant who had worked for Mr. Trudeau to remain in the office in which he was working. The first request of that public servant was to give a list of the specific questions Mr. Trudeau had asked. That public servant resigned. If honourable senators insist, I will identify him. He left the public service because he felt that it was not right that a new government should ask a servant of the old government to reveal what a former Prime Minister had asked. He asked that government official how he would feel if the situation were reversed, if the Liberals were coming into power and were asking precisely what the Conservative Prime Minister had consulted about.

In light of this passion for secrecy, I ask the government to try to provide some better cosmetic treatment to its policies. I ask that it not insult the public service and not try to control the press. A democracy has the right to know everything, not just what it's government wants it to know.

Honourable senators, I am a journalist by religion. My fellow journalists think as I do. The country will only suffer if the government continues this policy of trying to keep from the public not only what it decides but also the other options available and the reasons for its decision. It is an effort to suppress when a government muzzles a loyal and decent public service—one that is only asking to serve a new government as loyally and as decently as it has served all of the governments of Canada. Thank you.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I am not quite sure whether I am moving the adjournment of the Throne Speech debate or the debate on Senator Davey's inquiry.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Try the Throne Speech—it's more fun.

On motion of Senator Phillips, debate adjourned.

THE SENATE

POSITION OF SPEAKER—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Senator Maurice Riel rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, November 13, 1984:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to his tenure as Speaker of the Senate, his experiences and his recommendations to the Senate.

He said: Honourable senators, it is four o'clock and I think we would all like to get back to our offices. However, I wanted to give you a short report on my experiences, and I would rather proceed right away and get it over with.

I am reminded of a lawyer who became a member of the Senate. His name was John Hackett, a Conservative who was appointed by Louis Saint-Laurent. He was a famous lawyer in Montreal and tended to make long speeches. He also submitted long briefs. Once he was pleading a case before the Court of Appeal, and the five appeal judges looked at him with considerable apprehension when they saw the size of the brief he was holding. Mr. Hackett, who had a lot of experience, said to the judges: "I am sure, Your Honours, that you will read my brief." Of course the five judges hastily said "yes", thinking he would leave. He then said: "Since you are going to read it anyway, Your Honours, we might as well read it together". So he started to read his brief.

Honourable senators, I would like to report briefly on my short stay in the Chair in order to put on the record some of the experiences and problems of the Speaker. Then perhaps my successors will be able to find precedents for certain situations and how problems were resolved, a kind of information bank that can be readily consulted. I hope that some day all this can be entered into a computer and that my successors will be geniuses. All they will have to do is type their questions on a keyboard to get instant answers. Maybe we could install a machine on the Chair, which would settle our problems faster than you can say Jack Robinson.

Before proceeding with my report, and since there are traditions and traditions exist to be observed, I would like to extend my congratulations to the new officers of the Senate. I would like to start with the Speaker, Senator Charbonneau, and extend my best wishes for a long and pleasant stay in the Chair. I am sure he will perform his duties with the authority, dignity and competence he has always shown in the various activities where he has either directed or been a participant in in the course of his career. I am sure that with the support and help of his charming wife, he will add lustre to the important function of Speaker of the Senate.

I want to say a few words about Senator Roblin, the new Leader of the Government, or the Leader of the new Government in the Senate. He has gained a wide-ranging political experience in Manitoba as well as on the federal scene. He spent a few years with the management of a major Canadian company. His command of the French language is remarkable. He is a polite and affable gentleman with deep convictions about the tenets and principles of his party. I have always been impressed by the outstanding quality of his contribution to the Senate. I do not entertain any doubts about his competence to lead his party tactfully and efficiently, nor about his obvious sincerity.

I should like to say many good things about Senator Flynn, if that does not offend his modesty. Since he is not here, I can speak freely.

During the long journey his party made through the desert, he was a tireless Leader of the Opposition. He is very competent in parliamentary law, I would even say shrewd, and he knows how to goad the leaders of the former government and make them lose their temper now and then, and he can indeed enjoy himself in spite of the seemingly never-ending tediousness and near hopelessness of those dark years in opposition. William the Silent once said something which has always fascinated me: "I do not need to hope to undertake something, nor to succeed to persevere". Senator Flynn had years to reflect upon that belief. Perhaps now we will have to reflect upon it for some time.

I want to congratulate my leader who, apparently, has left to discharge his responsibilities in the Queen City. He is just like a spring foal. From the Commons, he went to the Senate as Leader of the Government, in a single jump. His thirty years of active political life were a ready-made springboard. We will need all his resourcefulness and all his ability for years to come if the opposition in the Senate is to be forceful and properly directed. He will have his work cut out for him. His experience at the head of many departments make him magnificently prepared to fight on several fronts at the same time.

I have no doubt that his extensive knowledge of political strategy will help keep the government within the limits prescribed by popular consensus. That is the consensus we in the opposition will have to monitor. Political power is a meaningless concept unless it can be traced back to the will of the people or reflected in the spirit of those who govern and those who are governed. To my absent leader, I say good luck.

I shall now go on to the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, the Honourable Senator Frith. He has gained quite a reputation in the Senate as a parliamentarian and a debater. Both in French which he handles well, and in English where he is eloquent, he enjoys an enviable authority of his own. I should point out that personal authority does not necessarily make him authoritarian.

When mention is made of the most influential members of the Senate, his name is sure to come up as his attention to detail have made him one of the leading members of the Senate. I wish him good luck as well as a reliable and unfailing memory.

I would like to salute many senators who have made great contributions to the Senate and been of great help to their colleagues, my seatmate in particular, the former leader of the previous government, who has just come back from a crusade, or perhaps a cruise, to Nairobi, where he attended a conference on the environment. I have no doubt that this conference, which was prepared long in advance by adequate briefings, will be an unequalled success. It will not be too costly and our delegates will bring back findings which will be invaluable for our environment, at least as far as the involvement of the Senate in educating people in this regard is concerned.

Indeed, Senator Olson assured me that he would give us a detailed report on his trip; I hope that this report will be as clear, concise and precise as his answers to the Opposition when he was Leader of the Government in the Senate at the end of last June.

● (1550)

I do not want to forget Senator Doody whose capacity for work and sense of humour have brought him only friends in this chamber. I am confident that he will be a good Deputy Leader of the Government.

I also want to salute Senator Macdonald as, after about 10 years in the Senate, one gets to know just about everyone and one likes to be polite. I come from the country where it did not take us long to say something but we were always polite. I therefore salute Senator Macdonald who did his job as opposition whip so good-heartedly.

I also salute Senator Phillips, the new chief whip of the Government. I found the following sentence about the British Parliament in a book purchased in London:

The Government Chief Whip, who also holds the ancient but obscure title of Patronage Secretary, reports regularly to Cabinet meetings.

I asked Senator Phillips if he was aware of this rather special title of Patronage Secretary and he told me that he had never heard of it. And I have never heard it either. This is no doubt a medieval practice that has long been abandoned. Further down I see this: "The Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard". I wondered who among the Government Members could assume that title with the greatest of flourish. The other day, Senator Murray referred to my Deputy Leader's role in Gilbert and Sullivan. Maybe he should wear that title, "Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard".

Even though the book I just quoted did not refer to the Opposition Whip, I would like to mention Senator Petten, a pleasurable and hard-working Newfoundlander. Whips often perform unappreciated tasks that are often criticized. Somebody must do it. Senator Petten has always done it willingly.

I would never fail to mention my friend, Senator LeMoynes, who was appointed to the important function of chairman of the caucus. This is of course a highly responsible position. I have no doubt he is now looking with his benevolent eye at this assembly, this pool of thought where very deep and novel thoughts circulate. He can get some ideas for his coming work; he can find high style comments, and even Cambronne's famous word with an American twist.

Finally, I will not fail to mention the coming of a group of young senators. I will call "les bleus" although not in the sense of "sacré bleu". As you know in France, new Army recruits are called "les bleus". Any newcomer in a position is called a "bleu". Then these Liberal senators are "les bleus" to us in the Senate.

Honourable Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Beware!

Senator Riel: In that case, I shall mend my ways and add "sacré" before the word. Having been in the House of Lords, I found within a few minutes that partisan spirit seemed very subdued. I noted a very powerful fraternity, to the point that I was told, Honourable Senators, that one day, there was on the "wool sack" a Lord who was in the habit of sipping "mulled port". So he had had too much. He rose as he was entitled to, and feeling somewhat heavy, with "mulled port" no doubt—he fell on his knees. At that point he said: "I beg you, my dear colleague". So he was picked up and set back on his "wool sack". Those are not things that are usually told. It was Lord Brougham who, the Duke of Wellington said, will remain famous as the designer of a carriage. Lord Brougham who was rather quick-witted and liked to indulge in glasses of mulled port, answered: "Yes, but the Duke of Wellington will remain famous as a footwear designer." Who wears Wellington boots today? Perhaps they still do in Charlevoix. I wanted to say to our friends that the visit to the House of Lords to which I have just referred was quite interesting. Another story comes to my mind. There was a sitting of the Privy Council and the Lords were there. I was told this story about the trial of Queen Caroline who had cheated on her husband. She had been most unfaithful to him. This kind of thing happened even in those days. It is a rather complicated story. To retain her rights, she had to undergo a trial before the House of Lords. Anyway, she was compelled to leave when she lost her case. The Lord Chancellor who was presiding, therefore your alter ego, Mr. Speaker, sent her a little note to wish her a good journey and it read as follows:

Our gracious Lady, we thee implore
Go away and sin no more;
But if that burden be too great,
Go away at any rate.

Therefore I think that even if they dealt with serious matters, the Lords did things well. They even found time to enjoy life. They could take things rather easy and add years to their life.

I should like to extend my congratulations to a few more people. I wanted to say to Senator Tremblay and to Senator

[Senator Riel.]

Macquarrie that they performed quite well. Throne speeches being what they are, and I have heard quite a few of them, seem to me to be somewhat similar to the catechism used in Quebec, particularly the part dealing with temporal works. The list was long, and then you had to put everything into practice.

This reminds me of another story. I am not mentioning these gentlemen's talents which, I imagine, will be eventually put to more practical and effective use. Just the same, this reminds me of a story or anecdote concerning a Speech from the Throne which was an opportunity for Dr. Johnson to demonstrate his witticism. Those who have will get; therefore, it must be true. I told that story to the Leader of the Government the other day. A young man had shown an essay to Dr. Johnson and asked him about its value. Dr. Johnson said: "Your essay is both good and original, but the part which is good is not original, and the part which is original is not good."

I think I have said something about everybody. We have lost Senator Riley whom I was very fond of and whom I had known for 25 years. He was happy warrior. He had been both an MP and a MPP. He had been a minister. He loved politics very much and lived for it 24 hours a day. When he was alone with you, you felt that he was on the hustings: that is how much he loved life! He enjoyed joking and pulling people's leg. But he had a heart of gold.

I should like also to pay tribute to the Honourable Eric Cook, from Newfoundland, formerly a senator, experienced lawyer and businessman. He was a gentleman who would treat all his colleagues with utmost affability. He had outstanding administrative know-how.

Senator Donahoe was a friend of mine. Although he was a different kind of Irishman, he was very typical. He was definitely a man of the right. He was endowed with eloquence in the old way, which is by no means derogative. He was deeply religious. He had the courage of his convictions. He was not afraid to stand and be counted. I wish both these senators a long and happy retirement. May they come and visit us often.

● (1600)

My first experience after my appointment on September 15 or 16 was to entertain President Zhao Ziyang at luncheon. I enquired as to the eating habits of the Chinese when they are abroad, and I received plenty of advice that was completely useless because they did not like the food.

I was told to serve them champagne. So I served them champagne, but what they liked was beer. This would have been much less expensive. Our information services are not quite adequate. At a joint meeting of the Senate and the House of Commons in the other place, the Secretariat of the External Affairs Department told me not to prepare any speech, because this was a very delicate matter, and they were preparing one for me.

So, why not take advantage of this since there were people brighter than me. Then I waited for the speech. Three days before the event I had to call them and say: "I would like to get my hands on that speech". They told me not to worry, that I was going to get it.

The following day, I called again and was told: "The person in charge of that is not here, but we are going to get back to you." And the next day again, of course I still did not have it. Finally, Mr. Zhao Ziyang was here. There was only half an hour to go before the joint meeting in the House of Commons, and I still did not have the speech. Then I lost my temper and I was told: "If it is just that, we are sending you the speech delivered by Senator Marchand when Mrs. Thatcher was here. It is the same thing."

Somebody sent me by messenger the speech Senator Marchand had made for Mrs. Thatcher. It was on printed pages torn from the House of Commons Hansard, complete with references to the Mother Country, the Magna Carta, the Mother of Parliaments and so on and so forth.

I had to scribble a few words on the corner of a desk in an attempt to have a decent word of thanks for Mr. Zhao Ziyang. As you will easily understand, I am much more fluent in French than in English, so I wrote in French. This is why I did not have one single word of English in my thanks to Mr. Zhao Ziyang, because I did not have time to put any in. Also, I do not think it would have mattered, because he speaks neither French nor English.

All this is not terribly important, but all of a sudden I realized that I had certain powers as Speaker of the Senate. Once the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod came to see me with a carefully worded document from the Prime Minister's Office, asking for permission to use the Senate Chamber for the swearing-in of Mme Sauvé. So I said: Fine, you are asking me for permission so I have the authority to give you that permission. Then I was told: That is how things are handled, you are the Speaker and it is up to you. So I signed, adding "with pleasure". We can do without a lot of formality here.

So it became clear to me that I had authority over the use of the Senate Chamber. After that, I was asked to sign a request for lending the Senate Chamber to the Canadian Youth Parliamentary Association. I was surprised, because I did not know the association, and in fact had never heard of it. I was told it was a tradition. It was the only association that was allowed to use the Senate Chamber.

So there I had exercised my authority twice. The third time we received a letter requesting permission to shoot a commercial film in this Chamber, with a scenario based on "Joshua then and now", a novel by Mordecai Richler.

I hesitated, and I thought: At this rate, we are going to have something every week, and we cannot really have that. I considered all the pros and cons, I called in the two Senate Leaders and finally I said: No, enough is enough. The Senate Chamber is for the Senate and the senators.

Well, they were not going to take no for an answer, and this went on for two or three months. I told them no, but people tried to pressure me saying it was a very famous novel and it would be good publicity and that a friend of Mr. So and So—

So then I called London and asked the Clerk of the House of Lords: What do you do when people want to borrow the House of Lords to shoot films?

When he heard this, the Clerk of the House of Lords, Mr. Saintie, a friend of our Clerk, Mr. Lussier, was flabbergasted. He said: "What, the House of Lords is sacrosanct. We have never heard of that." He went on to say: "No, we never let anyone enter the House of Lords. They did a movie on Lloyd George, and we never gave permission. Outside Parliament, yes, but not in the House of Lords."

Somebody came to see us about another film starring a very well known actor, but I cannot recall his name.

I felt better when our friends in London said: "We will send you our rules concerning the matter."

So I said: Well, now, you have rules! So they sent me this pamphlet entitled "Photography and filming, including a video recording". That is put out by Black Rod and the Sergeant at Arms. They sent me another one called "Regulations for photography, filming, sound recording, painting and sketching in the precincts of the Palace of Westminster, including the parliamentary outbuildings".

We do not have anything like that here. It might be a good idea to tell the public, when somebody wants to borrow our Senate chamber, "Here are the rules." Journalists and film makers ought to know it, and senators ought to know it as well. It would be a good thing.

After it had arrived, I thought we were on the right track, so we might as well call the Senate in Washington. The Senate in Washington said the same thing and they too sent me their little rule book on how to make films and take pictures—"Rules and Procedures for Broadcast Coverage of Congress".

Not long after, someone from a Chamber of Commerce of the region phoned or wrote me to say: Mr. Speaker, we know that the senators are not very busy, perhaps we might borrow your Senate chamber to hold a debate, we would open the galleries to the public and invite our friends.

So I had to say no to commercial movie-making, debates and what have you, because the English do not tolerate it and the Americans told me to be particularly wary of film makers and not create a precedent.

So I had two good reasons to turn them down. I had to tell Mordecai Richler's friends who had come to see me that it was impossible, that my answer was no, period. No in the lobby, no in the hall, no in the corridors.

That fact was confirmed to me when I went to London. I visited all the parliamentary facilities with them and they told me that certain rooms had been put at the disposal of journalists.

I must say that journalists here in Ottawa behave properly, they stay outside. And so they do in Washington as well. When distinguished members of the Senate in Washington or the House of Lords want to give interviews, there are special rooms for that purpose. These rooms are available to them, and I thought it might be something to consider. Naturally, in the case of the Americans, there is a little brochure I received which explains the rules that the reporters and film people must observe when they attend proceedings in the Senate.

Like the House of Lords, the American Senate never allows commercial films to be made in the Senate Chamber because Senators would have to be kept out of the Senate all the time in view of the fact films are always being made in the United States.

I have started to speak about films and photography, but I have also spoken about our traditions because, having seen all this, I thought about the years of tradition behind this association of young people called Young Parliamentarians. The assembly was held, but after looking at the files, as I had been allowed to do, I saw that this tradition was only three or four years old, which made me think that this was a fairly recent tradition which it might be better to reconsider. However, that decision will rest with my successor because he will be the one to give or refuse permission to these young people. However, I believe that we should publish general rules in this regard. The last rules published by the British authorities, except where the filming of movies is concerned, deal with the use of committee rooms, conference rooms and interview rooms.

I think this might be a good idea because we are beginning to have a lot of activities in this place. The media are developing more every day, which explains why older Houses such as those in Washington and London, have updated their traditions and published rules.

I would now like to speak about usage, but as far as the films are concerned, what I said applies in Britain not only to Parliament, but to other facilities which come directly under the House of Lords.

I would now like to speak about another matter, namely the use of this Senate Chamber. I was pleased to give my permission for Mme Sauvé's oath of office which of course was postponed for a few months. Finally, one day I received the visit of two people who told me that they represented the Secretary of State and were protocol officers.

● (1610)

I must say they looked fine. A man and a woman—the woman from a very well known Quebec City family—came to my office, showed me a letter and said: "As you know, Mrs. Labelle has directed us to get hold of everything we need in the Senate". When I asked them who was Mrs. Labelle, they told me that she was their boss, the Under Secretary of State.

Then they requested me to leave my office. "Why leave my office?" I asked. "Well", they said, "Mme Sauvé will need a place to rest when she comes and we have chosen your office". "You are very kind", I said, "but under what authority?" In the end, I said: "First, I am not going to leave my office, but when Mme Sauvé, who is a friend of mine, comes, she can use my office whenever she needs it.

"Second, my staff is going to stay here because I do not want to leave the impression that the Speaker of the Senate jumps when someone from the outside says to jump. I am the boss here. I did not want to start a war, but I wanted people to know what is what.

Moreover, when they left they said: "We are also going to take the office of Clerk of the Senate, the office of Senator Lapointe". Nobody had said anything to me about that. I felt that this was not right. Mr. Lussier had left his office or was about to leave it. Anyway, they had talked to him without coming to me first. I think they had already seen Senator Lapointe and some other people by then. My staff stayed put.

Now about the Queen's visit. It was supposed to take place in June but was postponed to September. Let me tell you what happened then.

When I arrived at my office on August 27, there was a telephone message for me. Both Speakers and their wives were asked to report to the Peace Tower at 3.05 p.m. to welcome the royal visitors and accompany them to the Hall of Remembrance.

Well, it was the Secretary of State, in charge of the royal visit, giving me, the Speaker of the Senate, these instructions. It was a short briefing. I did not know who was supposed to be there to welcome the royal couple, Her Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness the Prince. I did not know what my wife or I were supposed to wear, what the women were supposed to wear, whether there would be other guests, if the Clerks would be there or if other senators would be there. That is the message I got.

Since I had some experience, I called the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, who is my ceremonial official, and asked him whether he was aware of that phone call. He said: "Nobody spoke to me." I objected: "Those people are not to force their way like that in Parliament. Parliament belongs to both Speakers and it is time to take a stand."

I asked the protocol official to meet with the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod and me. The protocol official gave me the program of the visit which had been prepared without prior consultation with us. I said to Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod: "We will not operate like that. I want to assert the rights of both Speakers and the entire Parliament. However, since my colleague from the Commons did not seem as eager as I was, I left him alone and said to myself: "At least, if I have the whole property, I can manage it by myself."

To assert my rights, I put another call to the House of Lords. I spoke to the officials. I asked them: "In Parliament, who should be in charge and see that Parliament is respected, who is supposed to invite the Queen to come to Parliament?" I was told: "In the first place, the Queen never comes to Parliament, except for the opening of Parliament and then it is of course the Lord Great Chamberlain, the Earl Marshall and the Gentlemen Usher of the Black Rod who welcome her at her private entrance in the Victoria Tower. Then, she proceeds to the Robing Room and through the Royal Gallery".

I was somewhat lost, because I could not visualize those things. Then they told me: "Neither the Prime Minister nor outside people have anything to do with that. This is the business of the officers of the House of Lords."

I then gave the following order to the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod:

● (1620)

[English]

The Program prepared by the State Ceremonial Branch of the Secretary of State for the visit on Wednesday, September 26, of H.M. The Queen and Prince Philip to the Canadian Parliament, where they will visit the Memorial Chamber in the Peace Tower, has been received by my office.

I must express very great surprise that the Speaker of the Senate was not approached by the State Ceremonial Branch (or the Under-Secretary of State) for permission to have access to the Parliament Buildings for the purpose of this ceremony, and that he was not requested to address, with his colleague, the Speaker of the House of Commons, a joint invitation to the Queen and Prince Philip for this visit to Parliamentary precincts.

It is my considered opinion that for such a visit by the Queen and Prince Philip, within the precincts of Parliament, an invitation to these royal personages should have been addressed jointly by the Speakers of both Houses and that the program of the visit should have been organized in cooperation with, and with the approval of, both Speakers.

Furthermore, I have ascertained—

[Translation]

I had “ascertained”, yes.

[English]

By “ascertained” I mean that I talked to my friends in London.

... that, in accordance with Parliamentary tradition on such occasions, the Queen and Prince Philip should be asked to sign the Visitors' Books of the two Speakers. Every important visitor to Parliament is requested to sign these books, and what visitors could be more important than the Queen and Prince Philip?

In view of the foregoing, I feel it is my duty, as holder of the office of Speaker of the Senate, to request that the program of the visit of H.M. The Queen and Prince Philip on September 26th be amended, in part, to provide for the signature of the two Books of the Speakers by H.M. The Queen and Prince Philip, before they visit the Memorial Chamber.

I would ask you, as Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, to inform the State Ceremonial Branch of the Secretary of State of this request, and to transmit to your counterpart, the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons, a copy of this memorandum so that he may inform his Speaker.

[Translation]

That had a great impact because they complied with what we said:

[English]

The people at protocol admitted that the two Speakers were in charge of Parliament and, after a few days' reflection, they agreed to put up a table in the rotunda and to place the visitors' book of both Speakers on that table.

General Reid, who was acting as Secretary to the Queen during that trip—and who incidentally had been a classmate of mine at college—was requested to ask if Her Majesty would be pleased to agree to sign our books, which Her Majesty and Prince Philip consented to do, with pleasure. We went away very pleased on that day because we had survived.

I must tell you one more thing. When I went to London, I checked with the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod and all the other officers, and it was confirmed that the Officers of Parliament are completely in charge of all protocol.

My wife and I attended a very short briefing on an appropriate dress code. I was told that I was to address the Queen by saying a few words of welcome when she got under the porch, which I did, but besides that, I was given no instruction. Nobody from the Protocol Office told me that I should not address the Queen, that I should wait to be addressed by her—nobody.

● (1630)

When I saw the newspaper stories last summer about Mr. Snow, a Minister in the Ontario government, touching the Queen's arm, I wondered if I had touched her arm. I can assure you that I was never told that I should not hold the arm of the Queen or touch the Queen. Perhaps everyone in Canada knew that but me.

I have not met the Queen often in my life, and being a little loquacious, I was tempted to speak to her. I am not sure if I prompted her to converse with me in addressing her first. I was also very much tempted, in going up the stairs from the porch, to touch the Queen's arm, but a faint memory that I should not touch the Queen came back at that moment. I believe I did not touch her arm, but perhaps I did for a second or two.

As I said earlier, when I saw the news reports of Mr. Snow touching the Queen, I felt sorry for him because, since I was not told that I should not touch the Queen, he also was probably not told.

The position of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod and that of the Sergeant-at-Arms in the House of Commons are designated as Officers of Parliament. In London, they take orders from no one; they run their own show, but I must tell you that their shows are well-organized and successful. While I was in London in early October I had occasion to witness a case before the Lords in the Privy Council, and was also privileged to be present at the swearing-in of the new Lord Mayor of London by the Lord Chancellor. Those ceremonies were well-conducted and everything went without a hitch.

The Lord Chancellor is 77 years old. He is the Chief Lord of Justice; a Cabinet Minister, and the Speaker of the House of Lords, although he does not sit on the Woolsack often. The Lord Chancellor is the second-ranking person in protocol right after the Royal Family.

There are two things that cannot leave the realm, the Lord Chancellor and the Great Seal. The Lord Chancellor, if he wishes to leave the realm, must obtain permission from the Queen and permission from the House of Lords.

The Speaker's Parade in the Senate is full of dignity, but does not compare to the Speaker's Parade in the House of Commons in London. The Lord Chancellor is outfitted with a very long robe and lots of gold chains. The train on the Lord Chancellor's robe is so long that there is a train bearer, and to help the train bearer, there is a handle, and there is another person following the train bearer to help him. Because he was going to swear in the new Lord Mayor of London, he was accompanied by four or five pages bearing wine and a friendship cup from which they drink. The Lord Chancellor drinks from it and then passes it to the Lord Mayor, and then the assistants, as in Holy Communion, partake of the wine. Accompanying the parade are four or five gentleman in black britches bearing trays of sandwiches to help digest the wine.

I see by the clock that it is now 4.45, and, because I was the Speaker of the Senate for eight or nine months, I could tell you of my experiences for another two hours.

In conclusion, honourable senators, where protocol is concerned the officers of the House of Lords and the House of Commons are in charge. The Gentlemen Usher of the Black Rod in London, as is the practice here, is appointed by letters patent, which, I suppose are the same as our Orders-in-Council. The administration of everyday business in the House of Lords is overseen by a committee, but that committee is made up of employees, not one lord sits on that committee because that is considered inferior to their status.

The Lord Chancellor, who is the supreme man in that place, has the authority to run everything and delegates his authority on that committee to the Clerk of the House of Lords, and the Clerk has four, five, or six persons assisting him. The Clerk of the House of Lords is not happy with that system because, as he said, he spends a great deal of time looking after refreshment rooms, which we commonly call bars. That is how they do business over there.

I now come to the subject of deputy speakers. The Lord Chancellor does not sit on the Woolsack very often; he has several deputy speakers who sit in his place. The deputy speakers are remunerated—you will be pleased to know that—but not as deputy speakers, because lords receive no remuneration, only expenses. They are remunerated at the same level as is a chairman of a committee. Secondly, they are appointed by letters patent, and their term of office is "good pleasure". The deputy speakers usually serve terms of approximately ten years. I asked why the Deputy Speaker of the House of Lords was not elected and was told that if a person were elected as deputy speaker for a session of Parliament, they could not be sure that, at the end of the session, he would have any rights or powers. When they are appointed by letters patent, they are appointed for good pleasure. So, their powers continue during adjournments. There is no doubt about that.

[Senator Riel.]

I support the creation of the office of Deputy Speaker in the Senate of Canada, as you know, and I believe those holding that office should be remunerated, but, at the same time, I believe that the change which has been made should take care of a few other things. Let us suppose that I return to Montreal this evening. I leave the Chair and the Deputy Speaker takes my place. Is he in charge until my return tomorrow afternoon or upon my return in six months? Another question that arises is; what benefits is the Deputy Speaker entitled to? The rules of the Senate state that he takes the place of the Speaker, thereby enjoying all the rights and privileges, which could mean that he could physically go into the Speaker's office and take over.

● (1640)

In the House of Commons, as Senator Corbin has experienced, they have a different system whereby the Speaker's functions are more clearly defined. I think that we should follow the same procedure.

I have no criticism about our relationship with Senator Molgat but I should like to mention another point. The Speaker is provided with a chauffeur and when the Deputy Speaker replaces the Speaker he can give that chauffeur whatever instructions he decides upon. The same applies with respect to privileges in the dining room. I have been advised by Mr. Marchand that the dining room should not be on loan to anyone. When I was the Speaker and my deputy replaced me in my absence, I was under the impression that he had the right to use that dining room. All these matters should be clarified by rules to prevent such problems from recurring.

The Lord Chancellor and the Speaker of the House of Commons in the British Parliament are both supplied with an apartment situated in the House of Parliament, as well as being provided with an apartment in town. The reason for that is the number of functions that they must attend to.

A recent change we made was with reference to reducing the length of the prayers. That has been done, thank God. In the House of Lords the prayer is very long and it starts with the singing of a psalm following several orations. I was informed that they have 26 bishops and archbishops who are lords. They alternate each week in saying the prayers, and a number of lords actually kneel down during the chanting of the psalms or during the prayers. We settled the situation here because we are dealing with only one church. Another interesting point is that the Speaker of the house has a chaplain. At every meal the chaplain recites grace. In the Speaker's suite the benedictio is as follows:

Some have meat but do not meet;

Some meet but have no meat;

We meet and we have meat,

Thanks to you, Lord.

Hon. Robert Muir: That is a variation of the poem by Robert Burns.

Senator Riel: In England presidents and heads of states visiting Parliament are not received in Parliament. The House of Lords contains 200 seating places and there are 1,200 lords.

The House of Commons contains 380 seating places and there are 650 members of Parliament. There has never been a joint session of Parliament of the two houses in England. Heads of state are received at Westminster Hall which is connected to Parliament and was built 1,000 years ago. This is considered outside the limits of Parliament. It is the government that is invited and not the Speakers. When President Reagan or President Mitterand, and previously President de Gaulle, visited England they were received at Westminster Hall. In terms of our accommodation, it is equivalent to receiving President Reagan or President Mitterand in the Conference Centre. As Speakers we do not play much of a role with visiting dignitaries because they come to see the Prime Minister. I believe there is an advantage to receiving important visitors outside Parliament.

I made some inquiries as to how the funding went for parliamentary relationships with foreign groups, and I was informed that contrary to our practice where we fund them through the Senate and the House of Commons, they are funded directly by the Treasury, namely, the Minister of Finance. There might be some advantage to that because the administration seems much more simplified in their case than going directly to the Treasury.

The last point I should like to mention is with reference to Royal Assent. I brought with me a copy of the Royal Assent Act, 1967, and I should like to read it to you.

● (1650)

Honourable senators, the Royal Assent Act in 1967, Chapter 23, states:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1.—(1) An Act of Parliament is duly enacted if Her Majesty's Assent thereto, being signified by Letters Patent under the Great Seal signed with Her Majesty's own hand,—

(a) is pronounced in the presence of both Houses in the House of Lords in the form and manner customary before the passing of this Act;—

This is what we do now. It goes on to state:

or

(b) is notified to each House of Parliament, sitting separately, by the Speaker of that House or in the case of his absence by the person acting as such Speaker.

This is very streamlined. The act further states:

(2) Nothing in this section affects the power of Her Majesty to declare Her Royal Assent in person in Parliament, or the manner in which an Act of Parliament is required to be endorsed in Her Majesty's name.

2.—(1) This Act may be cited as the Royal Assent Act 1967.

(2) The Royal Assent by Commission Act 1541 is hereby repealed.

Honourable senators, the Monarch of England has not personally attended a royal assent since 1854. I, therefore, inquired as to what procedure was followed in order to have the Letters Patent signed. I was told that, when the Clerk to the Crown in Chancery is told by the Lord Chancellor that a bill has been passed by both houses, he prepares Letters Patent and, with the Lord Chancellor, he takes those to Buckingham Palace for the Queen's signature. Upon his return, the Clerk to the Crown in Chancery prepares two letters, one for the Lord Chancellor and one for the Speaker of the House of Commons. Thereupon, the Speakers of both houses announce that the Queen has assented to that act and that it is now a law of the realm.

Honourable senators, I turn now to the subject of the parliamentary restaurant in England, which has been functioning for over 800 years. I was informed that the prices are fixed to cover only the costs of the raw material and the cleaning and that everything else is paid by the Treasury to the tune of several million pounds per year.

The receipts do not have to cover the £1,600,000 annual wage bill or overheads such as accommodation, furniture, major equipment, heating, lighting and printing, all of which are currently provided as they were previously, but they are expected to cover the cost of raw materials, laundry, cleaning, and so on. When I suggested that, in fact, the meals were subsidized, they were rather taken aback since that was a term they would not choose to use. I told them that the same situation existed here.

Senator De Bané, who visited Washington, told me that their joint committee to deal with restaurants had been abolished as of last week. Honourable senators, I do not know if that is the case, but I am sure it is possible.

Honourable senators, the House of Lords has its own private dining room to which only about 20 of the operational public servants are admitted. There is another dining room called the Strangers' Dining Room to which guests can be invited. If any member of the House of Lords wishes to hold a reception, he must fill in a form, make a deposit and sign the form to show that he accepts responsibility.

I am sure that honourable senators know that a similar situation occurred here last year when a bill of over $5,000 was incurred. Senators have been asked to pay for these receptions with, of course, the understanding that they will be reimbursed by the group which benefited. Honourable senators, I find this practice absolutely offensive. It should not be done. I am sure the Clerk of the Senate will vouch that we have experienced a situation where one of our predecessors did that once, and a bill for several thousand dollars was incurred. The restaurant requested payment from the Speaker, but reimbursement was not forthcoming. In the end it came. Honourable senators, I think this practice should not be followed.

Honourable senators, instead of speaking for such a long time, perhaps I should have prepared a written report, but I know only too well that nobody reads those reports.

In closing my remarks today, honourable senators, I should tell you that the House of Lords has a Guide to the Proceedings of the House of Lords and a Companion to the Standing Orders which contain everything a member needs to know about procedure and so on. Any change in methods of administration is published so that the Black Rod knows exactly what to do in any given situation. I feel it would be beneficial for the Senate to have such guidelines so that not only the Senate but the public would know what is and what is not permitted in this place. We must maintain the integrity of the office of the Speaker and also the dignity and decorum of everything that comes under the auspices of the Senate.

Honourable senators, in view of the time, I will continue my remarks tomorrow.

On motion of Senator Riel, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, December 6, 1984

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Martial Asselin, Speaker pro tempore, in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE SENATE

OFFICIAL REPORT—REQUEST FOR REVISION OF STATEMENT

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, yesterday I went too far in my remarks about Senator Phillips. I was tasteless. I reported what was, without a doubt, a mean joke committed by Mr. Diefenbaker. Great men are capable of mean jokes. That is not to detract from the greatness of Mr. Diefenbaker.

I should not have repeated that joke in this chamber. I apologize to Senator Phillips for doing that. When I saw his face yesterday when I was speaking, I saw a look of, I think, pain. He did not expect the low blow that I delivered. I do not like administering low blows, and when I do, I apologize, even if it is too late.

I am sure that Senator Phillips has a human dignity that is at least equal to mine. I think he is a good Canadian and loves this country as much as I do. I should not have hurt him, and I apologize for doing so.

I ask honourable senators for the privilege to have stricken from Hansard the reference to that tasteless joke, and, if Senator Phillips so wishes, any other part of the speech, except those parts where I said that we are in agreement on both sides of the house that he would not like to be a Liberal.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I appreciate the remarks of Senator Gigantès. I do not think that withdrawing the remarks now would be satisfactory, and since I intend to speak on those remarks when Order No. 3 is called later today, I think they should stand. I ask Senator Gigantès to have the courtesy of remaining in his seat until I make those remarks.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

FIRST REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Lowell Murray, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, which was authorized by the Senate to incur expenses for the purpose of its examination and consideration of such legislation and other matters as were referred to it, reported, pursuant to rule 84, the expenses incurred by the committee during the Second Session of the Thirty-second Parliament.

(For text of report see today's Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate.)

SENATE REFORM

FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Gildas Molgat, Chairman of the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform, which was authorized by the Senate on Thursday, December 8, 1983, to incur expenses for the purpose of its examination and report upon ways by which the Senate of Canada could be reformed, reported, pursuant to rule 84, the expenses incurred by the committee during the Second Session of the Thirty-second Parliament.

(For text of report see today's Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate.)

YOUTH

FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Jacques Hébert, Chairman of the Special Senate Committee on Youth, which was authorized by the Senate on Tuesday, April 10, 1984, to incur expenses for the purpose of hearing evidence on and to consider the problems and issues facing Canadian youth between 15 and 24 years of age, reported, pursuant to rule 84, the expenses incurred by the committee during the Second Session of the Thirty-second Parliament.

(For text of report see today's Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate.)

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B) PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Fernand Leblanc: Honourable senators, I have the honour of presenting the second report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance being the report on supplementary estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1985. I would ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this House.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix, p. 293.)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Leblanc: Honourable senators, I move that this report be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO MAKE STUDY

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Wednesday next, December 12, 1984, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to examine the impact of the recommendations contained in its report on soil and water conservation in Canada, entitled: "Soil at Risk—Canada's Eroding Future", tabled in the Senate on 6th November, 1984, and to inquire into any matter related thereto;

That the papers and evidence taken on the subject and the work accomplished during the Second Session of the Thirty-Second Parliament be referred to the Committee; and

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, December 11, 1984, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

GAS PRICING POLICY—PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I should like to direct my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I preface it by extending my congratulations to him on his being named Leader of the Government in this chamber. This is the first opportunity that I have had to do so publicly. I should also like to extend my congratulations to the Deputy Leader of the Government.

My question is in the realm of energy and I am sure that the government leader will have no problem in responding to me, especially in light of his work in, and contribution to, the deliberations of the Special Senate Committee on Energy in the last session, when we were inquiring into the National Energy Program and energy initiatives in Canada. I want to tell the government leader that the people in my province have become very concerned and apprehensive in light of the glowing commitments and promises made by the Prime Minister when he announced, in July, in Red Deer and Calgary that energy would be used as a vehicle for economic growth and development in Canada. At that time he said that as a result of that development, 1,000 jobs would be created in the province of Alberta. He said there would be developments on the east coast and in the north, there would be development of the oilsands in Alberta, the gas fields in B.C., and the heavy oil deposits of Saskatchewan, and that all this would mean jobs and growth in Ontario and Quebec; jobs in exploration and drilling; and jobs for everyone.

● (1410)

Those commitments and promises made in July seem now, in the reality of December, to have become matters for consideration, study and evaluation—

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Pose your question.

Senator Hastings: —in a desperate search for an energy policy for Canada.

Honourable senators, I have every right to preface my question with remarks.

Senator Flynn: But not to preface it with a speech.

Senator Hastings: The gas producers of the province of Alberta are suffering; 30 per cent of our gas wells are shut in; our exports are down 60 per cent; and domestic demand is down. It is in this context I pose my question.

Senator Flynn: Put it.

Senator Hastings: I am posing my question to the Leader of the Government.

Senator Flynn: Well, pose it.

Hon. Azellus Denis: He is trying to imitate Senator Flynn.

Senator Flynn: I rise on a question of privilege. I cannot accept the remarks made by Senator Denis who never opens his mouth except at the wrong time.

Senator Denis: There is no question of privilege; Senator Flynn is old enough to know that.

Senator Hastings: In the context of these promises and commitments, I was interested to learn that the present minister has instructed a committee to make recommendations on how to implement a gas pricing policy in Canada. That committee is headed by Mr. Vern Horte of Calgary, Alberta.

My question is: Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate give us the assurance that other sectors of economic life in Canada, such as the Consumers' Association of Canada and the Canadian Labour Congress, are represented on that committee?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I would start by saying that my honourable friend made an excellent beginning in his little speech in which he kindly offered me his good wishes. I am pleased to accept them. I think my colleague sitting to my right will allow me to express a word of appreciation for him too.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Absolutely.

Senator Roblin: However, when my honourable friend invites me to enter into a debate on this whole matter, I am sure he realizes that that is not appropriate for an oral question; therefore, I do not intend to do so.

With regard to the specific questions he asks, insofar as they are applicable to the situation at hand, I will take them as written questions and provide him with a written answer.

Senator Hastings: As a supplementary question, would the Leader of the Government also undertake to provide a list of all members of the committee, their credentials and occupations, and information as to whether the members of that committee have taken the oath of secrecy?

Senator Roblin: I will convey my honourable friend's request to the minister.

Senator Hastings: As a further supplementary question, I would point out that the minister also announced in her statement that the Petroleum Incentive Program has, in effect, been frozen except in special cases.

Has the Canadian Oil and Gas Lands Administration been instructed to cease the negotiation of further exploration permits in the frontier lands? Would the leader also explain what are the criteria for special cases under which the government will grant an exploration permit?

Senator Roblin: The same answer applies, honourable senators.

METRIC CONVERSION

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government and, unlike most of the questions asked by my colleagues, I will plead with the honourable gentleman to ask his government not to proceed with some promises that were made by members of his party during the election campaign. My question arises from a letter of November 30, addressed to me from the Chairman of the New Brunswick Milk Marketing Board. By way of explanation, this gentleman, William Sherwood, is the son of a distinguished colleague of ours, Senator Sherwood. I presume that if he were here, Senator Sherwood would place before this chamber the request of his son, the Chairman of the Milk Marketing Board.

Honourable senators, I would like to quote at least a portion of the letter. It reads, in part, as follows:

Milk producers in New Brunswick believe that the government should proceed with the change to the metric system in Canada.

The dairy industry has gone through the pain and expense of the complete change to metric. A return to the imperial system could not be tolerated, especially at this time of looking for every available means of cutting costs and avoiding unnecessary additional expenses.

My question to the government leader is this: Will he entreat the Prime Minister and the minister responsible for metrification not to fulfill the promises made by Mr. Domm and others—including those who operated their service stations under the imperial system during the past year—and to let metrification take its course?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): If my honourable friend will do me the courtesy of providing me with a copy of his letter, I will see what action can be taken with respect to it.

THE CONSTITUTION

QUEBEC'S OPTING OUT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

A few days ago, René Lévesque, the Premier of the Province of Quebec, decided to reverse the traditional position taken by all Quebec governments, which has been to obtain for the Province of Quebec the right to opt out when amendments are made to the Canadian Constitution.

The day before yesterday, letting his party's ideology take precedence over the interests of the Province of Quebec, Mr. Lévesque said that the right to opt out was absurd and that he was not at all interested in obtaining this right for Quebec. In doing so, he was indeed breaking with the traditional position taken by all previous governments in Quebec.

It is very easy to understand the reasons that led Mr. Lévesque to take this position, because the right to opt out confers considerable powers but also many responsibilities. These involve helping build and consolidate a constantly developing Canada. To a secessionist, however, it is far more attractive not to be an active part of Canada and instead try to withdraw from all national programs.

[English]

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us if Prime Minister Brian Mulroney—who has said in the past that he was firmly opposed to any opting out with compensation—has changed his stand on that question or whether he still thinks that there are other ways of getting the present government in Quebec to sign the new Constitution Act, 1982?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I really cannot tell what moves the Prime Minister of Quebec to do the things he does and say the things he says. I can accept no responsibility to answer on his behalf.

With respect to the policy of the Government of Canada, I think it is fairly clear that, if the duly elected premier of a province requests an interview with the federal Prime Minister on a constitutional matter of this kind, it is to be expected that the Prime Minister will accede to that request. I do not think that any of the matters included in my honourable friend's remarks have gone beyond that stage.

• (1420)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): As a supplementary, when the Leader of the Government says that "it has not gone beyond that stage," can we take it that the government, at this stage, has not taken, or is not taking, a position on the question of opting out with compensation or right of veto, that the matter is at the negotiation stage and that the government has no official position on it at the moment?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I had better allow the Prime Minister to deal with such matters, as no doubt he will in due course.

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, I should like to remind the Leader of the Government in the Senate that this is one of the few instances where the Prime Minister has been clear cut in the past. He has expressed his firm opposition to any concept of opting out with compensation. If my memory is correct, he adopted the same argument as that of Mr. Trudeau, the former Prime Minister, to the effect that it would lead to a checker-board concept, where each province would have a vested interest in opting out and, of course, of getting the money from other Canadians. In that respect he expressed his total opposition. I am merely asking the Leader of the Government whether the present Prime Minister still holds the same view.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, my honourable friend is entitled to advance any arguments he likes with respect to constitutional adjustment, but he need not expect me to respond to them. That is not my position or my responsibility at this particular stage. This is oral Question Period and I cannot give him any advance on the answer I have already offered.

JUSTICE

QUEBEC—APPEAL OF SPEEDING CONVICTION—DECISION OF MINISTER

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. It is not so much a question as a request that he ask the Minister of Justice for amplification of a decision he has taken on the MacDonald case in Quebec.

As background information, honourable senators may recall that Mr. MacDonald was issued a ticket for speeding that was in French only. Analogizing it to the English ticket given to Mr. Bilodeau, Mr. MacDonald decided to pursue the matter, and he was assisted in doing so—as also, I believe, was Mr. Bilodeau—by a fund that exists in the Department of the Secretary of State or the Department of Justice, or both.

As further background, the Minister of Justice recently decided to discontinue his support of Mr. MacDonald's appeal, which I believe is at the stage of an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

The Honourable John Crosbie, when asked about the matter in the other place, explained that there was nothing unusual in this, that there were other cases involving the fund in which the government had changed its view, and that the government did not always use the fund merely for cases or appeals with which it happened to agree.

I accept that as a satisfactory answer. However, Mr. Crosbie did not go on to explain why, in this particular case, he changed his mind, or whether there was any policy reason behind the government's decision not to assist in the appeal of the anglophone who received a ticket in French only. Not only had the government decided not to continue its support of that appeal, but it is now going to oppose the application in the Supreme Court.

My question is: Will the Leader of the Government bring to the Senate an amplified answer on that aspect of the question rather than just the aspect of the procedural acceptability of the move?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it will, of course, come as no surprise to honourable senators to learn that the government frequently appears on both sides of the same case. For example, when people go before the Legal Assistance Board to receive assistance from government funds for their defence against a charge that may or may not have been laid by the Crown, that does not create any ripples. That is something to which we are well accustomed. The same principle has been applied in the past with respect to some of these semi-constitutional cases.

As to the particular point my honourable friend has raised with respect to that matter, I shall naturally have to inquire. However, it occurs to me that the matter may be considered as sub judice. If that is the case, it may inhibit my ability to get a satisfactory answer. Nevertheless, I shall inquire.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I would not think that the answer to this question would be inhibited at all by the rule of sub judice. If I understand my friend, if it is, he will explain, and if it is not, he will try to provide the information requested.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DEPARTMENTAL BUDGET—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether their cuts in defence spending announced by the Honourable Michael Wilson in his economic statement for the fiscal year 1985-86 still stand.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I shall have to refresh my memory on that point.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I am not sure which point the leader wishes to refresh his memory on—whether there was a cut or whether the cut has been reversed. I would like to know whether, indeed, the cut announced for fiscal 1985-86 still stands, because just a day or so ago the Minister of National Defence spoke to his colleagues in NATO and pledged more support for NATO. Indeed, the press reports indicate increased defence spending. Naturally, I am wondering whether there are two policies, one to be delivered in Brussels saying, “Yes, we intend to spend more,” and one in Ottawa saying, “Yes, we intend to spend less in 1985-86.” I want to know whether the Leader of the Government can clarify this matter today. Is there to be less or more defence spending?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, my former answer applies: I shall do my best to get some information for the honourable senator.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the Leader of the Government for making a commitment to get more information. There are one or two additional points which I would like to put before him. It is stated that the 14 defence ministers, in their meeting at Brussels, approved a multi-billion dollar program to improve ground facilities and remedy shortages of ammunition. These 14 ministers, including our Minister of National Defence, approved a multi-billion dollar additional expenditure. My question is: Has Canada made an additional commitment to NATO, and, if so, in what amount?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend will expect me to say that I will have to take the matter as notice because, obviously, I am not aware of departmental matters of that kind.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, once again I thank the Leader of the Government for his commitment to provide additional information because we are dealing with a very key point. It is also stated in the press report that the Minister of National Defence told his colleagues in private that it would be some time before the Mulroney government is in an economic position to carry out its intention to increase the rate of real growth in the defence budget. Is that a fact, that the minister is saying publicly, “Yes, we intend to increase” and privately, “Yes, we are aware that this may not come for some years”? Will the Leader of the Government find out whether or not the commitment for additional expenditures will take place after 1985-86, or is it put off indefinitely?

It is confusing, if not disturbing, to our allies to have the minister say in Washington and to NATO that there will be more spending, in light of the government policy to have a real cut in expenditures for fiscal 1985-86. Where is the government going on this all-important subject?

• (1430)

Senator Roblin: It must have been a very private meeting if my honourable friend is able to quote the press on it! I think that probably it was not quite as private as he imagines.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): These days nothing is private!

Senator MacEachen: He may have had a tape recorder—

Senator Frith: —in his briefcase!

Senator Roblin: He may have had. I would be rather surprised if our NATO allies are in any doubt at all as to what the minister said or as to what the policy of Canada is.

I assume no responsibility for ascertaining the accuracy of reports which appear in the newspapers. That is not part of my job. However, to the extent that I am able, after I have analyzed the questions raised by my honourable friend, irrespective of the fact that he relies upon a newspaper to base his remarks, I will do my best to get him answers which I trust will be satisfactory.

CANADIAN FORCES—UNIFORMS

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Is it still the policy of the Department of National Defence to have three different uniforms for the members of the armed forces at a cost of some $80 million? If this is so, at what time does the minister responsible intend to implement this policy?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can by no means confirm my honourable friend's statement that this measure will cost some $80 million. In fact, I think that is not the case. Naturally, I am not acquainted with the minister's program on this matter to the extent that I can comment on it now. However, I will ask the minister if he is able to provide the information which my honourable friend seeks.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Leader of the Government. Can he confirm that it is the intention of the Department of National Defence to provide new uniforms for the armed forces?

Senator Roblin: The answer I gave to my honourable colleague, Senator Robichaud, will do for my honourable friend as well.

Senator MacEachen: So you cannot tell us?

Senator Roblin: I will tell you when I am able.

Senator MacEachen: You do not know whether or not we will have new uniforms?

Senator Roblin: There is no use teasing me like that.

Senator MacEachen: You should know that.

Senator Roblin: You do that in the House of Commons; you do not do it here.

An Hon. Senator: Oh, oh!

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Order!

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a supplementary question. I understood from his answer to my previous question that it is his understanding that the introduction of new uniforms will not add $80 million to the budget of the Department of National Defence. I would like to know what his understanding is with respect to additional costs involved in the distribution of three different uniforms as opposed to one for the armed forces.

Senator Roblin: I will do my best to obtain an answer to the question my honourable friend asks.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ACQUIRED IMMUNE DEFICIENCY SYNDROME

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In light of a recent epidemiological report which revealed that a significant and increasing number of cases of AIDS—a contagious and incurable disease—was transmitted by blood products, the governments of Australia and the United States, in order to control the spread of this serious disease, initiated strict measures such as regulating blood donors and screening blood supplies before transfusion to patients. Why has the Minister of National Health and Welfare not made, to date, any announcement with respect to the screening of blood products in Canada in order to protect Canadians against AIDS?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My answer to my honourable friend is that I will ask the minister.

Senator Haidasz: I have a supplementary question, honourable senators. While the Leader of the Government is asking the minister about this matter, could he also inquire when the National Advisory Committee on AIDS last met and reported to the minister?

Senator Roblin: I suppose my honourable friend would guess that I am not in possession of that information. I will try to obtain an answer for him.

EDUCATION

POST-SECONDARY—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate which follows on a question I asked yesterday. I asked the government leader if a study had been conducted to ascertain whether or not the ceiling introduced on the Canada Student Loans Program would not have the effect of closing the doors on students who were desirous of improving their educational qualifications.

In response to my question, the Leader of the Government said that he imagined that the government would want to make sure that those students most qualified in an academic sense—and that is not a verbatim quotation—received the opportunities they deserved. I wonder if he would consider obtaining an answer to my question, which was whether or not a study has been made to ascertain the impact of this cut on the student population.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I shall be glad to take the question as notice, honourable senators.

CUSTOMS ACT CUSTOMS TARIFF

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray, seconded by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, for the second reading of the Bill C-9, intituled: "An Act to amend the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff".—(Honourable Senator Hays).

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I would like to make a short speech in support of the passage of Bill C-9, to amend the Customs Act and Customs Tariff. I assume the bill will later be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

The bill was discussed and well explained by Senator Murray in his excellent presentation yesterday and as well by the Minister of State for Finance when she introduced it and moved second reading in the other place. I am sure that all of us who comprise Her Majesty's loyal opposition are pleased to see that the responsibility of office has changed the position of the government party from that of being critics of this legislation to being supporters of the measures contained therein.

While much shorter than Bill C-7, Bill C-9 is also a technical one and, as explained, fulfills some of Canada's undertakings arising out of the Tokyo Round of General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade negotiations concluded in 1979. The amendment makes our tariffs and procedures relating to valuation of goods being imported the same as or, at any rate, more similar to those of our major trading partners. Some protection continues with respect to goods being imported. In particular, as the minister has pointed out, Canada retains the right to increase tariff rates to maintain the same level of production as was enjoyed at the time of entering into the agreement in respect of the goods referred to in Part II of the bill.

When these amendments are passed, the general rule with respect to valuation of goods being imported will be that goods are valued at the price paid by the Canadian importer to the exporter rather than the price at which like goods are sold in the exporter's domestic market, which is now the case.

Part II of the bill deals with changes to the customs tariff. These changes have been preceded by public hearings held by the Tariff Board. It is, I am sure, painful to some to see the level of protection to Canadian production and manufacturing reduced, but we must bear in mind the fact that Canada relies on international trade for its economic well-being to a greater degree, on a per capita basis, than any other developed country. Freer trade has served us and other signatories to the GATT very well. The longer view requires us, then, to support the measures prescribed in Bill C-9 and similar bills which have preceded it, as well as in bills that will come later to foster the same goals.

There have been seven rounds of General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade negotiations since 1947, and at each round meaningful agreement has been reached to reduce tariffs. Since 1947, we and the rest of the developed world have enjoyed a period of relative peace and freer trade which has seen us and most of our trading partners prosper and increase our standards of living as at no other time in our history. I believe the movement towards freer trade has been a major contributing factor in this unprecedented economic activity and growth.

In 1982, a series of ministerial meetings of GATT members was held, at which time it was agreed there would be no further increase in tariffs and, as was the case at the Tokyo Round, the question of non-tariff barriers was addressed. It is expected that a further round will take place in 1986, and I would encourage the new government to carry on in the same traditions that other Canadian governments have followed, and pursue vigorously the best possible arrangement for Canada while, at the same time, achieving the ends of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, which is that of freer trade among the 80 or so nations which are parties to the agreement.

I, personally, am confident that this remarkable series of negotiations between countries will be able to address successfully the problem of non-tariff barriers, and that international interests will be better as a result of removing these impediments to freer trade. In fact, the bill before us, by removing the potential for arbitrary exercise of discretion in valuation of goods for import, assists to that end.

Before concluding, honourable senators, I would like to raise with honourable senators the fact that I believe there are great potential benefits to be gained within Canada by following the international example in connection with the intra-Canadian movement of goods and services. We have a number of significant non-tariff barriers province to province, and I will simply say at this time that I think it is important that these be addressed.

I hope to have an opportunity to speak further and share my thoughts with honourable senators on that subject at a later date.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I support the bill.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Lowell Murray: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator

Murray speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, let me say that I look forward, as I am sure all honourable senators do, to hearing the Honourable Senator Hays speaking at a later date about the non-tariff barriers which, as he has correctly observed, do exist in this country as between province and province. That, however, is a subject for debate and discussion on another day.

Let me say that I appreciate the support that Senator Hays has expressed for this bill on behalf of Her Majesty's loyal opposition, and in particular that I appreciate his comments as to the reliance of this country's economy on trade.

I appreciate the support that he has expressed for the further liberalization of world trade and the inference that this liberalization of world trade—and I took him to mean also of international investment and international development in a climate as free and small "I" liberal as possible—is demonstrably in the interest of this country and of all the countries of the world.

He stated that the government party had changed its view of this bill. He further indicated that the Conservative Party had, at one time, opposed the bill. I must say that Senator Hays did not offer any documentation to support that statement, and I must say that I have been unable to find any evidence of any opposition on the part of the Conservative Party to this bill or, indeed, to the spirit of this bill.

I alluded yesterday when I presented the bill to its bi-partisan ancestry. To that I can add that in the late 1970s, when the previous Trudeau government was in office, Mr. Chrétien, the then Minister of Finance, had expressed his concerns to other nations, and in particular to the United States, represented by Mr. Robert Strauss, about certain elements of the proposed new code of valuation. By April, 1979, Canada was in a position to initial the new code, subject to the agreement of the government. A couple of months later the Conservative government, under Prime Minister Clark, took office, and the cabinet considered in a formal way, with the assistance of a cabinet document, what position to take.

Mr. Crosbie, the then Minister of Finance, was delegated to try to negotiate certain conditions to our agreeing to this new code in order to protect Canada's interests. That happened in the summer of 1979, and by December of 1979, Canada had signed the valuation code with the conditions Mr. Crosbie had successfully negotiated with our trading partners.

Well, the rest is history; the Trudeau government was sworn in during March of 1980 and proceeded to instruct the Tariff Board to hold discussions with the private sector. The government also discussed particular compensatory tariff increases with our trading partners. Notices of Ways and Means motions were presented by Mr. Lalonde in February of 1984, and since that time we have had to make some changes because of discussions with our trading partners and representations from the private sector of this country.

So, I must insist that the bill has a good bi-partisan ancestry. I do not agree that the government party at any time opposed the bill or the principle of the bill. I am glad to have the support of Her Majesty's official opposition for it today.

Since Senator Hays has indicated his desire that the bill be referred to committee, it is my intention to move that the bill be referred to the appropriate committee after it has received second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Senator Murray, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

SALTFISH ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jack Marshall moved the second reading of Bill C-6, to amend the Saltfish Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I am very pleased and privileged to move second reading of Bill C-6. At the outset, I should say that I rise with some trepidation because of the elevation to the Senate of two former Ministers of Fisheries and Oceans. I had better be right in what I say.

I should like to pay special tribute to the Honourable Roméo LeBlanc. When we were both members of the House of Commons we engaged in debate on a number of occasions. I must say that he was a minister who was fair, sincere and co-operative with members of the opposition.

Hon. Peter Bosa: And knowledgeable.

Senator Marshall: And knowledgeable. He was a friend of the fishermen right across Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Marshall: I did not have as much experience watching the career as Minister of Fisheries and Oceans of the Honourable Senator De Bané, but I followed the debates closely. He was a worthy choice to follow the Honourable Senator LeBlanc. Judging by his youthful appearance I know that he will be here for many years and will help considerably in his stay in the Senate.

● (1450)

This bill is of particular interest to other honourable senators who have been in this chamber for many years and are quite expert in the field of fisheries. I am referring particularly to the senators from Atlantic Canada.

This is legislation to amend subsection 17(2) of the Saltfish Act to increase the permitted borrowing limit of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation to $50 million from the present ceiling of $30 million.

This amendment, as honourable senators may be aware, involves proposed legislation that has been on the books for some time, and I am hopeful that this chamber can deal with it as expeditiously as possible. From reading House of Commons

[Senator Murray.]

Debates of December 4, it can be seen that this bill was dealt with in less than two hours in the other place. I can see nothing that is in any way contentious in this proposed amendment. However, its implementation is of considerable importance to the effective operation of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation and the large number of fishermen and saltfish processors in Atlantic Canada who depend on the corporation to market their catch.

By way of background, perhaps I should explain that the Canadian Saltfish Corporation, which has its head office in St. John's, Newfoundland, is a crown agency that was established in 1970 with the primary aim of improving returns to fishermen. It was set up to bring about a change in the inefficient and haphazard marketing system for saltfish that existed previously. I think that there is little doubt that the record shows that it has performed remarkably well in fulfilling its mandate.

Under the provisions of the Saltfish Act, the corporation exercises a monopoly in the interprovincial and export trade in salt bulk and dried codfish produced in the province of Newfoundland and Labrador and on the lower north shore of the Province of Quebec. Under matching provincial legislation, the corporation has exclusive purchase rights to cured codfish and to codfish for curing within the mandated region. I think it is important to point out that there is a requirement for the corporation to buy all cured fish of an acceptable quality which is offered for sale within its area of jurisdiction.

At the time the Saltfish Act was passed, approximately 14 years ago, the corporation's borrowing limit was set at $10 million, which was considered sufficient for its operations at that time. This limit was increased to $15 million in 1976, and increased again in 1980 when the borrowing ceiling was raised to $30 million.

Looking ahead, due to the soft market conditions currently prevailing in the frozen groundfish industry, an increase in Canadian salt bulk and saltfish production is predicted in the coming year. Because of this, and taking into account a number of other factors outside the corporation's control, particularly inflationary cost increases combined with severe devaluations of currency in importing countries, the corporation anticipates that its peak borrowing in 1985-86 will be in the area of $37 million. By the year 1988, this borrowing requirement is expected to rise to $48 million. When we talk about severe devaluations, we are referring to the countries to which we export, for instance, Portugal, where their currency is greatly devalued which is to our detriment.

I would like to emphasize that the amount of money established under the act as the borrowing limit represents the absolute level of funds available to the corporation as working capital in any one year. The corporation is not in a position to obtain additional credit outside this limit. Incidentally, the Canadian Saltfish Corporation obtains its working capital through loans from the Minister of Finance.

To put the situation in a nutshell, it appears quite clear that for the corporation to operate effectively, its borrowing limit must be increased from the current $30 million level. If this should not occur, then the corporation is likely to find itself in the impossible position of being obliged under its mandate to buy all the fish offered to it and, at the same time, having insufficient operating funds to be able to pay the fishermen or processors.

Having said that, I trust that honourable senators will not delay passage of this legislation, because we need to open the way for the Canadian Saltfish Corporation to carry out the mandate for which it was created.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I join in the remarks made by Senator Marshall in paying tribute to Senator Roméo LeBlanc especially for his tremendous work as Minister of Fisheries. I had expressed these sentiments privately and publicly, but I should like to say in this chamber today that the fishermen of my province in particular will be forever grateful for the understanding and comprehension shown by, and the dialogue that took place between the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the fishermen while he was minister.

As Senator Marshall said, Senator De Bané did not have quite as long a period of time to prove his mettle in the field of fisheries when he was minister, but I know that he was facing some difficult problems and, given more time, he would have found some solution to those ever-growing problems that the fishermen in my province, and I am sure in the other Atlantic provinces, faced.

Honourable senators, this is a very straightforward bill, as explained by Senator Marshall and I do not see any reason why it should not receive second reading now. Certainly there is no reason for its being referred to committee. It could even receive third reading today. I suppose I could not expect to hear new policies for dealing with problems of fisheries announced by Senator Marshall, although I feel very strongly that he is probably more qualified to do so than the new Minister of Fisheries is, but that is for the future to determine.

In has been my opinion that the marketing system is the source of most of the problems of fisheries. With this government talking about selling crown corporations and doing away with all of them, we cannot expect to have the kind of fisheries marketing structure that I would like to see sponsored by this government. I want to make my position clear. I believe in private enterprise. When the Kirby report on fisheries was published, I said publicly that it lacked substance because it did not attack the marketing problems of fisheries. I know that we could have a long discussion on that subject. The government which I supported did not proceed the way I would have liked, and I hoped that this government might, but after listening to Mr. Wilson and seeing the "blue" Tories at work, there is only a slim hope that we can see a marketing structure to take care of those problems. Nevertheless, I hope that they will have a change of heart regarding fisheries and that they will follow the example of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Honourable senators, as I said, we on this side are prepared to have the bill read the third time today, but perhaps there are other honourable senators who want to oppose that.

On motion of Senator De Bané, debate adjourned.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Davey calling the attention of the Senate to the Government's preoccupation with secrecy.—(Honourable Senator Phillips).

● (1500)

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, yesterday Senator Gigantès, speaking to the inquiry on government secrecy, strayed from the subject of government secrecy and strayed even further from the truth. Apparently, in my remarks on the Throne Speech debate, I hit a sensitive note when I referred to the "big lie" concept of Jack Pickersgill. I was rather surprised that Senator Gigantès found this such a sensitive point, because I am sure that an eminent journalist, such as he claims to be, would be familiar with this story. I am sure that if he were to check some of the old garbage that he had written, he would find that in 1964 and 1965 he wrote a number of articles on that very subject.

In his remarks, the honourable senator went on to prove my assertions correct, and I thank him for so doing. However, I very much regret the deliberate falsehoods that he inserted in his remarks concerning my appointment to the Senate. For some time, I have been aware of the delusions of personal grandeur possessed by Senator Gigantès, but I did not know that he suffered from hallucinations.

It is rather unfair to the late Right Honourable John Diefenbaker for Senator Gigantès to refer to a sneaking friendship with him. Those of us who knew John Diefenbaker know that he did not sneak around. He had his views; you may have disagreed with them, but you knew what they were, and there was certainly no sneaking around. John Diefenbaker was also a proud man who selected his friends, and that would eliminate the possibility of Philippe Gigantès being a friend. Despite adversity, John Diefenbaker kept his self-respect and, again, honourable senators, that eliminates the possibility of his friendship with Senator Gigantès.

All honourable senators are familiar with the contempt John Diefenbaker had for the majority of journalists. I see no reason to assume or believe that Philippe Gigantès would be an exception to that.

The right honourable gentleman was well known to me and, despite the assertions of Senator Gigantès, he did not talk about his friends behind their backs. If he had anything to say, he would say it to your face, and I am sure many in this chamber experienced that and know it to be true.

My friendship with John Diefenbaker continued for many years until his death. I was often invited to his office. I shared many political discussions with him and many stories, but not once did the right honourable gentleman stoop so low as to mention the name of Philippe Gigantès. I doubt very much if he even knew it.

The honourable senator referred to my election. Both Mr. Diefenbaker and I used to discuss that. We were rather proud of the fact that the riding of Prince, which from the beginning of Confederation had been Liberal—with one exception for four years—was turned around and I was elected in 1957 and in the next two elections. As a matter of curiosity, this morning I checked Senator Gigantès electoral experience. I found the Parliamentary Guide says that he was a Liberal candidate in the general election of 1980 and was defeated. I wonder why, honourable senators.

Later in his remarks, Senator Gigantès told us how eager journalists were to publish stories, especially when they were exclusive. I cannot imagine a journalist of the stature of Senator Gigantès possessing such a story and not publishing it. I am sure he wasn't covered by an oath of secrecy administered by any government officials, so I am sure he had an opportunity to publish it. I wonder why he did not publish it. The answer, honourable senators, is very simple. That story was never told to him by John Diefenbaker.

I am intrigued that someone who is God's gift to the Canadian Parliament would not realize that it was impossible to appoint Nathan Phillips as a representative of Prince Edward Island. Surely someone who is as familiar with the history of the Liberal Party would know something about Senate appointments. He apparently had some knowledge because he achieved an appointment himself, but he should have known that it would have been necessary for Nathan Phillips to be a resident of Prince Edward Island to receive an appointment from that province. To the best of my knowledge, Nathan Phillips was not a resident of Prince Edward Island.

Honourable senators, I had some knowledge that I was being considered for a Senate summons. Just prior to my appointment, there was an annual meeting of the Progressive Conservative Association of Canada. At that time the late Premier Shaw and several of his cabinet ministers visited Prime Minister Diefenbaker and urged him to appoint me to the Senate. Shortly after that, the right honourable gentleman had a visit from someone else who wished to put forward their application for the Senate summons, and that gentleman returned from the Prime Minister's office and told me that the Prime Minister had said, "You are too late; Premier Shaw and several of his cabinet ministers were in here this morning, and I have already decided to appoint Orville Phillips." In this instance, the hallucinations of Senator Gigantès took over.

Honourable senators, I do have one complaint about how my summons to the Senate was delivered. I flew home to Prince Edward Island on Thursday evening, arriving there about nine o'clock the next morning. At about one o'clock in the afternoon, I received a phone call from the office of the Prime Minister telling me that I was booked on a return flight, leaving at 5 o'clock that evening. I wish they had told me earlier and I would not have had to pay for the extra flight. As you all remember, we had to do that in those days.

Honourable senators, I sometimes think I was rather naive about my Senate appointment. I never even got it in writing, and I should have done that.

Honourable senators, I have probably wasted enough time on Senator Gigantès. I can live with his falsehood and hallucinations if he can. Before leaving that subject, I should like to tell honourable senators that the Roman Emperor Caligula did not greatly appreciate the Roman Senate so he appointed his favourite horse to that body. I seem to have the distinct understanding, honourable senators, that Prime Minister Trudeau did not exactly appreciate the Canadian Senate. But he did not appoint a complete horse—he only appointed Senator Gigantès. You know, honourable senators, he offered twice the insult to the Canadian Senate that Caligula did to the Roman Senate.

I shall now turn briefly to the inquiry. Throughout the session, there has been a certain preoccupation among members opposite with government secrecy. I find that quite strange because on Tuesday the President of the Treasury Board issued a certain document. It is readily available. It is an excellent document. The only complaint I have about it is the fact that whoever prepared it forgot to include the phone number of Mr. de Cotret, which is 6-7713.

This document lists the expenditures of the various cabinet ministers over the last two or three years. It seems to me to be strange that not one single former cabinet minister has stated that the expenditures are wrong, yet the Leader of the Liberal Party in the House of Commons complains that it is most unfair to provide information about the expenditures of the cabinet ministers. Lloyd Axworthy, whose expenditures increased by 140 per cent despite the six-and-five program, complained that it was character assassination.

I shall digress for a moment to tell honourable senators that I used to remind this chamber that I could not find one Grit who believed in the six-and-five program. This document confirms that. I would urge all honourable senators to phone Mr. de Cotret's office to get a copy of it. I think they will find it very helpful.

I should like to refer briefly to the experience we have had in getting information. I recall that delightful occasion when Senator Marshall rose in this chamber to tell the Leader of the Government in the Senate that he had obtained information that had been refused to him by the government leader. He simply called the Office of the Information Commissioner, where the information was readily available. I have found, however, that the opposition has been very selective in the information it wants.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I should hope so!

Senator Phillips: The opposition wants information that will embarrass the government, but it tries to keep secret any information that will annoy the Grits.

Honourable senators, we have never had such an open government, yet when information is provided, we hear complaints.

Senator Frith: It is always nice to throw a little humour into it.

Senator Phillips: I have noticed that every time a Grit gets up in this chamber, he quotes Prime Minister Mulroney. Honourable senators, that is a commendable habit. If they keep on doing that and just remember a small portion of the things they have quoted, they will have more information than they can handle. So let us have no more worries about secrecy in the government.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators—

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of privilege. I believe that I have priority, your honour.

Senator Phillips has described my remarks as deliberate falsehood. I had most of his other remarks coming to me because I insulted him. I accept that he should defend himself in his own style. I should like to point out to him, however, that it was the Emperor Caligula who appointed his horse.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): What is the point of privilege?

Senator Gigantès: On the phrase “deliberate falsehood,” I would like Senator Phillips to withdraw the word “deliberate.” I think it is against the rules of the Senate.

Senator Phillips: The honourable Senator Gigantès is more acquainted than I am with the rules on falsehood. If I have transgressed, I withdraw the word.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Walker: Honourable senators, I feel bound to rise because of the honourable senator who has just spoken and about whom all of these nasty things have been said. I have known Senator Phillips for many years, and I can say that a more honest man I have never met in my life; a more carefully spoken man I have never met in my life, and a man who has had more of the respect of Mr. Diefenbaker I have never met in my life. Then we have this new boy, who was born in 1925—two years after I became a reporter for the Globe. His chief claim to honour is that at one time he wrote messages for the Montreal something-or-other. It is a shocking thing—and it should not be tolerated in this chamber—to have a new boy come in with all of his lip, all of his impudence and all of his imputations.

Honourable senators, I quote from the speech given yesterday:

I recall Mr. Diefenbaker telling me that Senator Phillips was an example of how either election or appointment can be an error.

This, with the greatest of respect, Mr. Diefenbaker could not have said because he did not believe it. He could have spoken that way about others, perhaps, but he could not have spoken that way about the person who has been aggrieved today. Mr. Diefenbaker liked this man and told me that repeatedly. Senator Phillips and I were introduced as senators at the same time, and Mr. Diefenbaker spoke very highly of Senator Phillips.

Why does Senator Gigantès not admit that he never heard that story? I suggest to him that he is making up a direct falsehood. Perhaps he does not recall that this may be a falsehood about somebody else. But I suggest that he certainly never heard Mr. Diefenbaker say any of the things that have been ascribed to him. If the honourable senator rises to withdraw his comment, I will sit down. If he does not, I will complete my speech.

Senator Gigantès: I would like to say to the honourable senator, as I have said before, that I have it coming to me if he wants to—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is this a question of privilege?

Senator Gigantès: Yes, your honour. If the honourable senator wishes to continue, it is, of course, his privilege. I have apologized. I regret what I said in this house, but I do not accept that it was a direct falsehood.

Senator Walker: Does the honourable senator agree that the conversation with Mr. Diefenbaker did not in fact take place?

Senator Gigantès: No, sir, I do not agree.

Senator Walker: Take the cigarette out of your mouth, will you? Act like a gentleman.

Senator Gigantès: I said, “No, sir, I do not agree.”

Senator Walker: That is where you are very, very much mistaken. I have risen to reinforce what has already been said on behalf of Senator Phillips. Again I quote from yesterday’s speech, where Mr. Diefenbaker apparently said:

He never understood how the wonderful people from Prince Edward Island, the home of Confederation, elected him.

Are you suggesting that Mr. Diefenbaker said that to you? There is no answer—

Senator Frith: Order!

● (1520)

Senator Roblin: It is a rhetorical question.

Senator Frith: I merely wish to explain that I believe Senator Walker is entitled to say “Does the honourable senator accept”, rather than turning directly to him and saying “You”.

Senator Walker: That is a good suggestion. Do you admit that it was never said by Mr. Diefenbaker?

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Frith: Might I suggest “Does Senator Gigantès admit”?

Senator Walker: Does Senator Gigantès—honourable senators, I find it hard to address him as a senator. Does Senator Gigantès accept the withdrawal of what has been ascribed to him in the speech he made yesterday?

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I have already said that I wish I had never said it. I have apologized. Whatever you say, honourable senator, and whatever Senator Phillips says, in order to embarrass me, is merited because it was an error on my part to mention such a thing, and I am sorry. I cannot go further than that.

An Hon. Senator: He has apologized.

Senator Walker: That is very good. You apologize—

Senator Gigantès: Yes.

Senator Walker: —for that statement about the alleged interview with Mr. Diefenbaker. That is all I want. But may I tell the new boy one further thing: The next time he comes here to make a speech, he should be wise and tell the truth. He should not make up something in order to make a hit. He will never make a hit around here, in my estimation, but he should try; he should be honest, talk honestly, and carry out his duties as he should as an honoured senator of this great dominion.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I declare the incident closed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, if no other honourable senator wishes to speak on this inquiry, I propose to adjourn the debate.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators—

Senator Frith: I am sorry, senator; I apologize.

Senator Walker: I held you up, Senator Macquarrie.

Senator Macquarrie: No. I would have listened to the honourable senator for a long time. I am prompted to speak by something that was said by the last three speakers—not by Senator Davey. There is something on my mind which is perhaps unique to this chamber, to Parliament Hill and perhaps to Canada, and it might be germane for me to bring it to the attention of honourable senators. On a certain day in February 1963, I was in the sixth floor parliamentary restaurant—those were the good old days when prices were low—and my companion at the time was the present Senator Phillips. We had whatever decent maritimers had at the time; we had our meal, and we were at the closing stage of the final course. Senator Phillips, like myself, is a tea drinker—he was having tea, and I was having tea.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Macquarrie: In those days we used to be rum drinkers, but I believe he has given that up, and I have not. I commend him but I do not intend to emulate him. A nice young lady of the restaurant staff came over and said, “Mr. Phillips, you are wanted on the phone. It’s the Prime Minister.” We had known that he was going to get the Senate seat. In fact, a few weeks earlier the late Premier of Prince Edward Island had told me: “I have been talking”—he said this with all due respect—“to the Old Man, and Orville is going to get the Senate seat”. He said “I feel a bit like Christ. I have saved others, but myself I cannot save.” That is what Walter Shaw said. I had the greatest admiration when the present Senator Phillips was called to the phone. In due course he came back and said—this again was said in terms of affection—“The Old Man wants me to go down to his office,” which was to that little office that the then Prime Minister had behind the chamber. I was much impressed with Senator Phillips in that having had that message from the Prime Minister regarding an appointment to a Senate seat, I’ll be “Joe-darned” if he didn’t finish his tea, and also another cup of tea, and then went down to receive word of the senatorship. He came back and told me that the Prime Minister had said “Now you and . . .”—he named the man who was to become the Lieutenant Governor of Saskatchewan—“make sure you don’t go in and vote tonight, because by that time you will be in another jurisdiction”.

Now, long before I heard Senator Gigantès, I have heard others say there was some mistake, that the then Prime Minister did not know what he was doing, that because Nathan Phillips was in the gallery he was all mixed up. I have to say that the then Prime Minister was not mixed up. It is an old fable that was used in Prince Edward Island, and elsewhere. The call came to Orville Phillips, and he went to the phone. I would have gladly gone to the phone. The story as told is an unfortunate fable that has been going around for too long, and because I knew the circumstances, I thought that honourable senators would not mind my making this confession—while I am still in my anecdotage and not my dotage—to explain the facts.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators—

Senator Roblin: Before the honourable senator adjourns the debate, I notice that in Debates of the Senate for yesterday, December 5, there is the statement:

I think it was unethical of the Leader of the Government to change the text from “sacré bleu” to “sacrebleu”. I believe the remark was meant in a jocular sense, but I wish to say that I did not interfere with Hansard in this case.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Have another run at it.

Senator Frith: In order to keep the debate going, I will move the motion to adjourn it.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Frith: That comes from practice. One eventually gets it right.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

SUBJECT MATTER OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF REPORT REFERRED TO INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION COMMITTEE

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Honourable senators, I appreciate this opportunity to speak. With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to order the printing of an additional 10,000 copies of the report entitled: "Soil at Risk", tabled in the Senate on 6th November, 1984.

Honourable senators, if leave is granted, I would like to speak to the matter.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not wish to deny the honourable senator leave. However, I do not wish to interfere with the work of the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration by authorizing the printing of additional copies. On condition that the matter will be referred to that committee, I will be happy to have the matter debated.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Will not that committee have a say in this matter?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Senator Roblin: Your Honour, I suggest that the motion should come to us through the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and not directly from the floor of the house. If there is no pressing need to deal with the matter at this moment, perhaps the honourable senator might withhold his motion for the time being until we can ascertain the proper way to handle it.

Senator Sparrow: Honourable senators, if I might speak—I am sorry, Senator Marshall. Did you wish to speak?

• (1530)

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, this subject came up at the organizational meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry. According to the document placed before me as new chairman, there was authorization from the last session, when Senator Sparrow was the chairman, to order the printing of 30,000 copies of this report. However, only 15,000 were ordered. Authority was also given to the then chairman to order more copies if required. Because the session ended, we have run into a legal problem. According to the administration of the Senate, there is no authority to order more copies printed unless the matter goes before the committee. Thus the matter is in limbo at the present time. Because of circumstances, the committee has no authority to order the extra copies.

Senator Sparrow: I thank Senator Marshall for explaining the situation very well. For emphasis, I shall repeat parts of it. Most honourable senators have a copy of the report "Soil at Risk—Canada's Eroding Future" prepared by the Agriculture Committee. As Senator Marshall has indicated, the committee had authorization to print 30,000 copies. As chairman of the committee, I was not entirely sure at the time that we would need 30,000 copies so I asked the committee to authorize the printing of 15,000 copies and to authorize me to order additional copies if required. The committee gave me that authorization. All the copies were distributed and we have been out of stock since September 15. At present, there are requests for at least 10,000 copies and we will probably need more.

While Parliament was prorogued, I asked the Inter-Session Committee to approve the printing of additional copies but this was never done. Nor did we receive replies to the letters we wrote to the Inter-Session Committee and the administration. By the time this Parliament began, we were desperate. We decided to wait until the Internal Economy Committee organized but it has not met yet. Meanwhile, the requests are still coming in. I am receiving requests for 40, 50 and 100 copies at a time. Whenever I go to meetings, I must keep my own copy hugged to my chest. Last week at the organizational meeting of the Agriculture committee a motion was put forward that an additional 15,000 copies be printed. The motion was passed by the committee. However, we are still held up by whatever it is that says the matter must be approved by the Internal Economy Committee.

Upon asking for legal advice today, I was told that the matter may not be approved by the Internal Economy Committee when it meets, which is not until next week. Should the Internal Economy Committee decide that it cannot handle the matter until the Agriculture committee deals with it, then there will be further delays. The advice was that I should bring in a motion referring the report back to the Agriculture committee, which I did earlier today. The motion was put on the order paper in the hope that the report would receive wide discussion in the chamber and not be referred immediately to the committee. This would mean that it may not get reported back to the committee until late December or in the new year. If that were the case and if the Internal Economy Committee does not give authorization, it would mean that the additional copies would not be printed. That is why this motion is before you now.

The new senators appointed since the report was released have not received copies, nor have the new members of Parliament. When the report is discussed in this chamber it will prompt requests, which we will not be able to fulfil. So as far as the committee is concerned, it is a desperate situation. I have given notice that I will speak on the report next week, so I will not belabour the point now. However, it is sad that we have this widely sought after report and we are unable to print additional copies. I plead with you to pass this motion so that we can have additional copies printed. You can all see from the thickness of this folder how many requests I have. We simply want to fill those requests. This situation is embarrassing, not only to the Agriculture Committee, but to the Senate.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I would like to comment briefly on Senator Sparrow's remarks. I appreciate fully the predicament he finds himself in with regard to the demand for the report. I apologize for the Inter-Session Committee for not dealing with the matter. I can only tell the honourable senator that by the time the government had changed there was no sign of any application from that committee nor was there any request for action. However, this was a rather tumultuous period in our history, although it was an exciting and delightful one from my point of view. I can only say at this point that the safest, easiest and best way of dealing with it now is to wait until the Internal Economy Committee meets next Tuesday at 11 a.m. Perhaps there should be a motion referring the request for printing to the committee. I do not think it is necessary to deal with the report in the chamber before that request is made. I think this approach would be far better than to establish the precedent that a chairman or a representative of a committee must come before the Senate to request printings of reports or to deal with any other matter. So I think we should wait until next Tuesday and deal with the matter in the manner I have suggested.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Doody has suggested that we refer the motion itself to the Internal Economy Committee. I think it would be in order to refer the subject matter of the motion to the Internal Economy Committee so that when it meets next week it will already have the motion. In that way this matter would be their first order of business once they are organized. Would that be satisfactory?

Senator Doody: Yes.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, in amendment, I move:

That the motion be not now adopted but that the subject-matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion in amendment agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, December 11, 1984, at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX "A"(See p. 279)STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE

REPORT ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B) LAID BEFORE PARLIAMENT
FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1985

Thursday, December 6, 1984

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

SECOND REPORT

Your Committee, to which Supplementary Estimates (B) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1985, were referred, does, in obedience to its Order of Reference of November 20, 1984, report as follows:

The Committee heard evidence from the following witnesses from the Treasury Board: Mr. J. L. Manion, Secretary and Mr. D. McEachran, Senior Assistant Secretary, Program Branch.

Supplementary Estimates (B) totalling $6.2 billion is the second supplementary for the fiscal year 1984-85. The total 1984-85 estimates tabled to date are $103.0 billion. Of the $6.2 billion contained in these supplementary estimates, $4.1 billion or 66% represents the adjustment to items with a statutory authority. The remaining $2.1 billion represents new spending authorities that Parliament is being asked to approve.

These estimates contain a request from the Department of Regional and Industrial Expansion for $25 million to cover a loan guarantee for Maislin Industries. Mr. Manion indicated that the government could not be certain that this would be the last request to support Maislin Industries. The Committee learned that the maximum committed to Maislin Industries through loan guarantees was $30 million in U.S. dollars.

With regard to spending reductions, announced at the time of the economic statement by the Minister of Finance in the other place on November 7, 1984, Mr. Manion informed the Committee that there would be some savings to be applied to the deficit. Mr. Manion indicated that these savings would remain in departmental budgets until the end of the fiscal year at which time they would be applied to reducing the deficit. However, the witness also indicated that the Treasury Board would have considerable difficulty in separating normal lapses from savings associated with the spending reduction. The Committee was surprised to learn that these savings were not being immediately withdrawn and applied to the deficit, thereby reducing interest charges. The Committee was also concerned that the government was not able to determine with any accuracy the extent of the savings associated with the spending reduction.

Lastly the Committee learned through its review of the list of one dollar votes (attached as Appendix), that the government, in June 1984, had agreed to extend sales financing from $230 million to $430 million in support of the marketing of Dash 7 and 8 aircraft. The witness told the Committee that the increase, accomplished through loan guarantees, was designed to ensure that lending institutions which finance the purchase of these aircraft do not suffer undue financial loss. The Committee felt strongly that such guarantees should be the responsibility of the de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Ltd., the producer of the planes, and not the government. The Committee indicated its concern that this represented an example of commitments by the government to activities that should be the responsibility of the private sector.

Respectfully submitted,

FERNAND-E. LEBLANC,
Chairman.

APPENDIX TO THE REPORT*LIST OF ONE DOLLAR VOTES
INCLUDED IN*SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B), 1984-85

The 18 One Dollar Votes included in these Estimates are listed in Appendix I by Ministry and department or agency along with the page number where each vote may be located in the Estimates. The votes are also identified in Appendix I, according to the following three categories. In those instances where a $1.00 vote falls into more than one category, the prime category is designated by an "X" and other category by an "*".

- A Eight votes which authorize the transfer of funds from one vote to another. (An explanation of the new requirement and the source of funds is provided in Supplementary Estimates).
- B Seven votes which authorize the payment of grants. (An explanation of the new requirement and the source of funds is provided in Supplementary Estimates).
- C Three votes which amend provisions of a previous Appropriation Act. (Additional explanations are provided in Appendix II).

APPENDIX II

ADDITIONAL EXPLANATIONS

Amendment of Provisions of Previous Appropriation Acts

National Health and Welfare

Vote L11b—Authority is requested to amend National Health and Welfare Vote L16b, Appropriation Act No. 2, 1973 by the deletion of the titles of Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act and the Medical Care Act and the substitution of the title of Canada Health Act where they appear within the Vote wording.

Explanation—The Canada Health Act replaces the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act and the Medical Care Act. The new legislation which was approved on April 17, 1984, did not provide for the amending of the Vote L16b wording thus a separate Vote is required in these Estimates to provide for this.

Regional Industrial Expansion

Vote 1b—Authority is requested to increase the loan insurance guarantee limit by $200,000,000 U.S. in respect of the de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Ltd. The previous guarantee limit of $230,000,000 was established by Vote 1e of Appropriation Act No. 4, 1981-82.

Explanation—In June 1984 the Government agreed to a temporary extension of the sales financing program used to support sales of the Dash 7 and 8 aircraft in Canada and the United States by increasing existing authority by $200M U.S. This financing assistance applies only to sales bookings to December 31, 1984 or until aggregate sales, excluding sales to the Government of Canada, reaches 55 units (whichever comes first). The increase in authority is required because the most important market for these aircraft is the Commuter airline industry which tends to be largely comprised of smaller airlines with relatively high debt to equity ratios and modest profits. The present guarantee limit, which is $230,000,000, is insufficient to meet requirements to December 31, 1984. The Dash 7 and 8 (Enterprise Development Program) insurance program administered by Department of Regional Industrial Expansion involves the provision of insurance for up to 90% of the amount at risk to lending institutions. Accordingly it is proposed to increase the present limit by $200,000,000 U.S.

Vote 6b—Authority is requested to amend Industry, Trade and Commerce Vote 6a of Appropriation Act No. 1, 1980-81 and Vote 6e, Appropriation Act No. 4, 1981-82 to permit the substitution of the Name "Canadair Financial Corporation Inc." for the name "Canadair Limited" wherever the latter name appears in the Vote Wording.

Explanation—When the financial and corporate restructuring of Canadair took place in March 1984, Canadair Limited was renamed Canadair Financial Corporation Inc. The operating assets were then transferred to a newly created subsidiary of Canada Development Investment Corporation. The subsidiary, in turn, assumed the original name, Canadair Limited, and became the operating entity.

The debt incurred by the original Canadair in developing the Challenger jet remains with Canadair Financial Corporation Inc. As a result, it is this Corporation which now requires the benefit of the loan guarantee Vote since the Corporation is unable to make new loans utilizing the remaining guarantee authority. This means that interest payments due March 15, 1984 on a loan of $150,000,000 U.S. cannot be met without this Vote. The failure to meet this obligation will trigger a default and a call on the Consolidated Revenue Fund pursuant to the existing Government guarantee.

Transport

Vote 35b—The primary purpose of this Vote is to provide funding for two new capital projects through the transfer of funds from Vote 15. The secondary purpose for the inclusion of this Vote is to extend the provisions of Appropriation Act No. 2, 1984-85 so as to display these two new projects, which have not been previously shown in Estimates.

When Vote 35 was included in the 1984-85 Main Estimates each project requiring funding was listed; Vote 35b continues this type of presentation through the addition of these two new projects to the original listing.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 3, 1984-85

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-16, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March 1985.

Bill read first time.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding Rule 44(1)(f), moved that the Bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later today.

Motion agreed to.

CHRISTMAS

BUREAUCRATIC AND POLITICAL COMMENTS—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, December 13, 1984, I will call the attention of the Senate to certain bureaucratic and political reflections on Christmas.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

CANADIANIZATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Michael Kirby: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate and it relates to the speech made by the Prime Minister in New York last night. In that speech he stated that, as a new element of government policy, the Conservative government would be abandoning the provisions of the National Energy Program whereby Petro-Canada is entitled to a 25 per cent share of all oil and gas found on federal lands. This is the provision commonly known as the "25 per cent back-in provision."

My question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate is this: In view of the fact that the Prime Minister repeatedly stated, both during his leadership campaign and during the election campaign, that he supported the objectives and the goals of the National Energy Program, does this change in policy indicate that once again the Prime Minister has changed his mind and that now he has abandoned the objective of achieving a 50 per cent Canadian ownership of that industry by 1990?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wonder if my honourable friend has correctly understood what the Prime Minister said in New York. It seems to me that the point he was making was that those back-ins with a retroactive character were the object of his statement to the businessmen at that time.

I do not believe he said that the policy of securing an interest in one way or another for the Canadian people in respect of these frontier discoveries had been abandoned; it was something quite different.

Senator Kirby: As a supplementary question, I presume that the Leader of the Government in the Senate realizes that, as far as east coast offshore Canadian lands are concerned—leaving aside the question of the Beaufort Sea—because of the nature of the timing when leases were originally granted on those lands, they are entirely covered by the so-called retroactive portion of the back-in provision. To that extent it amounts to a clear abandonment of the existing policy and the existing objectives of the government.

It seems to me that this now raises a very specific question related to the federal-provincial agreement which the Government of Nova Scotia and the federal government signed in early 1982. As part of that agreement, a crown corporation owned by the Government of Nova Scotia was to receive 50 per cent of that back-in provision. In other words, 12-½ per cent was to go to a provincially-owned crown corporation.

In light of the fact that that is an integral part of that federal-provincial agreement, my question to the Leader of the Government is whether the Premier of Nova Scotia was informed of this policy change prior to it being announced by the Prime Minister.

Senator Roblin: I think my honourable friend can take it for granted that the government will live up to all the agreements that were made with respect to these matters.

As to my friend's inquiry about the detail of the matter, he will have to wait until the legislation is introduced, as I believe it will be before too long.

Senator Kirby: As a further supplementary question, it seems to me that, if the government is to live up to the nature of the agreement with the Government of Nova Scotia, that implies, I assume, that in the absence of being able to give the provincially-owned crown corporation 12-½ per cent, the federal government intends to offer some other form of financial compensation to the provincial government in lieu of actually being able to give that share of crown land.

Is that, in fact, a reasonable conclusion, or is it more reasonable to assume that what really was announced last night is a direct transfer of resources from the people of Nova Scotia to the multinational oil companies?

• (1410)

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend can make any assumptions he likes, but I am certainly not responsible for them and I will certainly not try to define his assumptions for him. I have already stated the answer; that is, that the government will live up to its obligations and that the changes to the National Energy Program to which my friend makes reference will be the subject of legislation and will be available for study in due course.

Senator Kirby: In order to understand the honourable senator's answer clearly, is it then reasonable to conclude that this legislation, when it is presented to this chamber, will state precisely what is to happen to that element of the agreement between the federal government and Nova Scotia?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend can make any conclusions he likes. When he sees the legislation, he will understand what the answer is.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I was interested in the remarks made by the Prime Minister last night in New York with respect to Canadianization of the energy industry. He is quoted as saying that it remains "an objective of the government."

Honourable senators are well aware that some very appreciable progress has been made towards Canadianization of that industry. Canadian ownership has increased from 28 to 44 per cent, whether one measures upstream production control or the Canadian benefits with respect to the northern development. We had set an objective of 50 per cent Canadian ownership by 1990.

My question to the Government Leader is this: Has the government established an acceptable objective with respect to the Canadianization of the oil and gas industry in Canada?

Senator Roblin: I do not know what my honourable friend would regard as being acceptable, but when he sees the legislation to which I have referred, he will be able to form a judgment on the matter.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

DISPOSAL

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I read that the Honourable Sinclair Stevens, Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, has told the press that this week there will be on the cabinet agenda the question of the sale of one of Canada's crown corporations. I do not intend to ask what is going to happen in the cabinet, but, inasmuch as the sale of a crown corporation may be imminent, I would like the Leader of the Government to tell me whether there have been established any public interest tests that would apply to the disposal of these crown corporations.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think that we will have to allow the honourable Mr. Stevens to make his own statements with respect to that matter. I am not able to do so today.

Senator MacEachen: Would the Leader of the Government be able to tell me whether it is possible that these crown corporations might be sold to buyers from other countries or whether the sale would be contained exclusively within Canada?

Senator Roblin: I think that the minister in charge will make any statements that are necessary on that matter.

Senator MacEachen: Would the Leader of the Government undertake to provide me with that information in the event that the minister does not deal with these matters in his public statement? It seems to me that it is rather important, if crown corporations are to be sold, that the Canadian interest be protected. For example, if it is conceivable that a buyer of Canadian assets were to be found in the United States, would any public interest or substantial Canadian benefit tests apply? Could the minister say, for example, that the substantial benefit test of the Foreign Investment Review Agency or the new Canada Investment Act would apply?

Senator Roblin: I think my honourable friend may rely on the minister concerned to make a deal which, in his opinion and then in the opinion of the government, will be one which is advantageous in all respects to the people of Canada.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question which arises out of what has just been said. The phrase "crown corporations" has been used as a generic term. The companies that I have heard discussed consist of aircraft companies and a telecommunications company. Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise us whether other crown corporations are being considered for sale as a method of reducing the national debt?

Senator Roblin: That may well be the case, but until some decision is made in respect of it and until it reaches the stage when a public announcement can be made, I am afraid that there is nothing I can say about it in this chamber.

STATISTICS CANADA

CANCELLATION OF 1986 CENSUS

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government arising from a matter that I raised some time ago concerning the mid-decade census. At that time, I asked whether business and the provinces had been consulted, to which the Leader of the Government replied that he would take the question as notice. Just recently, Jean Fournier, the Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance for Federal-Provincial Relations stated that:

Scrapping the census could prove to be a real problem depending on how close these population estimates come to the actual fact.

That is something to which I had made reference. An Alberta official, who does not want to be identified, also said that it would pose very significant problems.

In light of this growing concern, can the Leader of the Government advise the chamber as to whether the government is going to move and deal with the question of a mid-decade census?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend has repeated a question that he asked on a previous occasion. I will be pleased to give him the best answer I can, which is that this matter was also raised in the House of Commons, and the minister informed the house that he felt that the Dominion Bureau of Statistics—or Statistics Canada as it is now called—had other sources of information besides the five-year census which could be relied upon to provide information needed for the various purposes that might come to mind. I am afraid I cannot offer any advance on that statement by the minister.

Senator Sinclair: As a supplementary, that information was, of course, available before, and resulted in massive mistakes on the extrapolation of population figures. A distinguished professor at Western University, Tom Courchene, has said "If you don't have good population numbers, you don't know what the hell you have got."

In light of the very strong statements that are coming from people who are involved in this matter, including the premier of a very distinguished province of western Canada, namely, the province of Manitoba, will the government consider taking another look at this unfortunate action?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I do not believe that I can add anything to the answer I have already given my honourable friend.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

GEORGES BANK—WORLD COURT JUDGMENT

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government arising from an article I have read in the press concerning the request of the Government of the United States to delay implementation of the World Court judgment regarding Georges Bank. Can the Leader of the Government assure this house, in light of the government's generous mood of offering the store for sale last night in New York, that it has not already decided to accept the demand of the United States and delay implementation of the judgment for a year?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not believe my honourable friend would expect me to accept his preamble as being in any way a factual description of what has been taking place. With that clearly understood, I will tell him that to the best of my knowledge a request has been received from the United States about this matter. It is now being considered by the government, and when a decision is available, it will be made known to my honourable friend.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

RUMOURED SALE

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: There are rumours circulating in New Brunswick and the Atlantic provinces that one of the crown corporations that may be offered for sale to one of the great American companies is the CBC. Will the Leader of the Government deny flatly that the CBC has been offered for sale—that is, all of the physical assets of CBC?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Do I understand my honourable friend correctly? Is he saying that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is being offered for sale? Is that his question? I should find that a remarkable situation if it were true.

● (1420)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): The newspapers will say Roblin refused to deny it.

Senator Roblin: I should have asked him who the prospect was.

ENVIRONMENT

WILDLIFE—EFFECT OF BUDGETARY CUTS

Hon. Jean Le Moyne: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Nowadays one seldom hears good news about the environment. One should never be complacent about it, just because it is a long-term affair. So anything that seems to put in jeopardy some aspect of the protection of the environment is a cause of deep worry. Would the Leader of the Government tell us if the Minister of the Environment will make sure that her budgetary cuts will pose no threat to wildlife, a resource that, after all, is not renewable as so many disappearing species show us year after year?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The minister has had the same question addressed to her in the House of Commons and her answer has been, if I remember correctly, that she is taking every step to ensure that the cuts are made with the greatest discretion possible and that everything is done in a manner that lives up to undertakings contained in the Wildlife Convention and other undertakings the government has entered into. So I think my honourable friend can take it for granted that every effort will be made to see that the action is as suitable as can be devised in the circumstances. The plain fact is that when you cut something from anybody then, naturally, you run into trouble, and that is certainly the case here.

Senator Le Moyne: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question, if you please. Would the honourable Leader of the Government acquaint us with the intentions of the government concerning a rumoured three-member committee to advise the minister on the possible effects of her cuts on our living medium? My honourable friend could also oblige us if he would give us the names of the members of said committee.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend's question is based on a questionable newspaper report which I do not think is valid.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

SALE OF CF-104 AIRCRAFT TO TURKEY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, my question is addressed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The Minister of National Defence has been discussing the sale of 20 used CF-104 aircraft to Turkey and some expenditures associated with putting these aircraft in working order. Would the Leader of the Government let us know whether these aircraft were offered for sale to other countries and, if so, when?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I can give my honourable friend at least a partial answer to his question. The government has already stated that similar offers were made not only to the Republic of Turkey, but to the Republic of Greece as well.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Would the Leader of the Government please let us know, at his earliest convenience, when these offers were made?

Senator Roblin: Naturally, I am not aware of that at the present time. I shall convey my honourable friend's request for information to the minister concerned.

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I have a further supplementary question. In House of Commons Debates at page 1071 the Minister of Defence says that he is opposing the NDP resolution because "Mutual security is not enhanced if current imbalances are locked in, as they would be in Europe." I would be most grateful to the Leader of the Government if he would provide this chamber with a list of these imbalances in the nuclear field.

Senator Roblin: I really wonder whether my honourable friend would be disappointed if I told him that I cannot expand on speeches made by ministers in the other house. That is something out of the line of Oral Question Period in the Senate.

Senator Gigantès: Would the honourable Leader of the Government, without reference to the speech by his colleague in the house, provide this information to the Senate, so that we can be informed on the matter of disarmament?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, my honourable friend's question does not lend itself to treatment in the oral portion of Question Period. I will take his question as a written question and see what I can provide by way of an answer.

MANITOBA

WINNIPEG—FUTURE OF ST. PAUL'S COLLEGE SITE BUILDING

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I do not want to misstate government policy; however, as I understand it, a research centre on the old St. Paul's College site in Winnipeg is to be completed but it is not to be used as a research centre. Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell me what the intentions are with respect to this building once it is completed and what costs it will involve as a completed building?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend will recognize before I say it that his is not the type of question with which I can deal in Oral Question Period in the Senate. However, I can say that I think my honourable friend is a little pessimistic with respect to the future of this building. I have some hope that a use might be found for it which will be regarded, locally, as being a sensible way of spending public funds. When I am in a position to say something more on the matter I will be very pleased to do so.

Senator Everett: Can the government leader give honourable senators an idea with respect to what the costs of the building will be when it is completed regardless of whether or not it is used for a worthwhile purpose or whether or not it is allowed to just stand as a completed but empty building?

Senator Roblin: I think that its future is much more hopeful than my honourable friend indicates; however, he asks for a sum and I will do my best to obtain the cost price for him.

Senator Everett: I am glad to hear that the future is much more hopeful than I thought. Obviously, the Leader of the Government in the Senate has some idea about what might happen to the building and perhaps he could elucidate with respect to that point?

Senator Roblin: When the policy has been decided upon I will be the first to tell my honourable friend about it.

THE ENVIRONMENT

PUBLIC ENVIRONMENT GROUP

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I have a question following on the one asked by Senator Le Moyne. Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell me anything about an organization known as the Public Environment Group?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am afraid that is not within my compass of knowledge at the moment.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have delayed answers to questions as follows: A question raised in the Senate on November 15 by the Honourable Senator Steuart respecting energy and, in particular, the reduction in grants with respect to the Petroleum Incentive Program; a question raised in the Senate on November 15 by the Honourable Senator Thompson regarding foreign affairs and the Organization of American States; a supplementary question raised in the Senate on November 15 by the Honourable Senator De Bané regarding the closing of the Canadian diplomatic post in Ouagadougou, the capital of Upper Volta; a question raised in the Senate on November 27 by the Honourable Senator Frith, Deputy Leader of the Opposition, regarding metric conversion and government policy; and a question raised in the Senate on November 29 by the Honourable Senator Thompson regarding the National Parole Board and a Federal Court decision. These are all fairly extensive answers, honourable senators, and I would like to have them taken as read, to form part of our record for all to read.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I, too, wish to congratulate the Leader of the Government for bringing forward these answers. I sense that we are establishing a custom by which all delayed answers to questions asked in the Senate will be taken as read. In the past, a senator who asked a question in the Senate, and to which there was a delayed answer, was asked whether he or she would like to have the answer read or taken as read. I would like to hear the answer to the question I asked with respect to metric conversion. I say that because I know there are a great many Canadians who would like to hear the answer as well, and perhaps other senators would like to have their questions answered orally.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I have been accepting as oral questions in the Senate questions which, perhaps, are not really suitably described in that way, since oral questions as a rule require relatively short, succinct answers. The questions that I am asked very often do not fit that description and a lengthy answer is required.

• (1430)

Hon. H. A. Olson: It was worse before.

Senator Roblin: I did not hear that remark. Perhaps that is just as well. In any case, if honourable senators want these questions answered orally by me, now that I have the answers in my hand, I will do so at once.

I start with Senator Steuart who asked about the petroleum incentive program—

Senator Frith: I am sorry, but I seem to have had a great deal of difficulty getting this point across. I raised it on another occasion.

Senator Roblin: I am not playing favourites. It is all or nothing.

Senator Frith: I can remember on many occasions when I would stand up with an answer and say, "I have an answer here which is two pages long," and I would ask Senator Marshall, or whomever, if he wanted it read into the record. He would say either, "No, I will take it as read," or, "Yes, please read it." I am simply asking you to say to senators, "I have an answer. Since it is two or three pages long, are you satisfied to have it appear as part of the debates or do you wish it read?" Many of the senators may not want to have their answers read, but I personally would like to hear the answer to the metric question. I do not think it is a matter of playing favourites. As a matter of fact, it is not playing favourites because you give each person the equal right to decide whether or not they want the answer to their question read into the record.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM INCENTIVE PROGRAM—REDUCTION IN GRANTS

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I will start with Senator Steuart's question on the Petroleum Incentive Program and ask him whether he would like his question answered orally or if he is content to have it appear in the record.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: I would like it taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

The Minister of Energy's office states:

The estimate of funds needed for PIP grants was several years old and based on projections now recognized as too high.

Based on current levels of activity, the PIP estimate has been revised downward.

The levels of activity projected for 85-86 are expected to be the same as those for 84-85.

No decrease in activity will come as a result of the cut announced in the Economic Statement.

In other words, the level of PIP grants now reflects more accurately the current and anticipated levels of activity.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The next delayed answer is to a question posed by Senator Thompson on foreign affairs concerning the Organization of American States. Would Senator Thompson prefer me to read the answer to his question or is he content to have it appear in the record?

Hon. Andrew Thompson: I would like it taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

It is the government's position that the question of Canada's future status in the Organization of American States is an important foreign policy issue which warrants careful examination in terms of our overall objectives in Latin America.

The government intends to assess the merits of Canadian membership with an entirely open mind and will address this question in the upcoming review of Canada's international relations.

At present Canada does have an observer's position in the Organization of American States.

BURKINA-FASO—CLOSING OF CANADIAN DIPLOMATIC POST

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I have a delayed answer to a supplementary question posed by Senator Pierre De Bané on November 15 concerning the closing of the Ouagadougou Embassy in the capital of Upper Volta. I would ask him whether he would prefer to have the answer to his question read at this time or if he is content to have it appear in the record?

Hon. Pierre De Bané: I would like it taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

The savings anticipated from the closing are as follows, allowing for a 4 per cent inflation rate:

General operations:	$30,784
Building and vehicle rental and maintenance:	91,416
Public utilities service:	72,800
Salaries of locally-engaged staff:	32,978
Overtime for Canada-based staff:	1,040
Capital:	57,200
TOTAL:	$286,218

These figures make no allowance for Canada-based staff who will be reassigned.

Discussions are presently under way between our officials, CIDA's and the Burkinabe government to determine how our aid programs might be adapted to make them easier to manage.

Managing them from hotel rooms has not been included among the possible solutions.

The other programs (consular, trade, et cetera) will be administered directly from our embassy in Abidjan.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

FEDERAL COURT DECISION

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the next delayed answer is to a question raised by Senator Thompson with respect to the Federal Court decision on the National Parole Board. I would ask him whether he would like the answer to that question read at this time or if he would prefer to have it taken as read?

Hon. Andrew Thompson: I would like it taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

The Solicitor General states:

At present, it is still too early to assess what impact the two Federal Court cases, rendered November 23, 1984, will have.

The National Parole Board is monitoring the situation in light of the judgments but does not expect that there will be delays in releasing inmates who have earned parole.

The Solicitor General is considering various administrative alternatives to assist the Board in meeting its responsibilities and will soon announce appointments to fill vacancies on the Board.

METRIC CONVERSION

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I come, finally, honourable senators, to the question posed by the Honourable Deputy Leader of the Opposition concerning metric conversion. I would ask him what he would like me to do with it.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): He would like it read.

Senator Roblin: In that event, I can tell him—luckily for the Senate—that this is the shortest answer of any of the group that I have today. In fact, it is the only one that is short.

Senator Frith: And it probably says, "We will tell you later."

Senator Roblin: This is the answer to my friend's question, and I want him to listen carefully as it is most enlightening. I have been informed that no decisions have yet been made on the future of metric conversion.

The matter is currently under review and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has been consulting and meeting with numerous associations and people to ensure the decision taken is one that is best for the Canadian people.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I can only hope that the questions asked by my colleagues receive answers that are a little more informative than that one.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I found the questions from other senators to be much more interesting and searching than the question asked by my honourable friend. I think that their answers will be much more satisfactory than the one just received by my honourable friend.

Senator Frith: I hope so.

REQUESTS FOR ANSWERS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I feel somewhat left out, because I have been waiting to receive answers from the Leader of the

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Government in the Senate to a number of questions I posed some time ago. I draw his attention, in particular, to several questions I asked on November 27 with respect to the guidelines on access to information. I will attempt to be patient, but the Leader of the Government in the Senate knows that there is an inquiry now before the chamber on the very subject of government secrecy, and information which may flow from my questions would govern what I might say in that particular debate.

I asked the Leader of the Government for information with respect to whether the guidelines applied to ministers' exempt staff. I asked a question with respect to what were the circumstances which would justify off-the-record background briefings. I also asked whether a group such as the body examining the expenditures of the CBC was subject to those same guidelines.

I would ask the government leader at this time when he might be able to answer those questions. I would accept very brief answers as long as they deal with the questions.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think I can tell my honourable friend at this time that I will do my best to procure for him not brief but proper answers to the questions he has asked. I am sure he understands that the answers I seek for the members of this chamber are placed by me and my staff with my colleagues in the other place and, while we do our best to expedite replies, we are not exactly in charge of the situation. We also have to recognize that some of these questions require some deliberation.

I think that, insofar as the government is concerned, we would be quite happy to have the resolution on secrecy, to which my honourable friend referred, remain on the Order Paper until such time as the questions are answered so that, if he wants to incorporate that into his speech, he will have had an opportunity to do so. By no means would we attempt to cut him off.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I do not mind if my questions are taken as being written as long as I receive answers.

On November 28, 1984, at page 214 of Debates of the Senate, I asked a question respecting the termination of NRC scientists and their leaving Canada and going to the United States. I think a prompt answer to that question should be given so that, if possible, we can keep those professionals in Canada, because once they go to the United States they are gone for good.

Honourable senators, I also asked a question of the Leader of the Government on December 5, at page 261 of Debates of the Senate, concerning car rental at the Winnipeg airport. I am sure you will recall that particular question. I bring this to your attention in the hope that you will have an answer for me soon.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I will try to oblige my honourable friend. He has raised a question respecting car rental desks at the Winnipeg airport. I can tell him that that subject was raised vigorously by Senator Argue not too long ago regarding the Saskatoon airport.

I suppose that honourable senators have read the reply given by the Minister of Transport in the other place on that question, in which he outlined the position in which he finds himself with respect to that. I will not repeat that answer unless honourable senators wish me to do so.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators,—

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, since I have given the delayed answers, I thought that Question Period was over for the day.

Senator Buckwold: This question relates to a delayed answer.

On November 20 I asked a question which, in the opinion of those involved in western agriculture, is important—that is, the future of Canada's grain trade with the People's Republic of China.

You will recall in my question I indicated that contracts which had been signed by that country with the United States had not been taken up, and that it was a matter of major concern that Canadian contracts along the same lines be honoured.

My question was: What is the situation? The response from the leader was that he would obtain information on that as soon as possible.

I would appreciate receiving that information because, at this time of the year, it is important for farmers to know what their seeding plans should be and what the general situation might be in the future.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend did raise a very important question, but I have to admit that I have answered it. The answer appears in Hansard. If we are talking about the same thing—that is, the China wheat situation—the answer was provided and is contained in Hansard.

If my honourable friend wants further information, I will try to obtain that for him.

Senator Buckwold: I apologize because I was not present last week and have not had an opportunity to read Hansard, but I will do so.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, my question is an easy one. Last week I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether he knew if the government discussion paper on family benefits was going to be introduced before Christmas and, if so, whether members of the Senate would have access to it. I wonder if there is any news on the date.

Senator Roblin: I can tell all honourable senators that all questions posed to me are in the hands of the officials of the departments concerned. I am doing my best to expedite replies.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I am sure that that is true, but I want to ask if Senator Roblin will try—because I think this is particularly timely—to follow up on the question I asked on November 27, which was: Is the Gould group appointed by the Minister of Communications working with the executive of the CBC to determine budget cuts, or is it working independently of the executive of the corporation?

The reason I say that he might do me the favour of asking his staff to follow up on that is that I believe a statement will be made by CBC officials on the question of budget cuts this afternoon. It would help the Senate and honourable senators to evaluate that if they knew exactly what the role and responsibility was of that group.

● (1440)

Senator Roblin: I will pursue my honourable friend's question with the same diligence as I pursue all the rest.

Senator Frith: I don't know whether that is good enough.

Senator Roblin: For you, it's good.

Senator MacEachen: With renewed diligence?

Senator Roblin: No, with the same diligence.

Senator Frith: The same old diligence.

PROPERTY QUALIFICATION OF SENATORS

RENEWAL

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the Clerk of the Senate informs me that many senators have not made their Declaration of Property Qualification, as prescribed under rule 114 of the Rules of the Senate. That rule reads as follows:

Within the first twenty sitting days of the first session of each Parliament, every senator shall make and file with the Clerk of the Senate a renewed Declaration of Property Qualification, in the form prescribed in the Fifth Schedule annexed to the British North America Act 1867, and immediately after the expiration of such period the Clerk of the Senate shall lay upon the Table of the Senate a list of the senators who have complied with this rule.

The book is on the Table and I urge honourable senators who have not done so to comply with this rule because the deadline is next week.

SALTFISH ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Marshall, seconded by the Honourable Senator Murray, for the second reading of the Bill C-6, intituled: "An Act to amend the Saltfish Act".—(Honourable Senator De Bané, P.C.).

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, the history of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation is well known. It was established by the Liberal government in 1970 to address the urgent problems related to saltfish, particularly in Newfoundland, Labrador and Quebec's lower north shore, which is the riding of Prime Minister Mulroney. Over the years the borrowing ceiling of that corporation has been increased. It started in 1970 with $10 million, went up to $30 million and now we are talking about $50 million. If we look at the record of that corporation, it is quite remarkable that it has managed to make a profit year after year with the sole exception of last year, and that was mainly due to the devaluation of currencies of the major buyers of saltfish.

As honourable senators may recall, a few years ago the Liberal government established a task force to study the problems of the Atlantic fisheries. One of the conclusions of that report was that, due to the very unique problems north of the Fiftieth Parallel, including the great northern peninsula of Newfoundland, Labrador and the north shore of Quebec, another corporation should be set up to act as a catalyst for the development of this area which is one of the poorest in Canada. That recommendation was accepted by the Trudeau government and $15 million was allocated for that purpose.

May I remind you of the wording of recommendations 14 and 15? No. 15 reads as follows:

Amend the Saltfish Act to allow the Canadian Saltfish Corporation to buy, process and market fish and fish products in addition to saltfish in that part of the Great Northern Peninsula of Newfoundland north of 50° and in Labrador and the Québec north shore of the Gulf. In particular, the Canadian Saltfish Corporation might purchase and operate plants such as the one it operated this summer at St. Anthony, though it would not have any monopoly on the purchase, processing or sale of uncured fish in this area.

Recommendation 14 reads as follows:

The governments of Canada, Québec and Newfoundland and Labrador should recognize the need for co-ordinated economic and social development initiatives in this area, and explore ways of jointly improving the socio-economic condition of the area. Federal co-ordinating responsibility would come under the purview of the Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development.

Honourable senators, I find it regrettable that in dealing with this bill we missed the opportunity to establish such a corporation as a subsidiary of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation which is already present in those areas. It already has an obligation under the law to purchase all saltfish that it is offered. It has no option to refuse to purchase all the saltfish or cured fish offered to it. I remind honourable senators that the former government not only accepted that recommendation but allocated $15 million to do it. Due to the fact that the legal mechanism does not exist as yet, that $15 million is not spent. I thought that the present government, with its huge majority in the House of Commons, would not miss this golden opportunity to amend the Saltfish Act to allow the establishment of that corporation.

I have some hesitation in divulging another point, but I asked myself why not. In the past few years the Canadian Saltfish Corporation has been illegally engaged in the buying and selling not of saltfish but of frozen fish. It has been doing it at the request of the private sector both in Newfoundland-Labrador and in northern Quebec. The private sector, for the past few years, has been asking the Canadian Saltfish Corporation to act as its marketing agent because of the good reputation the Saltfish Corporation has around the world. At the request of the private sector, that corporation has been buying and selling frozen fish around the world. As honourable senators know, that authority does not exist under the act passed in 1970.

When I was a minister, I thought that in view of the fact that that activity brought profitable revenues for the Canadian Saltfish Corporation and that it was done at the request of the private sector, it should continue, but with the clear intention of legalizing that situation at the first opportunity. Now we are at the beginning of a new session with the government having the largest majority in Canadian history but failing to act in order to help those Canadians, particularly those living north of the Fiftieth Parallel, who are among the poorest and some of whom are in the riding of the Prime Minister of Canada and also on the Newfoundland and Labrador side.

Honourable senators, I find it regrettable that that bill does not address the problems of recommendations 14 and 15 of the Kirby report. It does not address the question of the buying and selling of frozen fish. Therefore, I should like the Leader of the Government in the Senate and his deputy to take note of those recommendations. Hopefully, in the near future another bill will be introduced to take those suggestions into account.

● (1450)

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, there is just one matter I should like to comment upon. Senator De Bané pointed out that the Saltfish Corporation had been acting illegally for some years by selling frozen fish instead of saltfish. He regretted the fact that that was not cleared up in this bill.

As honourable senators know, I have been joint chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. When the former government ran into a situation like this, which was completely non-controversial, that committee urged them not to go through the normal parliamentary procedure by introducing a bill in the House of Commons, but rather to introduce the bill in the Senate. That bill could then be studied by a committee of the Senate and passed without undue delay. It could probably be passed by the House of Commons on a Friday afternoon. I do not excuse the former government for not having followed this suggested procedure. The Honourable Perrin Beatty mentioned it in committee and in a speech he gave in the House of Commons.

My purpose in speaking now is to point out to the present government that the same procedure is available to them, and I hope, in correcting omissions in bills of this type, they will use the Senate more often than governments have in the past.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I had not intended to make my maiden speech on this occasion, but I do so now because it would be impolite of me not to respond to the kind words of Senator Marshall on moving second reading of the bill, and Senator Thériault in replying. If I did not do so at this time, it would perhaps appear that I do not want to take responsibility for being the author of what someone considers an illegality which consisted of helping small processors, at their request, to use the marketing network of the Saltfish Corporation to help them through some difficult moments.

In this day and age, when the new theology is to question the usefulness of crown corporations, I think I would be remiss if I did not put on record a couple of facts. I happened to have inherited the fisheries crisis of 1974; and I was about to leave when the crisis of 1981 started to develop. During both cycles two organizations did not come out hat in hand begging for a handout. Those were the two crown corporations created with the co-operation, if not at the actual request, of provincial governments in an attempt to solve the problems of their own fishermen. I am referring to the Fresh Fish Marketing Board, with which I am sure the Deputy Leader of the Government is very familiar—in fact, I suspect he may have been involved in its creation—and the Saltfish Corporation. Both of these crown corporations, created to help fishermen, in fact provided very well for them in the days of the fisheries' crises. If my memory is accurate, I recall that in both cases these crown corporations, which, by law, must purchase all the acceptable fish brought to their counters, provided the fishermen with the exact marketing framework within which the industry was able to function.

I point this out because, under the previous Conservative government and under this one, "crown corporations" have suddenly become words held in some suspicion. I would hope that, in questioning the validity of other crown corporations, we would be very careful not to sabotage these two crown corporations which, over the years, have been extremely helpful to the fishermen of Canada. We have to worry much more about the fishermen than about those who, in fact, have caused some of their problems.

Although I support the bill, such as it is, I regret that it is incomplete. I inherited the corporation at a time when, at the request of the Government of Newfoundland, it was dealing in arctic char and herring, in some cases because no one else would. It was really as an act of solidarity that the corporation accepted the request of the Government of Newfoundland to help fishermen, particularly native peoples of the Labrador coast who had absolutely no buyers for their fish, particularly arctic char.

Later, when the small processors banded together, they had two choices: They could put their fish in the caboose of the selling train of the large corporations, which might or might not reach its destination because their products were always the last to be put on the market; or they could band together and use the Saltfish Corporation's marketing expertise, particularly that of the regretted Kyell Henriksen, to put fish in markets that they had not traditionally reached.

With all due respect to the lawyers in this chamber, it is for that reason that, caught between my sense of service to fishermen and small entrepreneurs and the legality of the matter, I opted for service to the fishermen.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I wish I had been aware of the suggestion made by Senator Godfrey because it might have been a good way of overcoming the difficulty of the overloaded pipeline called the House of Commons.

Honourable senators, I think Senator Marshall, were he to go back to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, would receive some support from that office, because I know the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and I think his heart is in the right place. If Senator Marshall could bring some good news to those isolated communities north of the 50th parallel, or those small processors who are at the mercy of the giants that we have encouraged in the restructuring, I think the fishermen whom he and other honourable senators in this chamber have served with distinction would be most grateful. I thank honourable senators for their attention.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Godfrey: Would the honourable senator accept a question? My question is: Does he believe, as a general rule, that, if the results are desirable, a minister of the crown is justified in deliberately and flagrantly breaking the law, or may he only do so to sell frozen fish?

Senator LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I do not want to get involved in any philosophical or legal debate. If I am being accused of the crime of helping fishermen, I plead guilty.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): There is a red herring in there somewhere.

Senator De Bané: Honourable senators, I should just like to point out to Senator Godfrey that I think he is optimistic in presuming that, by explicitly including frozen fish in the mandate of the Saltfish Corporation—which it has been doing for the last few years—it would be construed as a non-contentious amendment.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I did not want to interrupt my honourable friend in his comments, but surely they constitute a second intervention in the debate. If he wished to make the statement, he could probably have done so on third reading. However, I would not like it to go unnoted that this is an exception to our rule and one we would not like to endorse permanently.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform honourable senators that, if the Honourable Senator Marshall speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

• (1500)

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, when I moved second reading of Bill C-6, I indicated that I did so with some trepidation because, out of the corner of my eye, I was watching Senator LeBlanc and Senator De Bané. Honourable senators can understand why I was reluctant to speak authoritatively with two fisheries experts seated to my right. I must say that I did not realize that we also have in our midst an expert on the fisheries from Toronto.

Senator Godfrey: Just on the legality.

Senator Marshall: I realize that the honourable senator spoke on the legality, and I think that he may have had a good idea.

Having represented part of the district in Newfoundland to which both honourable senators have referred, I can readily state that they are correct in everything they said. Indeed, the amendment that was introduced in the other place by Mr. Rompkey received the sympathy of the minister. He indicated that, although the amendment was declared out of order, he was prepared to meet with Mr. Rompkey to discuss the changes that would achieve the objectives sought by both honourable senators.

This morning I was in touch with the minister's office and, as I indicated to Senator De Bané outside the chamber, I now have the assurance that, should honourable senators wish to meet with the minister on this particular point, he is ready to receive them at any time, whether they appear individually or as a group.

Honourable senators, I am pleased to say that, in the course of this short debate, we have justified my request of many years ago to focus more attention on the fisheries through the establishment of a special committee of the Senate. Although we do not have such a special committee, we do have the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry. I was hoping that both Senator De Bané and Senator LeBlanc would be members of that committee. I would even be willing to give up the chairmanship for one of those distinguished gentlemen.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Hon. William J. Petten: We accept!

Senator Marshall: I am intrigued by the idea put forward by Senator Godfrey. I can assure Senator De Bané that I will discuss with the minister the point he raised. The introduction of such a bill might be one of the first objectives of the Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry.

Honourable senators, I have replied to the various questions that arose in the course of this debate. I will again give the assurance that I will speak with the minister to determine the intentions of the government with respect to implementing the changes that will achieve our objectives.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

[Senator Marshall.]

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Walker, P.C., for the second reading of Bill C-7, intituled: "An Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes".—(Honourable Senator Kolber).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, when I last spoke to him, Senator Kolber said that he wished to speak on this today. He is not present in the chamber and it may be that he has been held up. I suggest that this order be stood to the end of the Orders of the Day in case he arrives in time to speak to it. If not, we can stand the order until tomorrow and I will get in touch with him in the meantime.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

THE CABINET

ACCESS TO INFORMATION—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Davey calling the attention of the Senate to the Government's preoccupation with secrecy.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I yield to Senator Steuart.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, I rise to speak on the inquiry into the present government's preoccupation with secrecy, which inquiry has been initiated in the Senate by Senator Davey.

This is a new government, elected with a massive majority. I believe, along with most Canadians, that it should be given a reasonable length of time to prove itself before being subjected to undue criticism. While I realize that all honourable senators on this side do not agree with me, I applaud the efforts of this government to reduce our national deficit. I may argue with the way the government goes about reducing the budget, but I am convinced that it must be done.

In this connection, I would point out that one of the most serious problems the Tory government is facing in trying to hold down government spending is its own record, both in opposition and on the hustings during the last election. In opposition the Conservatives urged and on the campaign trail they promised more government spending than any Liberal Party in the history of Canada. I raise this matter in the present debate because I am convinced that the Conservatives' own record of irresponsibility, both in opposition and during the campaign, is one reason they are trying to pull a cloak over government operations and the wool over the eyes of the Canadian public.

The members of the Conservative Party knew the truth about Canada's financial position when they were in opposition; they also knew the size of the deficit during the election campaign, yet they promised to spend money, like sailors on a drunken spree, from one end of Canada to the other.

Now they form the government. Instead of having the courage to admit their mistake, they have launched a campaign of secrecy—no information, misinformation and cover-up—to distract the public's attention from the truth. That is the reason we have launched this inquiry—to alert the people of Canada, right at the beginning, to exactly what the plan is.

There is the secrecy, coupled with what can only be called double-talk. Let us consider some examples. First, the Honourable Joe Clark put out a gag order on all of his officials. He not only forbade them to talk to the press, he went further and instructed them not even to talk about government programs at social gatherings. The press was outraged, so the Prime Minister launched his double-talk routine. He said that it was all a misunderstanding, and he announced a new set of guidelines which he claimed would prove his commitment to open government. In effect, these new guidelines say to every government employee: "Talk about government programs at your own peril."

Honourable senators, the Conservative Party announced open government and then sealed it up tighter than a drum.

There are other examples of double-talk that we could consider. The government announced that it intended to spend more on defence, after which it cut the defence budget. The government proclaimed from the rooftops that the universality of our social programs was a sacred trust, after which it told us that a means test may be brought in by the back door, through the income tax system—more double-talk, more misinformation. But the greatest piece of double-talk so far is the Tory promise of less government for Canadians. How did they handle that promise? Well we all know exactly what they did—they formed the largest cabinet in Canada's history, which meant an increase in the staff and in the budget of every cabinet minister. Honourable senators know that this is just the opposite of less government, but how does it jibe with the Tory promise of more open and accessible government? Each one of those new cabinet ministers has been given a chief of staff, all of them, I am told, hand-picked by the Prime Minister or his staff, and all paid extremely high salaries. What happens if you want to see a minister or get information from a minister? You will have to go through the chief of staff, and if he or she doesn't want you to see the minister or to give you the information, or if the Prime Minister wants to seal off that minister, you might as well go home and write a letter to the local press because you will get no satisfaction in Ottawa.

• (1510)

No doubt the government will say "Nonsense. It won't work that way." I hope they are right and that I am wrong; but I do know that they copied the idea from the Tory government of Saskatchewan, and that is exactly the way it works out there. In Saskatchewan, with the exception of Premier Devine and a few of his top ministers, the cabinet have about as much power as village councillors; and if the cabinet ministers in Ottawa are not careful, they will find themselves in the same boat.

Honourable senators, when it comes to patronage, this Tory government has outshone itself in the use of secrecy, no information and misinformation. The story of Conservative patronage goes back to the fateful day when the Joe Clark government was defeated in 1980. We all know that Joe Clark left on his desk hundreds of appointments unsigned, unsealed and undelivered. Just imagine, hundreds of faithful Tories, Tories who had laboured in the Conservative vineyard for years, waiting patiently for their reward and suddenly it is all snatched away from them—all those Senate positions, judgeships, appointments to the Harbour Board, the Pension Board, and so on—even as census takers—gone in the twinkling of an eye.

But, honourable senators, what was even more galling to Conservatives was the fact that those awful Grits, those terrible Liberals, once more walked off with the goodies. Some Conservatives, I will admit—those were the older ones who had already been rewarded—said that it was an act of great statesmanship on the part of Joe Clark. Others, mostly the losers, said it was an act of political stupidity. There was one man who quietly agreed with them. That was Brian Mulroney. He used his great network in the Conservative Party to urge those frustrated office-holders to get to Winnipeg and vote for a leadership review, and then to get to Ottawa and vote for a new leader. They did that, and he became the new Conservative leader. Make no mistake, one reason why Brian Mulroney became the Tory leader and the Prime Minister of Canada is that he promised to look after the faithful.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Hear, hear.

Senator Steuart: The Deputy Leader of the Government says "Hear, hear". I say wait, wait, he will do it. He made no bones about the fact that he believed in patronage. When asked on one occasion whether he would ever hire a Liberal, he replied to the effect "Only if no Tory is alive to take the job."

During the election campaign patronage became an issue and Mr. Mulroney showed his great skill at secrecy and double-talk. Overnight he became a born-again statesman. He announced publicly that he was sorry he had ever said a good word about patronage. He even apologized to the voters and promised never to indulge in patronage if he became Prime Minister. I can tell honourable senators that a mild shudder went through the Tory ranks. But by this time they knew that Brian could be counted on to do the right thing when the time came—

Senator Doody: Hear, hear.

Senator Steuart: —and I predict that he will. The Deputy Leader of the Government says "Hear, hear." I will admit that he started off rather slowly, very cute and with lots of double-talk. Let us start with his most famous appointment, namely, that of Stephen Lewis as Canada's Ambassador to the United Nations.

On the surface it appeared to be a clever appointment, because not only is Stephen Lewis a member of the New Democratic Party, but he has very little regard either for Canada's Prime Minister or for Ronald Reagan, the President of the United States. That was made crystal clear in an article written by Lewis which appeared in Maclean's on October 8, 1984, just three days before his appointment as Ambassador to the United Nations. I propose to read one or two lines of the article to illustrate my point. In reference to the Prime Minister's visit to meet President Reagan in Washington, Mr. Lewis wrote:

Some observers have spoken disparagingly about the trip to Washington. They say that Mulroney acted with indecent haste, grovelling reverentially to the White House. Others are faintly euphoric, arguing that the restoration of continental unity is once again in sight. For my own part, I think that both views are right, and the implications are not pleasing.

Two days later Brian recognized what an outstanding man Stephen Lewis was and appointed him Ambassador to the United Nations. In the same article Lewis refers contemptuously to American foreign policy.

Honourable senators, I am convinced that the appointment was masterminded by Premier Davis of Ontario to pay off Lewis for keeping him in power; at the same time, it was done in an effort to make the Prime Minister look independent and non-partisan. I predict that if Mr. Lewis screws up his courage and lives up to the great hopes that the NDP once had for him, he will prove to be a loose cannon and the Conservatives may regret that appointment.

However, the American government must be somewhat baffled by this double-talk from our Tory government, on the one hand claiming new friendship and on the other appointing a well known anti-American to a high profile post such as Canadian Ambassador to the United Nations.

The Prime Minister then appointed Lloyd Francis to Portugal, to touch base with the Liberals, and then the field was open to look after the faithful Tories. So the patronage appointments are beginning—a few lawyers here, a few loyalists there—and still the Prime Minister denies that he was indulging, or will indulge, in this terrible practice of patronage.

Honourable senators, he even denied that the appointment of Jean Pigott as Chairman of the National Capital Commission was political.

An Hon. Senator: She is a great lady.

Senator Steuart: For those honourable senators who might not know, Jean Pigott is a former Conservative MP.

Senator Frith: He probably didn't know that.

Senator Steuart: She was the person whom Joe Clark brought in to decide who should get the political appointments during his short term in office. I believe she had an office in the Langevin Block and administered Tory blood tests to hopeful applicants; and I can tell honourable senators that if it wasn't true Tory blue, one took a walk. Let me be very clear: Jean Pigott will probably make an excellent NCC Chairman.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Steuart: But if that was not a political appointment, then neither were any of ours in this chamber.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Mine wasn't.

Senator Doody: Desperation.

Senator Steuart: The Deputy Leader of the Government says that his was not a political appointment.

Senator Doody: I didn't say that.

Senator Steuart: I heard someone say it. Apparently it was Senator Nurgitz. Senator, I understand that your political work was so awful that many people in Manitoba did not think it was a political appointment either. Of course, they could have been wrong, and I certainly do not subscribe to that. I believe we won one election when you were there.

Honourable senators, there is one more rather ugly little development that has taken place since the Tories came to office, and that is the so-called research into former Liberal cabinet ministers. First it was Lloyd Axworthy, and then John Turner; and, from what we hear, this muck-raking will be an ongoing spectacle. The Tories are being very sanctimonious about all this, claiming that if the Liberals have nothing to hide, they have nothing to fear.

I agree that if anyone has done anything wrong, then there should be an independent investigation with an opportunity for the accused to respond to all of the facts and question all of the so-called researchers. But these hatchet jobs are not being carried out by independent people in full public view. It is all very secret until the results are handed to the press. I suspect that those so-called researchers are a gang of Tory hacks engaged in a little fancy rewriting of Canadian history.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Steuart: Recently I re-read George Orwell's very chilling novel entitled Nineteen Eighty-Four and something struck a vein. He is the man who made famous the words "Newspeak", "Doublethink" and "Big Brother". He also told the story of the government that continually re-wrote its own history. When Senator Davey spoke on this motion, he suggested that some of the secrecy and doubletalk of our new government might be an attempt to imitate the Reagan administration. I am not sure whether Brian Mulroney is attempting to imitate the President of the United States or anyone else or whether he is trying to be himself. I only know that, so far, some of his actions and those of his government are disturbing, and I hope they change. The Conservatives have been given a great mandate. They face tremendous challenges and they have enough able people in their caucus from every part of Canada to get on with their job of governing the nation in the open and above board manner they promised during the election.

● (1520)

Hon. Lowell Murray: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Steuart: I would be delighted to.

Senator Murray: Actually, I have two questions. The first one is with regard to the question of patronage appointments. Does the honourable senator think that a more useful precedent was the one which attended the transfer of power from Mr. Trudeau to Mr. Turner, in which Mr. Trudeau was apparently not willing to accept a handshake from Mr. Turner and insisted that he sign a document agreeing to look after Mr. Trudeau's patronage appointments? The second question is with regard to government secrecy. Would the honourable senator agree that the ultimate policy on government secrecy was the passage by the previous government of an Order in Council making it an offence for anybody to discuss the uranium cartel, which was itself an action of dubious legality?

Senator Steuart: On the first question, I refer the honourable senator to the appointments that the Right Honourable Joe Clark left on his desk and the appointments the Right Honourable John Turner took over. I am sure that, politically, the appointments Mr. Clark left on his desk constituted just as big a disaster for him as what Mr. Turner faced. So I suspect, although I have had no information on this matter from either of them, that if they both had it to do over again they would both act a little differently. What I resent about the Conservatives is this holier-than-thou, sanctimonious attitude promulgated by Brian Mulroney, that they do not believe in patronage. He would not be an Irishman if he did not believe in patronage. We would turf him out of the clan. Honourable senators need only sit back and watch the patronage roll out.

As to the honourable senator's other question, nobody ever said the Liberals were perfect.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Come on, did you clear that with Senator Frith?

Senator Frith: I have to admit it.

Senator Steuart: As a matter of fact, quite a few Liberals said just a couple of months ago that they were imperfect. We were not the ones who went to the people with this policy of no secrets and open government and then changed our minds the day after we got into power. I do not think either example, the example of the Conservatives in their very short term in office or the example set by the uranium cartel, are very good ones to hold up to the public of Canada. All I am trying to do is to save your hides, and if you keep acting this way you will go down the hill an awful lot quicker than the Liberals, who have lasted an awful lot longer than the Conservatives in the history of this country.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Steuart: Any more questions?

Senator Roblin: You have too many answers for me, Davey. On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

THE ESTIMATES

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B)—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Consideration of the Second Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, presented in the Senate on 6th December, 1984.—(Honourable Senator Leblanc (Saurel)).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we are awaiting Senator Leblanc's report on supplementary estimates (B). It will be difficult to carry on the next order of business concerning the Appropriations Bill unless we get that report first. Perhaps we could stand this order until later today to see whether Senator Leblanc returns. If he does not return, then we will have to stand it until tomorrow. Perhaps somebody could determine whether he is in the building or whether he is coming to the chamber.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Agreed.

Order stands.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE TO STUDY CANADIAN RELATIONS WITH COUNTRIES OF THE MIDDLE EAST AND NORTH AFRICA—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hicks:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs be authorized to continue its examination and report on Canadian relations with countries of the Middle East and North Africa;

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination and consideration of such legislation and other matters as may be referred to it, at such rates of remuneration and reimbursement as the Committee may determine, and to compensate witnesses, by reimbursement of travelling and living expenses, if required, in such amount as the Committee may determine;

That the Committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate; and

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject during the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the Committee.—(Honourable Senator Grafstein).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Stand.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I think it is unfortunate that this order has stood continuously for over a week now, and we are into our second week. It will prevent this committee from being reconstituted and getting its staff to work before the end of the year, hence delaying our report—which may not be so timely in two months as it would be today—until the end of January. So I inform honourable senators that in the fairly near future I shall oppose the motion to stand this order.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, this order stands in the name of Senator Grafstein. He was abroad last week, and when I spoke to him yesterday he informed me that he intended to deal with the matter today. However, he phoned back to say that he would not be able to be here this week but undertakes to dispose of it next Tuesday. So, on his behalf, I simply put this explanation on the record.

Order stands.

YOUTH

SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE APPOINTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Hébert, seconded by the Honourable Senator Rousseau:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to examine, consider and make recommendations on the problems and issues facing Canadian youth between 15 and 24 years of age;

That 12 Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the Special Committee;

That the Committee have power to report from time to time, to send for persons, papers and records, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada;

That the Committee, have power to retain the services of professional, clerical and stenographic staff as deemed advisable by the Committee; and

That the Committee present its report no later than October 1, 1985.—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Stand.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I regret to say that we will have to ask for a vote on the motion to stand this order. I advised Senator Doody that we on this side feel that we should proceed with this motion today, one way or another, and that I would inform him as soon as I knew that honourable senators on this side were firm in that position. I must say that I regret very much taking the position of opposing the motion to stand an order. We would much prefer to simply finish the debate on the motion and vote on it. But, under the circumstances, the position taken by honourable senators on this side of the chamber leaves me no alternative but to ask for a vote on whether this order should be stood.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I wonder if I may speak to the point of order, if, indeed, it is a point of order; namely, that the motion to stand this order should be refused. I think it is appropriate to remind honourable senators that in the six years I have been here, I cannot recall the refusal of a request to stand an order.

Hon. Hazen Argue: I have been refused. It was not within the last six years, but I have been refused.

Senator Roblin: If they refused my honourable friend I would have supported him at the time, had he felt indignant. However, in the six years I have been here I have never known a request for an order to stand to be refused. In fact, just this afternoon we entertained a whole group of requests for orders to stand and these requests were granted by the Senate, including the order in the case raised by the Honourable Senator Hicks when he expressed some serious concerns and voiced his opposition to the request to stand the order on that particular resolution. I can say that had the motion to stand that order come to a vote this afternoon, I would have opposed Senator Hicks, although I recognize the force of his argument. I would have thought that as Senator Grafstein has a very particular interest in the matter at issue, it would be a mistake for us to decline to hear him, even though he has not been here to speak for himself for the past couple of weeks. I say to honourable senators that there is a reason why those of us on this side would like to have a further postponement of the debate, or the vote, on this issue. We are not opposed to any other honourable senator taking part in the debate; but we would not care to have it come to a vote this afternoon for what we believe to be good and sufficient reasons.

● (1530)

Senator Frith: When would you like it to come?

Senator Roblin: I think by next Tuesday we would be able to deal with it without any problem.

I draw to the attention of the house that this is not the first time this particular motion has been before us. It was before us last spring. As a matter of fact, it was introduced on February 23 last by the same senator who proposed it on this occasion. It was debated for some 40 days. During that 40 days the motion was stood on several occasions and, if my memory does not play me false, it was stood by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition during that 40-day period. Other honourable senators spoke on the matter; I would not like to blame my honourable friend for the fact that it took some 40 days. The fact is that it required that length of time in order to marshal the expression of the feelings of both the opposition and the government on that occasion.

We are by no means asking that it receive the same extended treatment on this occasion. We do not think it is unreasonable for us to suggest that the adjournment be granted; it is not being asked in an obstructive way. It is not being asked because we do not wish to deal with it at the appropriate moment; it is being asked for a specific reason. I do not feel inclined to disclose that reason at the present time, although I might have to. I do not really think I should be asked to do so since I do not think it fitting to ask honourable senators why they wish to adjourn debates in the house. They have their reasons.

Although the Deputy Leader of the Opposition is impatient, as is the mover of the motion, I do not object to that. That is a natural and human reaction. They do not want to see the issue dragged out this time as long as it was dragged out the last time. I am with my honourable friends on that point; but I do think we should be allowed to have the adjournment today. My honourable friend who sits beside me, and those of us who are on this side of the chamber, will be disposed to deal with the matter, and to complete it, if that is the wish of the chamber, on Tuesday next. However, I do not think we should be asked to accept a denial of the adjournment this afternoon.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, it is not clear to me why the Honourable the Leader of the Government thinks that in a debate on this question he should not disclose the reasons why he wishes an adjournment. If he has valid reasons then why does he hesitate in giving them?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I have never known of a member of this chamber being asked to say why he wanted an adjournment.

Senator Frith: I just did it with Senator Grafstein's. We often do it.

Senator Roblin: I do not feel it is incumbent upon me to state the reason. The reason will be evident in due course. There is a reason, I am not making that up. I ask my honourable friend opposite to be patient enough to watch the matter unfold.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to stand this order?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, as the word "stand" is tantamount to a motion for a further adjournment of the debate, I therefore put the question as follows: Those in favour of Honourable Senator Doody's motion for the further adjournment of the debate will please say "yea".

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Those honourable senators who are against the motion please say "nay".

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: In my opinion, the "nays" have it. However, I have bad hearing.

Senator Frith: It is on the decibel basis.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, therefore the request is that we continue the debate.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Call in the members! I do not believe there were as many "yeas" as "nays". I am asking that the members be called in. If anybody wishes to join with me, then let them join with me.

Senator Roblin: I am not joining my honourable friend. I am simply saying that I can count. I know that 70 beats 21 any day of the week.

Senator Steuart: I am not sure you can offset yourself against me.

Senator Roblin: I see. If members want a recorded vote, then who am I to stand in their way?

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. The procedure is new to me and I will be quite frank and honest as my conscience dictates. If I understand the Leader of the Government in the Senate, he is saying that he wants an adjournment of the order until Tuesday and that he is prepared to dispose of the matter then. That is what I want to know.

Senator Doody: That is right.

Senator Thériault: If the Leader of the Government is prepared to dispose of the matter on Tuesday, then I support his position.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I can tell my honourable friend that that was my undertaking. That is to say, we would dispose of the matter on Tuesday. I stick to that statement.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of order. It seems to me that the motion for the adjournment of the debate has been put and voted upon. That has been dealt with. I think we can now continue the debate or have the main question.

Senator Steuart: Honourable senators, surely we can rise and ask for a recorded vote.

Senator Godfrey: It takes more than one person to do it, too.

Senator Steuart: Someone else might stand up if I stand here long enough. You want to be on the safe side of the law, don't you? I suggest we have a recorded vote.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, as Senator Steuart asked for a recorded vote, I did not believe that the motion had been dealt with. At about the time the Acting Speaker said that he thought the "nays" had it, Senator Steuart rose to ask for a recorded vote. I then rose because I wanted to have clarified for me the position taken by the Leader of the Government. My position was simple. If it were simply an adjournment for the sake of an adjournment then I would not support the position of the Leader of the Government. However, if he is prepared to give his word that he will dispose of this matter on Tuesday then I support him.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to vote on the motion?

Senator Roblin: Call in the senators.

And two honourable senators having risen:

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Please call in the senators.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 3, 1984-85

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-16, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1985.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-16, before us today, is the Appropriation Bill No. 3, 1984-85. It provides for the release of the whole of the supplementary estimates (B) with which the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has dealt and on which Senator Leblanc reported earlier.

Honourable senators, the amount for 1984-85 for supplementary estimates (B) is $6.2 billion. The new spending authority requested by this bill is just over $2.1 billion, the difference representing statutory items of $4 billion.

These estimates were tabled in the Senate on November 13, 1984, and referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on November 20. The estimates were discussed by the National Finance committee with Treasury Board officials on November 29, 1984, and that committee presented its report on December 6, 1984.

The total amount of the estimates tabled for the statutory year is $103,019,207,641, of which, the supplementary estimates (B), which is the third set of estimates, amount to $6.199 billion.

If honourable senators have any questions on any part of this appropriation bill, I will try to answer them at this time or, if I cannot do so, I will certainly make every attempt to get the answers for honourable senators.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Walker, P.C., for the second reading of the Bill C-7, intituled: "An Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes".—(Honourable Senator Kolber).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have been informed that, for whatever reason, Senator Kolber was in New York yesterday. Senator Sinclair, who left there yesterday evening, tells me that there was a heavy fog over the airport this morning, which probably explains Senator Kolber's absence.

I would suggest that the order stand in his name until tomorrow when Senator Kolber can make his intervention.

Order stands.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF CLAUSES OF CERTAIN BILLS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John M. Godfrey, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, November 28, 1984, moved:

That the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be authorized to examine the subject-matter of clauses of Bills introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons, where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, infringe upon the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House thereof and to invite them to join with this House in the aforementioned action.

● (1620)

He said: Honourable senators, I could not help but be slightly amused by the proceedings which occurred earlier today on another motion. Someone pointed out that it had taken 40 days to reach that particular stage. This motion of mine has been two-and-a-half years in the making.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): That is not our fault.

Senator Godfrey: I moved the original motion after the Constitutional amendments and it has already been debated. I once delivered a speech of one-and-a-half hours' duration on the subject of the interest the Senate ought to take in human rights. I adjourned that debate.

I do not intend to go through all of the arguments that have been presented before. I will simply state that the main opposition to this motion was put forward by the bureaucracy in the Department of Justice. The attitude there was that it was the duty of that department to examine bills to see whether or not they infringe upon the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It was the view of that department that additional scrutiny of bills was not necessary and that it would be a nuisance if the legislative body got involved in it.

I am the Joint Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. One of the original criteria of that committee was to ensure that regulations did not infringe upon the old Bill of Rights, even though the Justice department also had the same responsibility. In my view, both the legislative branch and the Department of Justice should perform this function. Members of that department seemed to have it fixed in their minds that the committee wanted to make decisions as to whether or not an act did infringe upon the Charter. That was never the original intention. It has been pointed out that the only thing we wanted to do was to alert whatever committee was examining a bill of the possibility—just the possibility—of such an infringement so that it would not be overlooked. Having alerted that specific committee, it would be left to make the appropriate decision.

We are generalists in the Senate. No one really has the time to go through a bill with a fine tooth comb. The Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, however, happens to have two full-time legal counsel who could do so.

Honourable senators, although I am quite sure that the government would never deliberately propose a bill which infringed upon the Charter of Rights, mistakes could happen. Usually they happen through oversight.

I should mention the reasons behind one of the delays in dealing with this matter. I was told by the Minister of Justice and the powers that be that the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs would probably be a more acceptable body to assume this function. I spoke to Senator Neiman, the chairman of that committee, who was very enthusiastic about the idea. She gave notice of motion in this regard but never actually moved that motion. It stood on the Order Paper for nine months until the session ended. She seemed to lose interest, so there was no point in proposing that that committee consider matters of this kind.

I am not speaking to this motion as the continuing Joint Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. Senator Nurgitz will be taking my place and I am just helping him out, giving him more to do.

I will close by saying that I hope we can finally resolve this matter this afternoon. It has been debated ad nauseum and it has been under consideration for two-and-a-half years.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): If no other honourable senator wishes to speak, I will move the adjournment of the debate—then I will stand it for a few weeks!

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF CLAUSES OF CERTAIN BILLS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John M. Godfrey, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, November 28, 1984, moved:

That the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be authorized to examine the subject-matter of clauses of Bills introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons, where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, bestow powers to make regulations upon a person or a rule-making authority which is couched in unnecessarily wide terms and contains the powers set forth in Paragraph 2 of Part 9 of the Cabinet directive on the preparation of legislation approved on 16th April, 1981, the said Part 9 reading in part as follows:

“9. REGULATIONS

In the preparation of proposals for legislation, departments and agencies should observe the following principles respecting regulation-making powers:

- (1) When bestowing the power to make regulations upon a person or a rule-making authority, care must be taken to ensure that the statute is not couched in unnecessarily wide terms.
- (2) Specifically, certain powers are not to be granted unless the Memorandum to the Cabinet requesting the authority for preparation of the legislation by which such a power would be conferred specifically requests authority for the power and contains reasons justifying the power that is sought. These powers include the following:
  - (a) power to make regulations that might substantially affect personal rights and liberties;
  - (b) power to make regulations involving important matters of policy or principle;
  - (c) power to amend or add to the enabling Act or other Acts by way of regulation;
  - (d) power to make regulations excluding the ordinary jurisdiction of the Courts;
  - (e) power to make specific regulations having a retrospective effect;
  - (f) power to subdelegate regulation-making authority;
  - (g) power by regulation to impose a charge on the public revenue or on the public other than fees for services;

[Senator Godfrey.]

(h) power to fix by regulation, rather than by the statute itself, the penalties for breach of a regulation.”;

and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House thereof and to invite them to join with this House in the aforementioned action.

He said: Honourable senators, this is another two-and-a-half year old motion.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Congratulations!

Senator Godfrey: I make great progress around here.

I should point out that, again, the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments only wishes to alert other committees which are actually considering certain bills so that nothing in those bills will be overlooked. By way of example, I will remind honourable senators of an oversight concerning enabling clauses of bills. The specific instance that I will refer to concerns four tax treaty bills which were considered by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce and were passed by both the Senate and the House of Commons—all of which occurred without anyone noticing that those bills contained powers of disallowance that were completely unacceptable, for reasons I will not go into, and another power whereby, through regulation, taxes could be increased. Those oversights occurred because the members of the Banking, Trade and Commerce committee did not have anyone specifically looking at or considering the enabling clauses. The counsel of the Regulations Committee happened to look at the fifth one and saw that objectionable enabling power. It was drawn to my attention and I drew it to the attention of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, with the result that there was an amendment to the fifth bill that came through. It was not entirely satisfactory, but I will not go into the history of that. When the sixth one came along containing the same objectionable clause, and we objected, the government withdrew the bill. So it shows in a practical way how things can be overlooked.

● (1630)

My motion was originally in the form of a direction of the Minister of Justice in 1971. It was forwarded to cabinet in exactly the same wording and it was then approved as a cabinet document in 1981.

All I am saying is that there may be very good and valid reasons why these specific powers that are objected to should be contained in a bill. The resolution and the cabinet directive provides that if they are included, there must be reasons given to the cabinet as to why they are included. There may be perfectly valid reasons. All I am saying, in effect, is that if they are noticed in a bill, the government should give the same reasons to the committee that is considering the bill so that it can decide whether or not they are valid.

Again the Regulations committee really becomes involved in these matters and draws attention to them because it has a permanent staff of two lawyers. I should like to read something to honourable senators concerning the importance of enabling clauses of bills. I refer to the report of the Commonwealth Conference of Delegated Legislation Committees that was held in Canberra, Australia, in September, 1980. This question was discussed, and the report reads as follows:

Many delegates reported that problems they encountered with delegated legislation were found, upon examination, to have sprung from the parent statute. It was emphasised repeatedly that there is a need for closer control over delegated legislation at its source, that is, in the regulation-making clauses in bills which are passed by the parliaments. Some committees undertake the scrutiny of the empowering clauses in bills, and delegates from those committees stressed the importance of this work.

In other words, some committees were doing exactly what I am proposing in my resolution.

The report of the Second Commonwealth Conference on Delegated Legislation, which was held in Ottawa in April, 1983, includes the following:

Governments come very easily to regard statutes as convenient vehicles for the conferring of powers on the executive. Far too often, it seems, remarkable administrative or discretionary powers are contained in Bills which also very often seek to confer delegated law-making powers which the experience of scrutiny committees suggests will be troublesome, lend themselves to the making of unfortunate subordinate laws and be used to by-pass Parliament. Parliamentarians have every cause to be troubled by broad or vague enabling powers. Indeed, the construction and interpretation of enabling powers in Bills is a subject which lies at the heart of any effective parliamentary control of delegated legislation. Parliament must see to it that it understands and approves the precise powers to make delegated legislation granted to the executive. Too often the enabling powers in Bills are passed without examination.

That report refers not only to the Canadian situation, but to the situation that exists generally throughout the Commonwealth. All I am saying is: If we pass this motion, then the committees not only of the Senate but also of the House of Commons will be able to function more efficiently because they will not overlook enabling clauses which may either be improper or should not be granted. I hope that after two and a half years we will be able to resolve this matter—please.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

TRANSPORT

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMITTEE TO STUDY POLICY ON CAR RENTAL OUTLETS AT AIRPORTS

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, December 18, 1984, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications be authorized to examine and report upon the policy of the Department of Transport regarding car rental outlets at airports, more particularly its refusal to open up competition to increase the number of car rental outlets; the effect of restricting the major share of business to multinational companies; the adverse effect on jobs in Canadian companies and; the advantages to the travelling public of greater competition.

VISITORS IN GALLERY

KATIMAVIK PARTICIPANTS

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, with your permission I should like to call your attention to the presence in the gallery of a group of 40 Katimavik participants, who are accompanied by members of the board of directors of that non-governmental agency which is funded by the Secretary of State.

[English]

These are 40 young Canadians of a group of 5,000 from every province and territory of our country who are serving as volunteers in community projects in Hawkesbury, Vanier, Ottawa and Farnham. After three months they will go to work in communities in another province for a further three months. Finally, they will work in a third province for the last three months of the program.

I wish to tell honourable senators that, together, these young people are building the future of our country.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INVESTMENT CANADA

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. The new agency, Investment Canada, is apparently not going to review all direct acquisitions of Canadian business which have assets of less than $5 million. Given that these businesses provide the bulk of the jobs in Canada and given that this would make it possible for American businesses, for instance, with dollars worth 30 per cent more than ours, to acquire these smaller businesses, what protection is the government offering against the acquisition of these businesses by foreign interests? Why is the government only concerned with protection against acquisition of big businesses by foreign interests?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the honourable senator who has asked the question really wants me to get into a debate with him on the proposed Canada Investment Act. I think that would be inappropriate at this moment. In due course, the Investment Canada legislation will come to this chamber and it will then be appropriate, I think, to discuss the points raised by my honourable friend. I am sure that at that time some of us will be happy to discuss those points with him.

Senator Everett: Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate not agree that the points I have just put on record are, in fact, accurate?

Senator Roblin: I do not think it would be safe for me to agree with any statement of opinion made by my honourable friend on the topic.

PUBLIC WORKS

UNITED STATES EMBASSY PROPERTY—POSSIBLE ACQUISITION BY GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Several years ago, when that historic landmark known as the Rideau Club burned down, there was considerable discussion or, at any rate, there were rumours that the Government of Canada planned to acquire the property next door which we have known as the United States Embassy.

I wonder if the Leader of the Government can tell us whether there are any proceedings or negotiations under way with respect to the acquisition of that property, and, if so, at what stage those negotiations are currently.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Having perused the report of the Auditor General on the manner in which the previous Government of Canada dealt with matters of real estate, I think that perhaps this is a rather sensitive question. However, I shall take it as notice and see whether I can obtain any information for my honourable friend.

INVESTMENT CANADA

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate which is really supplementary to the question asked by Senator Everett. I do this because the answer that was given to Senator Everett—or rather, the non-answer—really bothers me. The reasoning for not answering the question bothers me even more.

I presume that in the course of time, the Canada Investment Bill will come to the Senate having already been passed by the House of Commons. The question asked by my honourable colleague from Manitoba is a very important one. It would seem to me that, at least, the Leader of the Government in the Senate should have said that he would bring to the attention of the government the concern of my colleague, in order that something might be done about that very important matter before the bill reaches this place.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend has correctly described the passage of bills through both chambers of this Parliament. However, I do not think that that procedure involves me in any necessity to try to amend government legislation, which is now before the House of Commons, by virtue of a message from the Senate. If the Senate wishes to amend that legislation, the Senate can think about it when it gets here.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Just think about it?

Senator Roblin: Perhaps try something else, then.

Senator MacEachen: Perhaps amend?

UNITED AUTO WORKERS UNION—PROPOSED INDEPENDENCE OF CANADIAN SECTION

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, at about the same time as the government was announcing the changes in FIRA and our Prime Minister was down in New York testing the waters and opening up Canada for investment and take-overs, Bob White, of the United Auto Workers, had gone down to the United States to request of the parent union more independence and autonomy for the Canadian members within that union. He was turned down by the heads of that union in the United States and has now said that perhaps the only recourse is to have an independent Canadian union. I understand that subsequently the Prime Minister said that he supported that intent and that he was happy that this was happening.

At about the same time, General Motors threatened that if this move towards more independence for the Canadian branch of the United Auto Workers goes ahead, General Motors may have to reconsider its current and future investment in Canada.

My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is: What action, if any, does the government intend to take to protect the members of the United Auto Workers Union in Canada from this threat by General Motors?

• (1410)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I really do not think it would be proper for the government, at this stage of the development of events, to place itself in a position where it is instructing either the union or the company with respect to government policy on this question. I must say that I have considerable confidence in the good judgment and common sense of Mr. Robert White, who leads the Canadian section of the automobile union. He can read newspapers as well as anyone else—

Hon. Ian Sinclair: I wonder if you have.

Senator Roblin: Yes, I have.

Senator Sinclair: That's a big surprise.

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend has another opinion, of course he will deliver it to us one of these days.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: For what it's worth.

Senator Roblin: As far as I am concerned, I think we have to expect that those who are the actors in this drama will conduct themselves with circumspection and good judgment in respect of this matter so that the interests of the Canadian economy and the Canadian workers are not damaged.

Senator Steuart: My problem is not one of not having confidence in Mr. Bob White and the action he has taken; my problem is one of having confidence in the actions of General Motors.

Would the leader not concede and advise his government that this is the other side of the coin, this is the other face, of inviting American take-overs? Here is a Canadian union taking its independence, moving to protect its sovereignty and immediately receiving from the Americans the following reaction: If you do this, you will suffer.

It is not the union in which I have no confidence, it is General Motors. We have seen too many closures of flour mills, and so on, in your part of the country and in my part of the country, that were owned by Americans. They shifted the plants and the jobs to the United States. I think that the government should be worried about this. At the same time as they are welcoming Americans to come in and take over Canadian industries, I think there should be some protection for our workers. Again I ask: Does the government intend to take any steps to try to avert this?

Senator Roblin: I am not here to speak for General Motors, either.

Senator Steuart: Just the government.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend seems to be concerned about General Motors, so I simply speak to him in the terms in which he raised the issue. I would expect General Motors to operate as good, corporate citizens in this country, and I do not expect that a preliminary skirmish with respect to trade union negotiations will alter that situation.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

FUNDING—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate and is prompted by the announcement made yesterday by the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

By way of explanatory remarks, I would draw to the attention of honourable senators that the budget of the CBC, expressed in constant dollars, has decreased by 4 per cent since fiscal year 1978-79, and that as a result of the $85 million cut by the government there will be a dramatic decline in funding for public broadcasting in the fiscal year commencing April 1, 1985, not to mention the elimination of 1,150 positions in the corporation.

In addition, in the announcement made by the president of the CBC we heard that new Canadian programs will not be produced to replace U.S. programs. Without going on at great length, there are a number of things happening within the corporation which mean that it will be a less effective tool for reflecting Canadian culture to all of Canada.

My question is: Can the Leader of the Government advise us whether the government has established a policy with respect to the level of funding for the next five years, and if it has not, when may it do so?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The point raised by my honourable friend is an interesting one. I can inform him that the CBC was to have received a 5 per cent increase, in constant dollars, for five years, commencing in 1977, under an agreement between the CBC president and the cabinet. That agreement was not put into effect, and in fact the CBC's budget was cut by $71 million in 1978, the year after the agreement was reached.

So, if I am to go on precedents, these five-year undertakings on the part of the previous administration did not amount to much. As to the situation we face today, I think that the cut of $75 million, which is an interesting comparison to the $71 million that was cut off in 1978 when dollars were worth a lot more, is an interesting factor to take into account. I am pleased to say that the president of the CBC has made it quite clear that he has made the majority of his cuts in areas of overhead and not in the area of programs or the area of regional outreach or coverage of that sort for which the CBC is responsible. As budgets are produced in this country on a year-to-year basis, I think it is the policy of the present administration to continue that, and a budgetary allowance will be made in the next fiscal year which, we trust, will be adequate for the needs of the CBC.

Senator Hays: My supplementary then is to ask the Leader of the Government if I understand correctly that there will be no effort on the part of this government to let the CBC know what its level of funding will be for a specified period of time, five years being the usual period for planning such things.

Senator Roblin: I do not think that my honourable friend is entitled to make that assumption. It may prove to be true or untrue. The plain fact is that in most circumstances this government, as is the case with most others, makes its appropriations on an annual basis. There is a school of thought that it should be done otherwise, but that is not the case at the present time.

MANDATE—PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE STUDY

Hon. Dan Hays: My second question relates to statements that I have heard as to the possibility of setting up a parliamentary committee to re-examine the mandate of the CBC. Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise as to the status of this matter?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): In reply to my honourable friend's third question—I can count too—I would suggest to him that he will have to wait until the government is prepared to make a statement of policy in respect of this matter. I am not authorized to make such a statement today.

INDEPENDENCE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Dan Hays: I characterized my first question as a grouping of matters relating to funding and the certainty of funding for the CBC, and I did bootleg in the matter of the mandate review, but my next question really relates to a matter that I have brought up earlier in the chamber and that is the independence of the CBC. There is an article in the Globe and Mail of December 11 which quotes Mr. Marcel Masse as saying that he is planning an expansion of the role of French language television across Canada. I will not go into great detail on the article, but by implication I think that he is making a decision as to whether or not a certain program will be followed in the corporation.

My question in this regard relates to whether or not there is anything further that the Leader of the Government in the Senate can advise me on this troubling matter of the independence of the CBC. In other words, is there a policy, or is there a change in policy with respect to what involvement the department will have in making decisions with respect to programs? Will it be a matter for the department or will the tradition of independence of that corporation be observed?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I can tell my honourable friend that the question of the role of the government with respect to the CBC was dealt with by Mr. Juneau in a recent statement which he made on the subject. He made it quite clear that there was no interference with the cultural integrity of the CBC, nor in the present reallocation of the budget did the government make any suggestions as to how programs should be altered or how policy matters of that sort should be considered. My honourable friend can take that piece of information as an assurance that there has been no unjustified trespass on the integrity of the CBC.

In the statement that my honourable friend refers to, it is true that the minister said if there were going to be any changes they would be discussed in Parliament. That is as far as I can go at the present time.

INVESTMENT CANADA

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I have had a few moments to ruminate on the answer that the Leader of the Government in the Senate gave me to my questions, and I did not think it was fair. I want to come back to it again. My question was to the effect that the new Investment Canada will not review acquisition of companies with assets of less than $5 million by foreign buyers. I think that is an important issue and a very important segment of this economy.

● (1420)

It is a protection to bigger businesses, but there is no protection whatsoever in this act against the acquisition of smaller businesses.

What I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate was: What protection is this government going to give respecting the acquisition by foreign interests of smaller businesses, smaller businesses being those with under $5 million of assets? The honourable gentleman replied that I was debating the bill.

Honourable senators, I am not debating the bill at all. I am asking if the bill is to be taken as a bill offered to Parliament which does not give any protection to the foreign acquisition of small business in Canada; and what steps does this government propose to take in that very important area? That is a fair question which I am sure the honourable gentleman can answer. There must be government policy; they must have thought of something. They just did not take it from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. There must be some answer to that question. This is not debating the bill.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend can rest assured that there is an answer, but it is not of the sort that can be dealt with at oral Question Period in the Senate when the exchange is supposed to be brief and sharp. I am not expected to enter into debate on the kind of explanation which my honourable friend's request would entail.

However, that is no reason why he should not ask the question. If he wishes me to do so, I will regard it as a written question, not susceptible of an oral answer, and I will provide him with a written answer.

Senator Everett: I thank the Honourable Leader of the Government for providing the answer.

THE ENVIRONMENT

PUBLIC ENVIRONMENT GROUP

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, yesterday I asked the Leader of the Government about an organization known as the Public Environment Group, and he responded that its existence was "—not within my compass of knowledge at the moment."

My question is: Is it now within the honourable gentleman's compass of knowledge?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I must admit to having neglected my honourable friend shamefully because I did not inquire of my staff as to what the reference was. However, if my honourable friend can enlighten me now, I would be pleased to listen.

Senator Davey: I would be most grateful if he would elicit the information since I would like to know something about that group.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, if that organization is one which comes within the ambit of the Government of Canada, I will search for the answer for my honourable friend.

FINANCE

DOCUMENT ENTITLED "JOHN TURNER AS MINISTER OF FINANCE: AN ERA OF ECONOMIC DECLINE"

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I have a second question for the Leader of the Government. I should like to know if he has yet been authorized to concede that the document "John Turner as Minister of Finance: An Era of Economic Decline" was, in fact, published at public expense.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in response to my honourable friend's second question, I am afraid I am still unable to give him an answer to his question. It belongs to that category of questions which I am not able to answer as expeditiously as my honourable friend would like. However, since he has registered his continued interest in it, I will work on it.

INVESTMENT CANADA

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, which relates to FIRA. My question has two parts. One part arises out of the intervention made in this chamber about foreign investment.

Do I understand correctly that we are not to expect any information concerning government policy on foreign investment that might illuminate, in the long run, our debate when the bill is presented in this chamber?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): If my honourable friend poses the direct question he has in mind, I will be glad to give the matter consideration.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I will do that, but that is not an answer to the question I just put.

I must say that I, along with some other senators, am still having some difficulty in understanding—

Hon. Jacques Flynn: What else is new?

Senator Frith:—exactly how the new Leader of the Government sees his role with respect to answering questions. Earlier today he said he was not authorized to answer questions. If he ever gives us a description of how he sees his obligations, he might include some comment on that. I sincerely do not yet have a grasp of what he thinks are proper questions, and questions that we might expect him to answer. In that context, then, and in respect of FIRA in general, when we are preparing to ask questions in this chamber, are we not to expect answers to questions relating to foreign investment policies of the government until we actually receive the bill? I ask that question because it seems to me that we might save time if we were to receive generally illuminating information on the subject which would help us in the debate that takes place when we do receive a bill. Is it the position of the Leader of the Government that he is not going to give us that information?

Senator Roblin: As I have explained on several previous occasions, my position in the Senate is this: I am a member of the cabinet, it is true, and therefore should be expected to reply to questions asked in this house. It is also true that I am not a minister responsible for the various portfolios to which questions pertain when they are raised here. Therefore, I think it is reasonable to expect that I will be lucky if I can directly answer a question on a portfolio that is not mine. On those occasions when I cannot answer the question in that way, then I do my best to give what answer I can. Where it is necessary to take the matter as notice or to say that I will provide a written answer, then I do so.

I think that, as far as questions are concerned, honourable senators may ask any questions they like. Question Period in the Senate is a free form activity. I would be exaggerating if I said that the rules are non-existent, but they are fairly skimpy, to say the least. I must expect questions, little speeches and debates of all kinds during Question Period and accommodate myself to them as best I can. I am philosophical about that.

I will tell my honourable friend that, if he wants to ask a question about the foreign policy stance of the government, if he poses the question he has in mind I will do my best to get him an answer as soon as I am able to do so.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I found the first part of that answer to be quite satisfactory. The government leader has said that the rules with respect to Question Period are practically non-existent. I point out that there are at least two rules which bear on Question Period. One of them states that a debate is out of order on an oral question, but brief explanatory remarks may be made by the senator who asks the questions and by the senator who answers it.

[Senator Frith.]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Brief!

Senator Frith: Yes, "brief." I suppose that my friend and I realize, having switched places here, that the interpretation of what is "brief" tends to vary, depending upon which side of the question one is on—questioner or questionee. My question arises out of the possibility of what we might call "falling between the cracks" between the demise of the Foreign Investment Review Agency and the creation of the new Investment Canada. It deals with the concerns of the Association of Canadian Publishers about the Prentice Hall take-over. Members of that association are concerned, because up to now the government has taken the position that it will not review that take-over from the perspective of the criterion of significant benefit to Canada. Will the Leader of the Government ask the minister responsible, Mr. Stevens, if he has now had an opportunity to decide whether or not he will review that take-over?

Senator Roblin: I can say to my honourable friend that there is no question but that there is a law in Canada respecting foreign take-overs. At present that law is the FIRA Act that we now know. Any proposal or take-over that comes to the government while that act is in place will be decided under the terms provided for in that piece of legislation. If that act should not be in place and a new one is there—as we hope will ultimately be the case—I can tell my honourable friend that, as I have read that act, provision is made for review of instances just like this one, where the cultural interests of the country are involved.

I would take it from that that, under one act or the other, this particular matter will be investigated.

AUDITOR GENERAL

CABINET DOCUMENTS—ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government whether it is true that the government has now decided to make available to the Auditor General information contained in cabinet documents.

• (1430)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have to tell my honourable friend that a meeting took place yesterday between the Auditor General and the Prime Minister, in which I understand—although I was not there—an effort was made to resolve the question of definition as to what constituted a cabinet confidence, which, under the generally understood parliamentary rule, was not available for general scrutiny, and what did not. The discussion sought to determine a definition whereby the Auditor General's interest would be satisfied, while at the same time observing the constitutional proprieties. That is the state of play at the present time. I expect that at some time in the near future an announcement will be made which will provide us with further information on the subject.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the Auditor General, following the meeting which he held yesterday with the Prime Minister, stated that everything that was a problem before regarding Petrofina was now out of the way. That is what the Auditor General said, and we all know that the Prime Minister himself has clarified precisely what the problem was, namely, that it was not appropriate for the Auditor General to have access to a cabinet document. All that I am really asking is whether that principle, which has been enunciated not only by the Prime Minister but also by his predecessors, is still to be observed by the government?

Senator Roblin: I do not believe that I can add anything to the statement I have already made on the subject.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I am sure that the Leader of the Government will agree that his statement has not really dealt with my question, except to say that there was a meeting and that an effort would be made to define what a cabinet document is. Well, we do not need a definition. We know precisely what cabinet documents are—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: —and it would be quite unfortunate if the Prime Minister attempted to define a cabinet document—

An Hon. Senator: Tell us.

Senator MacEachen: —as something that is a departmental document.

I ask the question because it is a convention of government that the present Prime Minister has no authority to make available cabinet documents that were the possession of the former government. I am asking whether it is the intention of the Prime Minister, following the meeting with the Auditor General, to maintain the convention which he so stoutly defended within the last short period of time?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I believe that where my honourable friend and I would have a difference of opinion is as to whether or not there is a satisfactory definition of what is a cabinet confidence. I believe that is the heart of the matter, namely, that there has been a claim made by some that certain papers, which I would regard as being departmental and not cabinet confidences, are indeed covered by the stamp of secrecy. In fact, I understand that some departmental papers have been marked "secret" even though they are not, in any usual way, considered to be cabinet confidences; and that has been part of the stumbling block in connection with this matter.

I have to be candid with my honourable friend and say that I am not a principal in these discussions, and therefore I must be careful not to try to say something about which I do not really know. That is why I believe it would be a good idea for me to wait until there has been a further statement by the Auditor General and the Prime Minister with respect to this matter.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I agree with the Leader of the Government that the Prime Minister, up to the present time, has not commented upon his meeting. It has been the Auditor General who has made the statements. I understand the sensitivity of the question and the explanation given by the Leader of the Government, but it would be helpful if he could, at an early date, clarify precisely what the situation is as to whether, indeed, the government has now decided to release departmental documents, which is a question quite separate from the question of cabinet documents. That really is what I would like to know about. Also, if cabinet documents are to be made available, has the consent of the former Prime Minister been received in order to make those disclosures?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I understand the reasons why my honourable friend is so sensitive on this issue. I can appreciate his concern. However, I think that he may perhaps possess his soul in patience for a few days until further information is forthcoming on this matter, because I have some confidence that the answer will meet his requirements.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I am sensitive about the question of proprieties. If the honourable gentleman was inferring that I was sensitive about the disclosure of information, then I would want to set his mind at ease on that matter. I am sure that he did not have any such inference in mind.

RESTAURANT OF PARLIAMENT

PROVISION OF SERVICES

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It arises out of a recent announcement by His Honour the Speaker of the House of Commons affecting the administration of the Restaurant of Parliament.

I am a member of the Standing Joint Committee on the Restaurant of Parliament. I am sure that the honourable senator knows that this restaurant has come under a great deal of criticism over the past number of years as being an institution where parliamentarians take advantage of heavily subsidized meals.

Over the past few days and as a member of the committee, I took it upon myself to consult with some experts in private enterprise in this area of endeavour. I discovered that there are great advantages to be derived from putting out to tender the services that are rendered at the present time by the Restaurant of Parliament. Is the honourable gentleman aware if his government has ever considered the possibility of putting out to tender the restaurant services on Parliament Hill?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, my honourable friend has posed an interesting suggestion and I hope that he will follow it up. However, I think the suggestion should be put before the joint committee responsible for the restaurant, which is co-chaired by the Speaker of the House of Commons and the Speaker of the Senate. Therefore, the question is not one which falls within my purview, but my honourable friend may find it useful to take the matter up with the committee and with the joint chairmen.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, I would be very pleased to do as the leader has suggested, if I knew who has the prerogative of calling a meeting of the committee. If I had that prerogative I would raise this matter directly with that person. I put the question to the Leader of the Government in the hope that somebody will take notice of this matter and call a meeting to discuss this very important aspect of the administration of the Parliamentary Restaurant.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend will have to apply to the Speaker of the Senate with respect to this matter. It does not come within my jurisdiction.

JOINT COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government. Yesterday, while looking at the list of standing, special and joint committees in Senate Hansard of December 6, under the Joint Committee of the Restaurant of Parliament I noticed that only the members of the Senate are listed and that there are no members listed from the House of Commons. After reviewing the Standing Orders of the House of Commons, I find that there is no provision for a joint committee on the Restaurant of Parliament. The book, which I have just returned to the Table, is dated December 1982. I have photocopies of the pertinent pages.

I am somewhat at a loss to understand what has happened to the Standing Joint Committee on the Restaurant of Parliament. Perhaps the leader would be good enough to get us some further information on the matter. Obviously, we in this chamber are operating under one set of rules or misapprehensions and those in the House of Commons are operating under another set of rules.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think my honourable friend is correct in what she says about the listed membership of this joint committee. I am looking at the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and I see only the names of senators there. Unfortunately, none of this comes within my purview. The honourable senator is applying to the wrong man. I think her query ought to be addressed to the Speaker of the Senate, who should be competent to deal with the point she has raised.

Senator Neiman: With respect, Senator Roblin, I am not sure if the Speaker of the Senate would be competent to give an answer on behalf of the Speaker of the House of Commons. However, he may be, and I stand to be corrected on that point. At this point, I simply want clarification as to why the rules of the House of Commons were apparently changed. Perhaps we were not apprised of this fact and thus continued appointing members to a joint committee which is no longer joint. I do not think that our Speaker can provide the answer on this matter.

● (1440)

Senator Roblin: I think he is the best person to ask. It is true he cannot speak for the House of Commons; however, I think he is on speaking terms with the Speaker of the House of Commons and can raise your point with that gentleman. It really is not a matter for me to get into. I would like to help my honourable friend; however, I think she should talk to our Speaker about it.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MANDATE—PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE STUDY

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, earlier in Question Period one of my colleagues asked for information with respect to the formation of a special committee to look into certain questions regarding the CBC. I am wondering if the Leader of the Government in the Senate would put forward the suggestion that if such a committee were to be struck it might be struck as a joint committee. In this way senators could also take part in discussions with respect to the matter.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that is an interesting idea and I will undertake to give it some consideration.

TRANSPORT

AIRPORT CAR RENTAL SERVICE—PARKING

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, yesterday when I asked a question of the Leader of the Government with respect to a delayed answer, I believe he misunderstood me when I referred to a question I asked on December 5 last concerning car rental at airports and, more particularly, parking areas. My question made no reference to car rental agencies. The Honourable Leader of the Government referred me to the comments of the Minister of Transport in the other place and I read those comments thoroughly. I wish to bring to the attention of the government leader the fact that he made no reference to parking at all. I bring this matter to his attention today in order that I may receive an appropriate answer with respect to my question. I also draw his attention to a question I asked on November 28 last.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I appreciate my honourable friend's bringing this matter to my notice. He is quite correct, I did misunderstand his question. I think I understand it now and I will try to obtain an answer for him.

SALTFISH ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody moved the third reading of Bill C-6, to amend the Saltfish Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 3, 1984-85

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by the Honourable Senator Phillips, for the second reading of the Bill C-16, intituled: "An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1985".—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have three points to make with respect to Bill C-16. The first point is a procedural one I remember from the days when I had the enjoyment of sitting in Senator Doody's place. In those days I usually sponsored these bills and I had to give an undertaking that the bill was in the usual form. I take it that undertaking has been given?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): It is your bill; we are just presenting it.

Senator Frith: I thought that the notes for the speech about the bill had a familiar ring.

Honourable senators, the second point I wish to make is to remind this chamber that although the bill is lengthy it consists of short, operative provisions. It has then a schedule of the various estimates, or "votes". Those estimates, as some of our new senators will know from their experience in the House of Commons, are normally dealt with by committee. In our case, they are automatically referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, and in this case they were referred to that committee. I ask honourable senators, if they are interested in appropriations and the estimates, to look at Debates of the Senate for December 6, 1984, to which are attached, as Appendix "A", the report of Senator Leblanc (Saurel)—who is Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance—with respect to the supplementary estimates (B).

I would like to draw attention to something noted by the committee with regard to spending reductions. In that regard I would like to quote, in part, from the report of the chairman of the committee, which is found at page 293 of Debates of the Senate.

With regard to spending reductions, announced at the time of the economic statement by the Minister of Finance in the other place on November 7, 1984, Mr. Manion informed the Committee that there would be some savings to be applied to the deficit. Mr. Manion indicated that these savings would remain in departmental budgets until the end of the fiscal year at which time they would be applied to reducing the deficit. However, the witness also indicated that the Treasury Board would have considerable difficulty in separating normal lapses from savings associated with the spending reduction. The Committee was surprised to learn that these savings were not being immediately withdrawn and applied to the deficit, thereby reducing interest charges. The Committee was also concerned that the government was not able to determine with any accuracy the extent of the savings associated with the spending reduction.

I draw that paragraph of the report to the attention of honourable senators as a matter of interest in case it escaped their attention.

The third point I wish to make is that I do not think it appropriate—no pun intended—for the Senate to deny supply which has been passed in the other place. I say this in spite of the fact that some of us who went on the now famous and, for some, notorious trip to Australia, were surprised to learn that the Senate in Australia has the power to deny supply. Of course, we also have the perfect right to do so. However, in my opinion it is not appropriate. It is appropriate to examine the estimates to try to do what we can to illuminate them but not to finally deny supply.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Not today!

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Who said that?

Senator Frith: My leader says, "Not today!" I have taken note of his remark. I have the impression that others have also taken note of his parenthetical remark—his stage whisper.

Honourable senators, for the reasons I have stated, we on this side of the house intend to support the bill at second and third reading stages.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I wish to inform honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Doody speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, we have little to add to what has already been said in the introduction of the appropriations bill. I appreciate the fact that Senator Frith is concerned about the lack of the government's immediate intent to transfer savings to the reduction of the deficit.

Senator Frith: I was not; I just pointed out that the committee was.

Senator Doody: I would say that maybe we will have another run at that later on; there is usually another set of estimates before we get through the year. Early in the new year there will be the supplementary estimates (D), which is the crunch. Those estimates show that the real numbers are true figures before we get to the new fiscal year.

I note with some interest the aside of the Leader of the Opposition to the effect that today the opposition is supporting the passage of this bill. It sounds as if there might be some interesting things ahead of us. I look forward to a new departure for the Senate and, perhaps, for a complete departure of the Senate.

Having said that, honourable senators, I ask for your support on second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

• (1450)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Walker, P.C., for the second reading of the Bill C-7, intituled: "An Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes".—(Honourable Senator Kolber).

Hon. Leo E. Kolber: Honourable senators, I have a few brief remarks to make on this bill and I also wish to voice a few concerns. First of all, it is interesting to note that most of the measures contained in this bill originated from the budget of the Honourable Marc Lalonde of February 1984. It is also interesting to note that the economic statement made by the Honourable Michael Wilson has resulted in very few concrete steps, most of which were also contained in this same budget of the Honourable Marc Lalonde.

I do have several concerns with respect to this bill. The bill changes the provision governing the period of filing the notice of objection to a tax assessment reducing it from 180 days to 90 days. I understand that this is in anticipation of a much more efficient Revenue Canada. However, until that is an actuality, I wonder if we are being fair to our taxpayers.

My second concern is that Marc Lalonde's February budget contained a provision which would have allowed the taxpayer to give to the Minister of National Revenue satisfactory security for taxes which were in dispute. This provision has been deleted. I note that, in the Speech from the Throne, the government stated its intention to refrain from accepting advance payments until the matter had been settled by a court. While that is certainly an eminently fair position, that test has not yet taken place. Therefore, at this moment, we are in an interim or hiatus period and, in my opinion, some clarification in this area is necessary.

The last comment I have to make is that it would appear that the government has suspended advance rulings. This position is not consistent with the stated intention of this government to instil confidence in business. In my opinion, this is not a good way to achieve that goal.

Having said those things and with those concerns and caveats, I certainly would recommend the adoption of this bill.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I wish to inform the Senate that, if the Honourable Senator Flynn speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I thank Senator Kolber for his comments. I note that he did not suggest that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. I should like to know whether he thinks it would be of some use if I were to move the motion so that he might have answers to the points he raised.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Unless I am mistaken, the bill does not make any reference to the last point raised by Senator Kolber. He is probably referring to an administrative ruling. I do not think the legislation provides for the suspension of advance rulings by Revenue Canada when so requested. I do not recall hearing anything about it.

Should Senator Kolber want to have answers to those three questions, I would certainly move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

[English]

Senator Kolber: I do not think that will be necessary.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Yes, it is.

Senator Kolber: I bow to my leader.

[Translation]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I think this bill should be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Flynn, bill referred to Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

THE SENATE

OFFICE OF SPEAKER

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Riel, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to his tenure as Speaker of the Senate, his experiences and his recommendations to the Senate.—(Honourable Senator Riel, P.C.)

Hon. Maurice Riel: I am very glad with this opportunity to continue my speech, especially since I realized I forgot something very important, which always happens when you are in a hurry as I was the other day. I also would like to elaborate on a number of points.

I forgot a short paragraph which I thought was rather apt and which I had written especially for the new speaker pro tempore, and so I will give it to you now. Senator Asselin, who is now our "permanent" Speaker pro tempore, as they say in the United States, is a distinguished parliamentarian in the grand tradition. I am sure the senator will find it very difficult not to rise and take part in our daily debates.

I am sure that at times his temper will rise, but that, like all Speakers of the Senate, he will remain in his moderating role and exercise the authority that role confers on him.

I am sure he will also be very keen to study all the precedents to find out exactly what his powers are. At times, the situation as seen from the Chair is not the same as seen from the floor of the chamber. On the other hand, the Senator knows that in the Senate, the Speaker has the right to take part in debate and to vote.

I believe that during the last session, your predecessor Senator Molgat left the Chair to table his committee's report.

Others before you have done so many times. I noticed that many of our colleagues were surprised to hear the Speaker of the Senate is entitled, under rule 42, to take part in debate, and to vote under rule 49. I wish Senator Asselin a successful "permanent" pro tempore speakership.

I wish to thank Senator Molgat who was my Speaker pro tempore until Parliament was dissolved. He performed his duties with distinction and great skill.

I would like to quote something interesting from "The Modern Senate of Canada, 1925-63". There is one passage that describes the history of the role of the Speaker and the precedents for allowing the Speaker of the Senate to take part in debate and to vote.

[English]

Unlike the Speaker of the House of Commons, with the Speaker of the Senate there is no suggestion of a requirement of either impartiality or aloofness from debate.

[Translation]

That is rather dangerous. I would not advise it. That was probably in the good old days.

• (1500)

[English]

On those rare occasions when the Speaker wished to address the Senate, he left the chair and spoke from the floor like other members. During the second reading debate of the Trade Mark and Design bill of 1927 Sen. Bostock informed the House that he had strong protests from Vancouver, his home town, about the object of the legislation and urged the postponement of the debate, in order that all interested parties might be heard. Again, in 1945 Sen. King, who, together with Sen. Moraud, represented the Senate in the Canadian delegation at San Francisco, took part in the debate on the resolution approving the United Nations Charter. He was once more brought into the discussion in 1947, when he felt that as Speaker of the Senate he had to reply to an unprecedented attack by Sen. Murdock upon the report of the Senate's Internal Economy committee recommending an increase in the salary of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod.

The quotation does not say if the Speaker of the Senate then was the Chairman of the Internal Economy Committee, but I will check on that and report back to you, because that might be very interesting to know.

The quotation goes on to state:

Sen. Robertson left his chair twice during his speakership—once in 1954—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Would the honourable senator receive a question? Was this "unprecedented attack" a verbal attack or a physical attack?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Financial.

Senator Riel: It is not stated precisely, Senator Frith.

Senator Frith: It does not say whether it was a physical attack or a verbal attack?

Senator Riel: No, but if the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod is brought in, I suppose he would defend the Speaker.

In the book I read—and I am not going to quote the complete book—it says that at one time Speakers had difficulties amongst themselves. One Speaker called the other an old viper. At that time there was a Sergeant-at-Arms, and he was obliged to intervene. So, your question was in order, Senator Frith, as is usual.

The quotation goes on to state:

Sen. Robertson left his chair twice during his speakership—once in 1954 to join in paying tribute to the memory of Sen. Dennis, a fellow Nova Scotian, and once in 1955 to take part in the debate on the motion to approve the Protocol on West Germany's accession to NATO. In addition to addressing the House, the Speaker in all cases has a vote; thus, Hardy participated in one division during his short term as Speaker in 1930; Blondin voted in a total of twelve divisions between 1930 and 1935, and Foster and King voted on one bill each while Speakers.

[Translation]

I trust, dear Sir, that the example of your predecessors to whom I have just referred, will encourage you to put your rights and privileges to good use. Of course, and we know that, with your usual discretion, you will use them well.

In my previous speech, I talked about the protocol service of the Secretary of State. I must point out that I am certain there was no ill-will and no lack of sincerity on the part of the officials who came to see me. Their department gives them instructions and they follow them. They are not paid to be experts in parliamentary law. It is up to the Speaker of the Senate to make sure that the rights and prerogatives of the Senate are respected. This is one of his duties and he is empowered to see to it.

Otherwise, the Senate would be left to play a minor role if not actually despised.

In fact, I must say that, later on, I had good relations with one of the protocol officials who came to see me. The pretty lady from Quebec who came to the first meeting never returned. I was sorry about that. I am convinced that, with written and published rules on the rights, privileges and prerogatives of the Speaker of the Senate or even of the Speakers of both houses, our friends from the protocol service of the Secretary of State would understand and co-operate fully.

I also want to say a few words about Royal Assent. I have already referred to the British law passed in 1967. There is nothing new about this. Senator Flynn spoke about this years ago. Senator Frith has also spoken a lot about it. Senator Godfrey and others have studied the matter in depth. We only have to continue in their footsteps.

Coming back to the matter of protocol, I spoke briefly the other day of the privilege I had of greeting Her Majesty the Queen to this place.

[English]

I want to report to you that welcoming the Queen to Parliament was a great experience. The Queen radiates dignity, grace and intelligence. What she has to do, she goes about in a quiet but sure way. For instance, when she left the porch under the Peace Tower to enter Parliament, she made a remark to me in French—in French always—that it seemed to her that that was the first time she had entered the rotunda. Then, as I indicated the way to the elevator, passing by the left side arch at the top of the stairs, she turned to me and said: “I believe we should go by the centre arch”, which, of course, was the proper way, and which, I must say, I had been told by the protocol office of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

At that time she repressed, or she permitted a faint smile and I thought I saw a twinkle in her eye, but always she kept strict composure and perfect decorum. I suppose it is this that one calls “Majesty”.

When the Queen and the Duke came down from the Memorial Chamber, it was my honour, as Speaker of the Senate, to escort them to the table to sign the book of the Speaker of the Senate, first the Queen, and then the Duke. She was amused to see a little red dot in the place where she was to sign, so she queried me about that. I told her that we had prepared two inscriptions on the page in Gothic characters, one in French and one in English, and in order to be sure that her signature would be exactly in between, we inserted the red dot. I told her that we wanted equality between the French language and the English language. The Queen saw the point right away. She thought that that was very ingenious.

The Duke was interested in the colours of the two books. He asked, in perfect French, why there was a red book and a green book. He also asked why the red book was thicker than the green one. I simply told him that the green book was a sign of hope for the members of the House of Commons that they will join us in the Red Chamber one day, and if the red book was thicker, it was because we are senators for longer periods than they are Members of the House of Commons—like the lords—which made good sense to him, he being one of the Royal Lords.

Through all of this the Queen did not lose her sense of direction and did not forget the timing of the program. I wished then to have a conversation with them, which I did to some extent with the Duke, so much so that many people who watched the news broadcast asked me what the Duke and I were talking about in such an animated way. I must confess that I do not remember at all. I remember only his perfect French.

I want to conclude this part of my speech on the visit of the Queen by saying, let nobody say that he is not filled with a certain emotion when he meets so much dignity, intelligence and presence in one person, the Queen.

[Translation]

I would like to say a few words about the Pope's visit. But in this case, as the folks back home would say, I did not get a formal invitation. I did not welcome him to Parliament either. I only met him at Government House along with other Canadian parliamentarians. I was introduced to him very briefly. I felt as though I had always known him.

Personally, I am full of admiration for the Holy Father who must assume huge responsibilities, as the leader of hundreds of millions of believers who, in these difficult times, are somewhat scattered and split up. Who would not want to help the present pope with his plans and dreams of kindness, brotherhood and universal happiness?

But what a strong-willed man! From his native Poland to the throne of St. Peter, life has not always been easy for him, as evidenced by the story of his life. He is kindness incarnate, while remaining absolutely firm. St. Peter's ship demands from its helmsman outstanding qualities. One has the distinct feeling that the present pope has them all.

● (1510)

Returning to what I said about the use of the red chamber for commercial film making and use of the Senate by non-senators, my staff contacted, in addition to officials of the House of Lords and the United States Senate, the Clerk of the Ontario Legislature. I personally spoke and exchanged correspondence with the Speaker of the Quebec National Assembly. Insofar as their respective houses were concerned, they were supportive of my stand. We also contacted the Clerk of the Senate of the French Republic. His answer was that for permission to be granted for a commercial film to be made in the French Senate the scenario would have to adhere rigorously to history. Permission has not been given. One thing that is certain is that neither the House of Lords, the American Senate, the French Senate, nor the Quebec or Ontario Assemblies have lent their chamber for the making of commercial films. They have also not let their chambers be used for mock parliaments or for debates of the Chamber of Commerce.

Hon. Andrew Thompson: May I ask the former Speaker a question? As I recall, the Ontario Legislature had an association of youth parliamentarians. Is that what he referred to as a mock parliament?

Senator Riel: Are you asking about Ontario?

Senator Thompson: I understood you to say that the Ontario Legislature was never used for a mock parliament.

Senator Riel: That is what I understood from your question.

Senator Thompson: I would question that, but I could be wrong.

Senator Riel: I said that my staff contacted the Clerk of the Ontario Legislature. I have not spoken to him personally but this is the information I received. Perhaps I should check once more.

I learned from speaking to the Speaker of the Quebec National Assembly that they are not using their chamber for commercial film making.

I engaged in correspondence with Speakers participating in the Speakers' Conference of Canada which will be chaired for 1984-85 by the Speaker of the British Columbia Legislature. This conference will meet early in 1985 in Victoria. I sent the chairman part of the correspondence on this subject in order that this item will appear on the agenda of that conference.

I did the same thing with the Speakers' Conference of the Commonwealth which will take place in India in 1985 or 1986 and of which Mr. Philip Laundy, one of the assistant clerks in the House of Commons, is an officer.

I believe that a common policy for all the assembly houses in the provinces, the House of Commons and the Senate should be adopted and observed, and also at the Commonwealth level. Now that the Senate has taken the lead, I hope that our Speaker or his deputy will be present at these meetings to present our points of view and our recommendations.

I should now like to return to my visit to the House of Lords. As you know, there is a different disposition of benches in the House of Lords from that in our Senate. They have 26 archbishops and bishops sitting to the right of the Woolsack. The government sits next to them on the right. On the left the first place is occupied by the Liberal peers, although the party is nearly non-existent in the U.K. The official opposition sits a little lower and then there are the cross-benchers.

The cross-benchers are a group of approximately 220 lords, of which 50 are present on any sitting day. They are sitting not to the right or to the left of the Woolsack but in the place of our Black Rod on benches across the centre aisle. Knowing that there are never more than 200 peers in the House of Lords at any one sitting, the cross-benchers are somewhat of an important minority. As a matter of fact, they are the real opposition in the House of Lords. Who are the cross-benchers? They are peers or lords appointed as independents and sitting as such, which means they are not affiliated to a political party, they are not dependent on the leaders of any party in the House of Lords, and they are not dependent on the whip of any party or belonging to the caucus of parties. They are also independent among themselves. They do not form a monolithic group like their colleagues, the lords who belong to the caucus of their party. These cross-benchers in the House of Lords are a very loosely assembled group and they act independently of mind, speech and conscience. They convene weekly for the sake of discussion, but each remains free to act as he so desires, and they are subjected to no pressure. They elect a convener who acts as a sort of shepherd to this group with no other authority than his recognized moral authority which, in many ways, would prevent him or her from exerting any unwelcome pressure on a colleague. The cross-benchers are given proportionate representation on House of Lords' Committees.

Senator Molson, being the first independent senator appointed to this chamber by Mr. St. Laurent in 1955, has aspired to form such a group for many years. In February 1983 he sent a circular letter to all honourable senators on the workings of the cross-benchers' system in the House of Lords.

• (1520)

The Liberal peers, whose positions are mostly hereditary, because their party has not been in power for a long time, also form an important segment of that body. Since the representation of their party is almost non-existent in the Commons, they have more freedom of action. However, generally speaking, the partisanship is very much subdued in the House of Lords; they leave that to the House of Commons.

Honourable senators, this may, in part, be due to the general character of the lords, their maturity and their sense of history. As we see in the Story of Parliaments by Christopher Jones, at page 229, the House of Lords is expected to conduct itself in the following way:

—are expected to know how to behave themselves without having the full authority of the Speaker over them . . . and they refer to each other with grave courtesy as 'My Noble Friend' or the 'Noble Lord'—

The author of the book goes on to state:

Should the noble tempers become too frayed, then the Leader of the House asks the Clerk to read the standing order against asperity which was passed in 1626 and still applies.

Honourable senators, that reads as follows:

To prevent misunderstanding and/or avoiding of offensive speeches when matters are debating, either in the House or at Committees, it is, for honour's sake, thought fit, and so ordered, that all personal, sharp, or taxing speeches be foreborne, and whosoever answereth another man's speech shall apply his answer to the matter without wrong to that person; and as nothing offensive is to be spoken, so nothing is to be ill taken if the party that speaks it shall presently make a fair exposition or clear denial of the words that might bear any ill construction; and if any offence of that kind be given, as the House will be very sensible thereof, so it will sharply censure the offender, and give the party offended fair reparation and full satisfaction.

The writer concludes:

Which, more than three hundred and fifty years later, sums up parliamentary courtesy and parliamentary discipline precisely.

Honourable senators, perhaps this rule of 1626 should be read by our Speaker after prayers at the first sitting of each year.

Due to great freedom in its work, in party discipline and in parliamentary discipline—which seems to be left more to personal judgment than otherwise—the House of Lords is able to accomplish a great deal.

According to a publication of the British Parliament, statistics kept by the Information Office of the House of Lords for the year 1977-78 indicate the following breakdown of work accomplished by the House of Lords:

about 50 per cent of its time, concerns Public Bills.

Most of the time spent on legislation is spent on revising Bills sent from the Commons, and because of its legal tradition, the House of Lords can do a great deal of tidying up in a detached and rather professional way. About 30 per cent of its time, the Lords spends debating reports and general subjects, often far-reaching debates on subjects such as the environment or leisure, and they are usually debated in a measured and well-informed way. It is a pity that the House of Lords debates are so seldom used as a source of information in view of the wisdom and experience concentrated there, which comes across without political venom and often with courteous eccentricity. Unstarred Questions, which come at the end of the day, are like short Adjournment Debates in the Commons and take up about 9 per cent of their Lordships' time. Finally, there are the debates on the reports of the House of Lords European Communities Committee, which has formed seven specialist sub-committees, is manned by about 90 Peers, and is able to devote far more time to the subject than the equivalent House of Commons Select Committee. The House of Lords itself spends nearly 5 per cent of its time debating the European Committee's reports, far more time than the House of Commons can afford. The more important statements made in the House of Commons are usually repeated in the House of Lords.

Honourable senators, I would also point out that, according to the same information, the number of oral questions at daily question time in the Lords is limited to only four, each question taking eight to ten minutes. The total time devoted to the Question Period is about half an hour, sometimes 45 minutes. They call that Fast Business. Honourable senators, the Question Period in the Senate today lasted not more than 40 minutes, so we are not doing too badly.

Senator Doody: It depends on where you sit.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: And when you sit.

Senator Thompson: How do they select the four questions to be asked?

Senator Riel: I am afraid I do not know the answer to the honourable senator's question.

The cross-benchers act as the real opposition in the House of Lords because they have the strength of numbers, with at least 50 cross-benchers sitting every day. The total number of lords in attendance on any given day is not more than 200 and probably more likely to be 150. The activity is focussed in the cross-benchers' corner and, as I understand it, that is welcomed.

Honourable senators, while I was imbibing all this information about party organization, discipline, parliamentary manners and work in the House of Lords, I could not help but admire the performance of that body. If we kept statistics, we could judge whether we rated as well. Honourable senators, I am sure we would.

An article in The Economist of June 16, 1984, circulated to us by Senators Bell and Gigantès, bears the very interesting title, "Britain's House of Lords now out-performs the Commons as a responsible legislature." It is worthwhile reading.

This good work and reputation is not all due to the cross-benchers, but, nevertheless, I believe it would be a positive step if we were to appoint more independents to the Senate. In this chamber we have three independents: Senators Molson, Pitfield and Lawson. I do not know if we can judge the weight of their influence, but I would suggest that they do have some. I believe that, if we had a larger group of cross-benchers, we would be making progress.

Honourable senators, several months ago I conveyed an idea I had to Senator Le Moine. It was that we should create a special group of senators to be appointed ex officio to the Senate, this group being made up of all the former prime ministers of Canada, all the former premiers of the provinces and all the former governors general.

● (1530)

The number of senators would not exceed the 104 or 112 that can be appointed according to the Constitution. The distinguished citizens belonging to the group would become, as I said, ex officio members of the Senate on their retirement from office, if they so wished, by informing the Clerk of the Senate of their readiness and acquiescence.

[Translation]

Senator Jacques Flynn: Up to what age?

Senator Riel: According to the Standing Orders. We are limited to age 75 by the Constitution of the land. We have a former Governor General who is hardly 50.

Senator Flynn: Another one is 80!

Senator Riel: We have in Newfoundland a former premier who is well above 80. There should be limits.

Senator Flynn: I thought you wanted no age limit for those people.

Senator Riel: No. As you know, I always support sensible measures.

[English]

They would have only to present a certificate from the Clerk of the Assembly of their province to the effect that they have ceased to occupy the function of premier and are no longer sitting members of a house. They would need no summons from the Prime Minister of Canada, whoever he might be, and would not owe their appointments to any one political party. They would be free to be perfectly independent of the parties, and could render to this country invaluable services in bringing to this place of sober second thought their experience, wisdom and intellectual powers. If ever they should wish to return to elected politics, they would have to resign.

Honourable senators, think of it: We could have Ed Schreyer, former Governor General, Pierre Elliott Trudeau and Joe Clark, former Prime Ministers; Frank Moores, Gerry Regan and Alex Campbell of Prince Edward Island, Mr. Bourassa of Quebec, Mr. Davis of Ontario, Mr. Lyon of Manitoba, Mr. Blakeney of Saskatchewan and Mr. Barrett of B.C.—a total of 11 if I count well. However, Mr. Bourassa is the current Liberal leader in Quebec and is pursuing other goals, so our total is reduced to 10. But one day we might have with us Messrs. Bennett of British Columbia, Lougheed of Alberta and Lévesque of Quebec. It would be an interesting group of men with which to start the cross-benchers system in our Senate. To see Mr. Trudeau, Mr. Lévesque and Mr. Lyon rubbing shoulders in this chamber would be a spectacle worth the visit of at least one reporter.

[Translation]

To go on with my discussion with Senator Le Moyne, I wonder whether this would be "Le dialogue des dieux", or "Une saison en enfer".

Senator Le Moyne: The dialogue of the deaf!

Senator Riel: You may be right. This would be a Beau risque to quote somebody I have in mind.

[English]

Honourable senators, in recent times the tradition has been to appoint to the Senate former premiers. In this capacity we have had Senator Manning, former Premier of Alberta; Senator Smith, former Premier of Nova Scotia; Senator Robichaud, former Premier of New Brunswick and Senator Roblin, former Premier of Manitoba. Of course, we also have Senator Hicks, another former Premier of Nova Scotia—I am suddenly forgetting a man whom I knew before he became premier of that province. It would have been a good thing to have had with us John Robarts of Ontario and Jean Lesage of Quebec, and probably others as well. If they had been ex officio, in the company of colleagues who had occupied similar positions as former premiers of provinces, perhaps they would have come.

Honourable senators, this is probably the only chance to form a group of cross-benchers of a small but influential percentage. They could coalesce around them those here who have wished for years to form a group of cross-benchers. It would give them an opportunity to make a greater contribution to the work of this house and, perhaps, to permit our Senate to demonstrate the spirit existing in the House of Lords.

This is an idea that I put forward to all honourable senators and to the present government. The realization of the idea would require an amendment to the Constitution, but it seems that, at the moment, the government in power has a clear majority and good relations with the provinces. Furthermore, those who have made a great issue about increasing provincial representation in the Senate would certainly be satisfied to see, in this chamber, so formidable a group of provincialists as the former premiers. When I conceived of this idea some months ago—when it was at the embryonic stage in my mind—I spoke of it to Senators Le Moyne and Pitfield and I received much encouragement to pursue it. I must say that I even spoke to the then Prime Minister, who said to me that, although the idea was intriguing and interesting, he could not entertain it at the moment because he was leaving. He suggested that I pursue it with one of his successors.

Senator Flynn: Une fin de non recevoir.

Senator Riel: We will see, we will see; perhaps you are more apt than I to interpret the words of the former Prime Minister.

In any event, the Constitution allows a government to appoint 8 senators more than the figure of 104, making a total of 112. The present government could, at this time, appoint 5 senators, for a total of 104, and an additional 8, for a total of 112; 13 new senators could be joining our ranks. I suspect, however, that they will all be "des bleus," as a custom has existed since Confederation that the government of the day appoints supporters. I have read that, during his tenure, Sir John appointed 113 or 115 senators, of whom one was Liberal.

Senator Flynn: Oh, no; the first group was practically half and half.

Senator Riel: Do you think so?

Senator Flynn: I know of many Grits who were appointed to the first Senate.

Senator Riel: Are you going to agree, however, that Sir Wilfred Laurier appointed 95 senators, all of whom were Liberals?

Senator Flynn: I would agree with that.

Senator Riel: You agree. Are you willing to agree that Mackenzie King appointed few Conservatives?

Senator Flynn: None.

Senator Riel: Mr. St. Laurent appointed one Conservative, one Independent, Senator Molson, and one Independent-Liberal, Senator Cameron. Prime Minister Trudeau, during his tenure, appointed a number of Liberals and a few Conservatives, such as Senator Asselin, Senator Roblin, Senator Muir, Senator Marshall and others.

● (1540)

Senator Flynn: We have become an endangered species!

Senator Riel: Yes, I know; but they were persons of good character. That is why I say that it would be a good thing to have former provincial premiers appointed ex officio and enabled to sit in this chamber without being nominated by anyone and who would be able to maintain their liberty. I think that would provide us with the only opportunity to have a section of cross-benches. I have often discussed this matter with Senator Molson, but I can see no way out, because the Liberals will inevitably appoint Liberals and now, of course, it is the turn of the Progressive Conservatives.

I believe that if a group of the most experienced persons in this country were appointed to the Senate and were not subject to the imperious pressure of caucuses or whips, we might see in the Senate the diminution of that partisan spirit that exists in the House of Commons and which sometimes permeates the Senate. The Senate might then become more like the British House of Lords, namely, a little more serene, and we would then be able to sing the following verse from Gilbert and Sullivan's Iolanthe:

We are peers of the highest station
Paragons of legislation
Pillars of the British nation

There is a further part to my speech, which I am prepared to delay until another occasion.

On motion of Senator Riel, debate adjourned.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE
AUTHORIZED TO REVIEW SENATE COMMITTEE REPORT ENTITLED "THEY SERVED—WE CARE"

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Marshall, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bielish:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to review and update the recommendations contained in the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, entitled: "They Served—We Care", tabled in the Senate on 20th October, 1981, and to enquire into any matter related thereto; and

That the papers and evidence taken on the subject and the work accomplished during the First Session of the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the Committee.—(Honourable Senator Bonnell).

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I shall try to conclude my remarks today; otherwise I shall seek permission to adjourn the debate—which I hope will not be on division.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): For you, senator, anything goes.

An Hon. Senator: Be concise.

Senator Bonnell: The reason for my speaking today is to support the worthwhile motion of my colleague, Senator Marshall. Senator Marshall spoke about the great things that the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science had done in the past and those things that the new Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology would be doing in the future.

The report of the committee entitled "They Served—We Care" has been taken seriously by the Department of Veterans Affairs, and many of our recommendations have been carried out. However, there remain some recommendations that require further consideration.

Sometimes I believe that the group of Canadian servicemen who were in Nevada at the time of the nuclear explosions in the 1950s, and were also at Chalk River, have not been recognized by the Department of Veterans Affairs as having been exposed to danger from nuclear radiation to the detriment of their health. Many of those servicemen today are suffering from cancer.

The Veterans Department in the United States has now recognized that servicemen who served in Nevada at the time of the atomic explosions were exposed to danger in a nuclear zone; and the Canadian Department of Veterans Affairs should now give serious consideration to those servicemen who were present in Nevada and at Chalk River.

In 1982 the Minister of Veterans Affairs established a committee headed by Mr. A. D. McCracken for the purpose of endeavouring to shorten the time taken between an application for a disability pension and the time that a decision is reached. The McCracken report was made available to our committee and many of its recommendations have been implemented. Certainly the time has now been shortened, but I do not believe that it has been shortened enough. There is still too long a period between the time that a veteran makes his application and the time that he receives the decision as to whether or not he will receive a pension.

I also believe that many of our veterans should receive the benefit of the doubt. I cannot understand why the applications of many veterans are turned down by the Pension Commission but are passed later by the Appeal Board. Approximately 25 per cent of applications that are turned down by the Pension Commission are passed by the Appeal Board. Of the other 75 per cent of applications that go before the Pension Review Board, 25 per cent are passed. If those servicemen had been given the benefit of the doubt in the first place, they would not have had to wait two or three years before eventually having their applications accepted.

It is possible that the Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology can examine this matter to see if the process can be speeded up on behalf of veterans.

I believe also that many former prisoners of war who served at Dieppe and who were prisoners for two years or longer are not receiving a fair shake by the Department of Veterans Affairs. I know that prisoners of war in Japan and Hong Kong were treated badly, but nevertheless they are receiving a better deal than some of our ex-servicemen who were prisoners of war in Europe. I believe the time has come when the department should give further consideration to those veterans, to see if something can be done to assist them in the latter years of their lives.

Plans were made in recent years to set up a computer in Charlottetown, but because of the restraint program it had to be cancelled. Even if it were necessary to cancel that project, there should be some way for the records of veterans to be put into a computer, so that it does not take months for someone's records to be obtained. They must be available somewhere, and why cannot the few records that are left be placed in a computer? They would then be instantaneously available in Ottawa, Charlottetown, Halifax, or wherever the veteran might be living.

[Senator Riel.]

● (1550)

With these few comments, one might think that I think that there is a great deal that is wrong with the Department of Veterans Affairs. That is not so. I believe that the veterans in Canada receive better treatment than veterans anywhere else in the world. However, just because they receive the best treatment in the world, it does not mean that there is not room for some improvement. It is those improvements I want for the few veterans who are still with us, and I think it would indicate that we still remember them. The title of our last report, "They Served—We Care" shows how we as senators feel about our veterans in this country. I support the motion of Senator Marshall.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO STUDY IMPACT OF ITS REPORT ENTITLED "SOIL AT RISK—CANADA'S ERODING FUTURE"—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow, pursuant to notice of December 6, 1984, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to examine the impact of the recommendations contained in its Report on soil and water conservation in Canada, entitled: "Soil at Risk—Canada's Eroding Future", tabled in the Senate on 6th November, 1984, and to inquire into any matter related thereto; and

That the papers and evidence received on the subject and the work accomplished during the Second Session of the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the Committee.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Honourable senators, with the permission of the Senate, I would like to adjourn the debate until the next sitting of the Senate.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: We don't mind if you go ahead now.

Senator Sparrow: I mind, thank you. I wish to adjourn the debate.

On motion of Senator Sparrow, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

FIRST REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, Joint Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, presented the following report:

Thursday, December 13, 1984

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has the honour to present its

FIRST REPORT (Statutory Instruments No. 28)

Your Committee reports that in relation to its permanent reference, section 26 of the Statutory Instruments Act, 1970-71-72, c. 38, the Committee was empowered during the Fourth Session of the Thirtieth Parliament, the Thirty-First and the Thirty-Second Parliaments, "to study the means by which Parliament can better oversee the government regulatory process and in particular to enquire into and report upon:

1. the appropriate principles and practices to be observed,

(a) in the drafting of powers enabling delegates of Parliament to make subordinate laws;

(b) in the enactment of statutory instruments;

(c) in the use of executive regulation-including delegated powers and subordinate laws; and the manner in which Parliamentary control should be effected in respect of the same;

2. the role, functions and powers of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments."

3. Your Committee recommends that the same order of reference together with the evidence adduced thereon during the last three Parliaments be again referred to it.

Your Committee recommends that its quorum be fixed at four (4) members, provided that both Houses are represented whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, and that the Joint Chairmen be authorized to hold meetings to receive and authorize the printing of evidence so long as three (3) members are present, provided that both Houses are represented;

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such expert staff, and such stenographic and clerical staff as may be required.

Your Committee further recommends that it be empowered to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate.

Respectfully submitted,

Nathan Nurgitz
Joint Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: When shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE ON THE ENVIRONMENT

MEETING HELD AT NAIROBI, KENYA—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

• (1410)

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, December 20, 1984, I will call the attention of the Senate to the meeting of the Inter-parliamentary Conference on the Environment, held at Nairobi, Kenya from the 26th of November to the 1st of December, 1984.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO REVIEW ALL ASPECTS OF NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, December 18, 1984, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to review all aspects of the National Energy Program, including its effects on energy development in Canada;

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject and the work accomplished during the Second Session of the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the committee;

That the Committee be authorized to meet during an adjournment of the Senate;

That the Committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada for the purposes of this review; and

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be required for the above-mentioned purpose.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, December 18, 1984, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

He said: With the permission of honourable senators, I should like to say a few words about the schedule for next week. There is quite a large number of bills which were placed on the order paper today for second reading next week. It is our hope that we shall deal with them all by Thursday, December 20, so as to have Royal Assent that afternoon. With the sort of co-operation and goodwill that we have been used to receiving in this chamber, I have no doubt that we shall accomplish that.

There appear to be few, if any, contentious bills among these. I think most of them are hangovers from the previous parliament. If we do succeed in getting Royal Assent, it is hoped that we can rise on December 20 and adjourn until January 21. Is my understanding correct?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): That is our hope.

Senator Doody: Of course, if things do not proceed according to plan and some unexpected hitches arise, or unanticipated legislation reaches us from the other place, or, indeed, if we do not fulfil our work commitment in the Senate, we may have to stay a day or two later and perhaps come back a little earlier. But it is hoped that will not occur.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA-NEWFOUNDLAND OFFSHORE OIL AND GAS AGREEMENT

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, members of the Senate and the great majority of Canadians were pleased to hear the announcement yesterday that an agreement had been reached between the federal government and the Government of Newfoundland respecting the development of offshore oil and related resources. Honourable senators are no doubt aware that this is something that has been discussed for many years, dating back to the period of the Pearson administration. At that time preliminary discussions were held.

The information we have received so far is of a very general nature—so general, indeed, as to be somewhat mystifying to some Newfoundlanders and perhaps also to others.

Therefore, I would request, in all sincerity, that the Leader of the Government enlighten us regarding this matter beyond the bare bones of information that most of us received yesterday from the media, from the appearance on television of the two ministers, and from some of the reports carried by the press this morning. Can the Leader of the Government give us any additional information on this matter?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I thoroughly concur with the expression of satisfaction that I detect in the honourable senator's comments, that progress is being made in connection with the Canada-Newfoundland offshore oil and gas agreement.

I agree with him that the information available so far is not as definitive as he and others might wish. There has been a consensus on the fundamental concepts that go into an agreement between the two levels of government that is substantially the principles already agreed upon and outlined in the Atlantic Accord that was negotiated between the present Prime Minister and the Premier of Newfoundland some time during the summer. So, in terms of the broad outline of the agreement, they can be found in the terms of the Atlantic Accord.

However, a good deal of work still has to be done to reduce that accord to legal form, and I am told that it is not anticipated that it will be completed until perhaps the middle or the end of January. At that time it is hoped that there will be a definitive document that crosses all of the "t's" and dots all of the "i's", which will then be available for public discussion.

Senator Rowe: Honourable senators, as a supplementary, I remain a little mystified. The Leader of the Government has used the word "satisfaction" in respect of my earlier comments. At this point I cannot agree with something about which I know very little; and I am sure that applies to many Newfoundlanders and, indeed, to other Canadians. For example, the Honourable Pat Carney is quoted as saying:

● (1420)

We have reached agreement on all substantive issues.

The only thing that has to be dealt with now are some technical matters, so we expect to be able to return in January to further refine an agreement for early signing.

This does not seem to jibe with the statement just made by the Leader of the Government. As far as I am concerned, there are more than technical matters that have not been enunciated. The workings of the agency are referred to in this article. It will be a seven-member board with a neutral—which is not my word—chairman, and Miss Carney is credited with saying an "independent" chairman. How does that fit in with the seven members of the board? What are they? Are they independent, neutral or what? Does it mean that the chairman does not have the right to vote under any circumstances? Normally, it may not be necessary for the chairman to cast a vote, but there are always occasions when the chairman must exercise this right. Those are some of the things I was hoping the Leader of the Government would flush out for us this afternoon.

Senator Roblin: If I have misinterpreted my honourable friend and he is not satisfied, I certainly withdraw the allegation and take note of his dissatisfaction. I am satisfied to the extent that, after many long years of discussion on this matter, the two levels of government have reached a consensus on the terms under which such an agreement should be constructed. At this stage, I think that is a very satisfactory development.

I have to tell my honourable friend that I am not able to give him any more information than that, and I know that he really does not expect me to do so because, not being the minister in charge, I do not have information of the character he requires. If he has a specific question, and he mentioned one or two in his comments today, I shall do my best to get specific answers to them. The definitive agreement is expected sometime in the early part of the new year, and I hope that when my honourable friend sees it he will find that it satisfactorily answers most of the questions he has raised today.

Senator Rowe: Honourable senators, I would like to add a further comment to my earlier question. I would like to go on record as not being satisfied or dissatisfied with this agreement.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Then you are neutral.

Senator Rowe: I simply do not know enough about it. Until we know more about these details—and not the technical matters referred to by Miss Carney, but serious details—how can we express our dissatisfaction or approval? I shall simply have to wait and hope that I can get more information from the Leader of the Government or from other administrative sources.

Senator Roblin: I simply repeat that shortly after we return from the Christmas break I hope there will be made available to the general public and, of course, to members of this chamber, full information on the matter.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government has placed us in a very difficult position by not telling us the terms of the agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland. We have received absolutely no information from the Leader of the Government on this point, even though a request has been made by a representative of the Province of Newfoundland.

So I ask this question: In view of the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has stated that there has been agreement on a 62-clause pact between the Government of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada, would it be possible for the Leader of the Government to table that draft so that members of the Senate, and particularly the members for Newfoundland, would be able to see the terms of that agreement?

Senator Roblin: I do not think I have placed my honourable friend in an embarrassing position. After all, he is not constitutionally required at the present time to negotiate the agreement himself. When the agreement is negotiated he may have a constitutional opportunity and responsibility to examine it. However, I suspect that until the negotiations have been completed it would not be appropriate, nor customary, to have the negotiating papers tabled in this chamber. I rather think the minister in charge would not be inclined to do that.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government told us a few moments ago that he was greatly satisfied that an agreement had been reached between the two governments. He now tells us that negotiations are continuing. The minister responsible has stated there is a 62-clause pact which has been agreed upon, and we would like to see it. Will the Leader of the Government let us have a look at it?

Senator Roblin: I have no trouble in saying that I am pleased and satisfied with the agreement. If my honourable friend had listened as closely as he should, he would have heard me say that the agreement is substantially the same, in principle, as that which had been agreed to under the Atlantic Accord. That agreement is in the public domain and my honourable friend knows what it contains. I do not think it is reasonable for him to suggest he is completely ignorant of the topic when he is not. He can look at the Atlantic Accord and see what is in it. When the agreement has been completed in all particulars he will see that, too.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government is asking us to look at a document between the Leader of the Conservative Party and the Premier of the Province of Newfoundland. That was an accord reached at a time when the prime minister of the day had no authority to enter into any agreement. It is not an official document; it is a document between two leaders of the Tory Party. We want a document that carries the weight of the Government of Canada. I do not think it is satisfactory for the Leader of the Government to tell us to examine Tory literature in order to find out what is happening between two governments in Canada.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend wishes information instead of confrontation, then he should examine that document. It would tell him a great deal of what he would like to know.

I can tell the honourable senator that the agreement which is now being finalized is between two Tory politicians, again, the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premier of the Province of Newfoundland.

Hon. H. A. Olson: It is between two responsible governments, not two Tory leaders.

Senator Roblin: Quite so.

If my honourable friend does not wish to look at the Atlantic Accord—and I am not suggesting he should—then he can ignore it; it makes no difference to me. However, I will tell him he will get the information respecting this agreement when it has been finalized. I would really not encourage him to think that he is going to receive it before.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, if the best the Leader of the Government can give us is the Atlantic Accord, which is accurately described as a document between two Tory leaders, then will he agree to table it so that it will have the status of a public document and carry with it the weight of the government? Will my honourable friend do that?

Senator Roblin: No, honourable senators, I will not.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator MacEachen: The Honourable Leader of the Government is clearly in a very unco-operative mood. He has had a request from a Newfoundland senator for information, which he has refused. Why is it that senators are not entitled to this information? We are told by the minister herself that she called up the Premier of Ontario and outlined to him the main elements of the deal. Why is it that the Premier of Ontario can have this information while representatives in the Senate from the province of Newfoundland cannot? Are we to rely on a network of Tory cronies, and do we have to plug in through some Tory individual in the country to obtain information?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: We are not on a list of Tory cronies; however, we are on a list of provincial and federal governments that can co-operate and get things done in a way that my honourable friend's administration utterly failed to do.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

● (1430)

Senator Roblin: I understand his chagrin, but chagrin it is and that is all there is to it.

Senator MacEachen: That is a nice rhetorical point. We accept it. I want to know why it is that the Premier of Ontario can have a briefing on the elements of this accord while the representatives of Newfoundland in this chamber are denied that information. Tell me why that is the case.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend can find out whatever was said to the Premier of Ontario with no difficulty whatsoever. If he will ask me to find out what was said to the Premier of Ontario, I shall be glad to get him that information.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the Leader of the Government for that shift in his position. Would he please now give us an outline of the elements of the deal that were conveyed by the minister to the Premier of Ontario? He has said yes, and I thank him for that assurance.

Senator Roblin: I have not said that at all. What I have said is that I will find out what was said to the Premier of Ontario. What was said to the Premier of Ontario is not within my compass at the present time, and I undertake to do no more than that.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, apparently the Leader of the Government does not trust his colleague in the government who has said clearly that she has outlined to the Premier of Ontario the deal that was emerging. That is what we want to know: What is the deal?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend need have no doubt as to whether or not I trust my colleague. I trust my colleague a great deal more than I trust him—

[Senator MacEachen.]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): That is obvious; or more than you trust all honourable senators.

Senator Roblin: I trust my colleague to develop agreement with the Province of Newfoundland to the benefit of that province and to the benefit of the people of this country, that my honourable friend and his colleagues for years utterly failed to do. I will obtain the information that I undertook to obtain, and will abide by my statement in that respect.

Senator MacEachen: Then, what is the undertaking, so that we are clear about it? What information are you going to give us?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend wanted to know why he could not know what information was given to the Premier of Ontario. I will find out what that information was.

Senator MacEachen: We already know what it was, from the minister—the main elements of the deal. And that is what we want from the Leader of the Government.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has read the newspaper, yet he does not know what the minister said.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

THE DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT OF CANADA LIMITED AND CANADAIR LIMITED—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. Under what conditions is the federal government now prepared to sell to foreign interests the aircraft companies, de Havilland of Toronto and Canadair of Montreal?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, that question was raised recently in the other place. I shall obtain the minister's reply for my honourable friend.

JUSTICE

QUEBEC—APPEAL OF SPEEDING CONVICTION—DECISION OF MINISTER

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Could the Leader of the Government explain to the Senate why his government will oppose before the courts Mr. MacDonald's claim that he has a right to be issued traffic violation tickets in the English language?

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): That question was also raised the other day in the House of Commons. I shall be glad to obtain the minister's answer for my honourable friend.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: It wasn't very good.

Senator Roblin: That is a matter of opinion.

[Translation]

Senator Gigantès: As the Leader of the Government is certainly aware, this is a very sensitive matter. He used to demonstrate strong sensitivity regarding official language issues in his own province when he was premier. He was very generous. He was fully aware that one must strike a delicate balance when dealing with these issues, and he managed to do just that.

Could he tell me why his government will oppose Mr. MacDonald's request to receive these tickets in English—that was very reasonable for a Scotsman who could have asked for them in Gaelic? Why will it oppose his claim before the courts, when this opposition will serve only to confirm anglophones in areas such as New Brunswick in their opinion that a double linguistic standard exists in Canada, because the government has supported in the past similar appeals made by francophones and not by anglophones?

[English]

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has repeated the substance of his question a second time, but he has embellished his second question with a kindly reference to myself, which I am glad to acknowledge, because I don't often hear such references.

I must tell him the points he has raised are similar to those raised in the other place and I am content with the same answer I gave before.

[Translation]

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary. I have read Hansard. My question concerns what was done to an Englishman, or rather, for those of Scottish origin, to an English speaking Scotsman who is asking for certain legal documents in English. English is still one of the two official languages, and this situation could have an impact in New Brunswick where there are major problems in the very sensitive and unstable area of French and English relations.

This question was not raised in the other place. It is on this point among others that I would like an answer.

[English]

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has raised two different matters, the first dealing with the traffic ticket question in Quebec, which is a concern of the Department of Justice. That question has been dealt with in the other place. I will obtain the information.

With respect to the problem in New Brunswick, that, of course, is a provincial matter and arises because of provincial legislation and because of an inquiry that is being conducted by the government of that province.

I acknowledge that there have been some difficulties that have been encountered in connection with that inquiry. I think my honourable friend will agree with me, as will other honourable senators, when I say that I hope these matters can be resolved in a proper and appropriate manner with the same satisfaction to all concerned.

[Translation]

Senator Gigantès: I have another supplementary question.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: You are going to ask the same question for the fourth time!

Senator Gigantès: This is a very sensitive question. I believe that the Leader of the Government agrees with me. I also want him to assure me that arm's length attitude of the government is not prompted by an undue fear of creating problems in Quebec since the government of this province has enough problems as it is. We must take into account the fact that Quebec is quite willing to accept that people who speak English be served in English. There is therefore no problem.

The government could take any action it sees fit without offending Quebecers. I would like the assurance from the Leader of the Government that the decision to oppose Mr. MacDonald's request was not influenced by the very natural and very laudable desire of the federal government to have good relations with the government of Quebec.

[English]

Senator Roblin: I think I may say quite clearly that the actions being taken by the federal government are actions it considers to be proper from a legal point of view in the present circumstances.

There is no guarantee that its view of the law is correct; that is why we have judges to tell us what the law is, but I can assure my honourable friend that the actions being taken by the government are not influenced by any of the considerations he mentioned.

[Translation]

Senator Gigantès: Am I to understand that the Leader of the Government is saying that, when his government makes a decision on such a sensitive matter as this one, it does not take into account any possible consequences for federal-provincial relations?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I recognize Senator Corbin.

Senator Gigantès: I would like an answer, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: He does not have to answer.

[English]

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend needs a reply to that question, I would be surprised. I think he knows the answer as well as I.

Hon. H. A. Olson: We want to know your answer, not his.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A FRANCOPHONE COMMONWEALTH

POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATION

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I have in hand a copy of an article from this morning's issue of

Le Devoir under the title: "Concerning the summit on 'Quebec in the world'—Quebec and Ottawa to agree shortly on the establishment of a Francophone Commonwealth".

During that conference held in Quebec, the President of the Treasury Board, Mr. Robert de Cotret, along with five other ministers and parliamentary secretaries, has apparently involved the Canadian government in negotiations that would particularly favour the province of Quebec in that potential francophone commonwealth.

Upon reading the article, one finds no meat in it. This is why I have this question for the government leader. Would he be kind enough to tell us whether the Canadian cabinet has developed and defined its policy, its intended timetable and its role in the possible establishment of a Commonwealth of French-speaking nations?

Can he tell us now whether a policy has been developed in that respect, or whether the President of the Treasury Board fancied an extrapolation as to the possible entry and role of the province of Quebec in a Francophone Commonwealth?

● (1440)

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am pleased to say that the relationships between the federal government and all of the provinces seem to be improving markedly in these past few days, and I think that that must be a source of satisfaction to all of us in this chamber.

With respect to the point raised by my honourable friend, I have to tell him that I cannot give him an answer on the matter today, nor can I undertake to establish the validity of the newspaper report that he refers to. I think he would like me to ask the minister concerned whether the government can make a statement with respect to the francophone commonwealth and the government's attitude toward it, and I will do my best to get such information for him.

[Translation]

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government for his cooperation and his undertaking to obtain enlightening information on a matter that is pregnant with challenge for many Canadians.

When he enquires as to the possibility for a government spokesman to make a statement on this overall issue, could he make sure that we are also provided with information on the particular role intended for provinces other than Quebec that have a large French-speaking community? I am thinking for instance of my own province of New Brunswick, which has always been on an equal footing with the province of Quebec under the Cultural and Technical Cooperation Agency.

I would also greatly appreciate it if he would take heed of my representation and urge his colleague or colleagues to also enlighten us concerning the future relationship the Canadian government intends to maintain with the nine other provinces?

[Senator Corbin.]

[English]

Senator Roblin: I appreciate the point made by my honourable friend that the Canadian francophone community is not limited to the province of Quebec. It includes other provinces as well and the province of New Brunswick is certainly one of the most important. We have a substantial and significant French speaking population in my own province, so the point my honourable friend makes is well known to me. I will endeavour to include that in my inquiries.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

UNIVERSALITY OF BENEFITS

Hon. Jean Le Moyné: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. During the interview he has just given the newspaper La Presse, the Minister of Finance seems to have made rather disturbing comments concerning the well-to-do and social programs, particularly old age pensions.

Would the Leader of the Government tell us whether we are mistaken to interpret that as growing hostility towards the universality of social programs, or even as a premonitory symptom of the universal means test?

In other words, are the government's surgeons getting their patients ready for the stingy means test?

[English]

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, since I do not have a medical degree, my opinion on this matter is worth nothing.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You are enough of a poet to observe the metaphor.

Senator Roblin: As Senator Steuart has observed on a previous occasion, I am not allowed to have an opinion on this matter that is distinct from that of the government. I think the policy of the government is that we are very anxious to maintain the social welfare structure of this country. Its policy is that it is worth examining the possibility of ensuring that the money goes to those who need it the most. That whole topic will be the subject of public debate and discussion in this country in the next few months, and I am sure that honourable senators will want to take part in that debate.

METRIC CONVERSION

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government relating to the government's policies with regard to the metric system. From the campaign my impression was that the government was likely to follow a course of consumer's choice, let us say, or certainly withdrawing the thrust towards metric. I understand that there has been much consultation, and I am asking the government leader if he can bring us up to date as to whether or not these consultations have gone forward, to what extent they are going forward, and what the result of those consultations up to this point may have been, or what the information coming to the government may be.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can go no further than the reply I gave to the Deputy Leader of the Opposition two days ago with respect to the metric system. Probably what prompts my honourable friend's curiosity today is a newspaper report that he may have read with respect to the matter, but I am sorry to say that there is no advance information that I can add to that given to the Deputy Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): The decision has not been made, then.

Senator Argue: My interpretation is that from these consultations—and I am asking the Leader of the Government if this information is correct—generally speaking, or perhaps unanimously, the economic interests of this country have indicated their support for the continuation of the metric system. I refer to the construction industry, the dairy industry, teachers, the Retail Council of Canada, the Consumers Association and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. My question is: Has it been brought to the attention of the Leader of the Government in the Senate that all of these organizations are in favour of a continuation of the advance towards the metric system and are opposed, as I read it, to any dual system or any wide-open consumer's choice or the withdrawing of the thrust towards the metric system?

Senator Roblin: More important than having the matter brought to my attention, I am sure the matter has been brought to the attention of the minister concerned by some, if not all, of the organizations that my honourable friend referred to, and many others as well. I have to tell my honourable friend that he will have to wait until the minister makes a statement on the matter in order to satisfy his curiosity on the further point.

Senator Argue: I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate—and he is a member of the Conservative caucus—if it is possible, since I have read that an Ottawa Citizen survey of 42 members of the government party found that 37 of them are opposed to the metric system, that the difficulty that the government has is not with the economic interests in the country, but within the Conservative Party and within its own caucus where, I guess, the Neanderthals and those who do not want to make progress seem to be the vast majority.

Senator Roblin: When my honourable friend is willing to exchange views with me on the opinions of his caucus, perhaps I can do the same with mine—

An Hon. Senator: You wouldn't dare.

Senator Roblin: —but I do not think that he is going to do so. If he is interested in finding out the differences of opinion of members of the caucus, I should like to refer him to an article in this morning's Globe and Mail called "On Different Wavelengths" which recounts in some detail the fact that the caucus of the Liberal Party is having a very hard time making up its mind on a number of policies. I have no idea whether that statement is correct or not, but it reflects a common opinion.

Senator Argue: Perhaps he could read the article.

Senator Roblin: No, I am not going to read it aloud because I do not want to get into a long discussion.

I want to say to my colleagues in the Senate that I regret to say this because Question Period is one of the highlights of my day, but I wonder if I may be excused now because I have an appointment that I cannot neglect at the moment. If honourable senators still want to question me when I return, I will make myself available, but, otherwise, I ask for permission to leave the chamber now and have you proceed with other business.

● (1450)

Senator Argue: I am certain all honourable senators will agree that when the Leader of the Government in the Senate has important business, which he believes should take him from the chamber, we are not going to insist that he stay.

However, as he leaves the chamber, I want to say that, in my judgment of the economic interests of this country, going forward with metrication is in our interests in the export market, will make us more competitive—

Hon. Jacques Flynn: A revelation.

Senator Argue: It may be a revelation to the Conservatives, but it is not a revelation to progressive people.

Senator Flynn: Blah, blah, blah.

Senator Argue: Blah, blah, blah. The honourable gentleman keeps on talking. That is about the normal contribution he makes, so he is consistent.

The grain industry has a real stake in the metric system, and does not want to go back to something that will not help us keep our competitive edge in the export market.

Senator Roblin: I think my honourable friend's expression of alarm is exaggerated, unwarranted, unfounded and unnecessary. On that note, I will leave the chamber.

Senator Argue: That is the best answer the leader has ever proffered.

Senator Flynn: It was provoked.

THE SYMBOLIC APPLE

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I should like to address the Deputy Leader of the Government.

I should like to assure all senators of Irish descent that any reference to serpents in what I am about to say is not to be interpreted as having any relationship to people of Irish descent because, as everyone knows, St. Patrick chased the serpents from Ireland, so there cannot possibly be any serpent of Irish descent in this chamber or in any other place.

Honourable senators, I saw a splendid photograph of Mr. Mulroney offering an apple to Mr. Nielsen.

Hon. Hazen Argue: What was in it?

Senator Gigantès: I was wondering whether the honourable gentleman had considered the dire biblical and literary precedent for such a gift.

It does say in the Bible that, so far as the apple is concerned, "Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die." Of course, we know that this dictum was not obeyed and there was a fall from Paradise, which we all suffered. We would hate to have the same thing happen now.

I would also refer, of course, to the Trojan War when Paris gave an apple to Venus. There are no comparisons here as to who is Paris and who is Venus in that photograph.

I should like the assurance of the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate that he will warn the honourable gentlemen who appeared in that picture to be careful about symbolism.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 3, 1984-85

THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): moved the third reading of Bill C-16, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1985.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CUSTOMS ACT CUSTOMS TARIFF

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): on behalf of Senator Murray, moved third reading of Bill C-9, to amend the Customs Act and the Customs Tariff.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO STUDY IMPACT OF ITS REPORT ENTITLED: "SOIL AT RISK—CANADA'S ERODING FUTURE"—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Sparrow, seconded by the Honourable Senator Riel, P.C.:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to examine the impact of the recommendations contained in its Report on soil and water conservation in Canada, entitled: "Soil at Risk—Canada's Eroding Future", tabled in the Senate on

[Senator Gigantès.]

6th November, 1984, and to inquire into any matter related thereto; and

That the papers and evidence received on the subject and the work accomplished during the Second Session of the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the Committee.—(Honourable Senator Sparrow).

Hon. Herbert O. Sparrow: Honourable senators, at the outset, I want to state clearly that I am in favour of the motion, and in favour of the report, "Soil at Risk", being referred back to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry for further study in this session of Parliament.

In speaking to the report, I should like to begin by paying special tribute to senators who served as members of that committee during the last session of Parliament. I would make particular reference to the late Senator Dan Riley. He was a most industrious senator, a most valuable member of that committee, and, certainly, a fine gentleman. I am sure the Senate will miss him greatly.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Sparrow: I should also like to make particular mention of Senator Willie Adams who served diligently on that committee by travelling across the country when required for meetings. He, too, made a most valuable contribution.

As a member of the committee, Senator Martha Bielish also travelled with us across the country, enthusiastically donating her services. When the report was released, she made a special trip to her home province of Alberta to release the report, hold press conferences and attend interviews. Honourable senators, her efforts resulted in our report receiving excellent coverage in that province.

I should also like to pay special tribute to Senator Lorne Bonnell who performed the same function in Prince Edward Island. The report also received excellent coverage there.

Undertaking the same task in Manitoba, Senator Molgat's views concerning the work being done on soil and water conservation in Canada were given wide exposure on television, on radio and in newspapers.

Although he is not present in the chamber at the moment, I would express my appreciation to Senator Phillips, who was also a worthy member of our committee. He took responsibility for the exposure of the report in the Atlantic provinces.

Senator Le Moynes, who was the French-speaking member of the committee, was invaluable to us when considering issues relevant to Quebec. He has been a student of soil degradation and soil conservation for many years and has a vast knowledge of the problem, not only as it exists in Canada but throughout the world. His knowledge in this regard was most helpful to the committee.

Honourable senators, I should also like to make special mention of Senator McGrand who has also been a student of soil conservation and degradation, not only as it relates to his own part of the country, but also as it relates to other parts of Canada and to the world. His vast knowledge of agricultural issues as it relates to this particular question was most enlightening, and I thank him for his outstanding efforts. Since its inception, Senator McGrand has been an important member of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture.

Senator Sherwood, the deputy chairman of the committee, travelled throughout the country with us and he, too, made a zealous contribution. Senator Davey Stewart from Saskatchewan was, indeed, a valuable member of that committee. He released the report and held a news conference in the province of Saskatchewan. From his release of the report, the committee got excellent coverage, not only in Saskatchewan but throughout western Canada, where the problem of soil degradation is just as great as it is in any other area of the country. I extend my thanks, as well, to Senator Jack Marshall, who was deputy chairman of the committee at the time of the study on soil. He certainly gave the support that was necessary for us to have an extremely effective committee. Agricultural soils are rare, of course, in the province of Newfoundland, but, perhaps because they are so limited, they are crucial not only to Newfoundland but to this nation. Therefore, it was important that Newfoundland be represented on that committee by someone of the calibre of Senator Marshall.

● (1500)

Honourable senators, I wish to make special reference to the committee's research director, Mrs. Sally Rutherford. She worked a great many hours over days, weeks and months—many hours of overtime, as well—to provide us with information and background studies on the subject and to get that report out. I want to offer special thanks to Mrs. Rutherford. The committee also had working for it two research people from the Library of Parliament, Mr. Len Christie and Mrs. Lynne Myers, who worked almost full-time with the committee and made a very big contribution to the final report. The report is well written and is easily read by those concerned with all facets of the agriculture sector. It is to the credit of Mrs. Rutherford, Mr. Christie and Mrs. Myers that such a fine report was published.

Mrs. Aileen Collins, the secretary to the Agriculture Committee, was of great assistance to us and I wish to express my sincere appreciation to her and, of course, to Mr. Denis Bouffard, the clerk of the committee. This entire team, composed of senators and staff, brought out what I consider to be a very important report on soils throughout Canada.

Honourable senators, soil degradation is a serious national problem requiring national attention. Our soils are at risk. Our future is eroding. The issue of the day is soil degradation. Canada is facing the most serious agricultural crisis in its history. Unless action is taken quickly, this country will lose a major portion of its agricultural capability.

The Ontario Chapter of the Soil Conservation Society of America made this statement before the Senate Committee:

Soil erosion may well be the most underrated yet most damaging natural resource problem of the '80s. Must we wait for crisis conditions before action is taken to safeguard our scarce and dwindling soil resource base?

Why did the Agriculture Committee undertake this special study? The committee heard from many agricultural and farming organizations on various issues. Whether witnesses appeared from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Federal Department of Agriculture or its provincial counterparts, the problems of soil degradation, deterioration and conservation kept coming up as issues that were prevalent across the country. The Agriculture Committee began to realize that soil degradation was probably the most continuing pressing issue facing agriculture in Canada. What did we do? We decided that we would embark upon a special soil study.

In February of this year, the Agriculture Committee received special permission from the Senate to hold the hearings on soil degradation throughout Canada. We then decided, upon the advice of a number of senators, that we did not have the time nor the expertise—nor was it necessary—to try to find new information, facts or research on the problem. From our limited knowledge at the time, we believed that there was enough information out in the field, if it could just be brought together and given the basis of a national forum for purposes of discussion.

We then decided that, to get this information, we had to do two things. First, we had to bring to Ottawa people with special knowledge in order to gather the information they had from their own areas of the country. Honourable senators, these were specialists in the field. We brought them in and gleaned a great deal of knowledge from them.

We then made the decision to cross Canada, to cover most of the provinces, to learn at first hand and at the local level about the problems of those people in the agricultural associations, the institutes, and the scientific community, as well as the farmers themselves. From travelling across the country we also gleaned a great deal of knowledge. What did we find? As I mentioned, we found that there was a great deal of information in all parts of Canada about soil degradation, but that the information was being kept in a closed circle of agrologists and a very few farmers. Within the provincial departments of agriculture and in their federal counterpart, we found that the people with knowledge of the problem were terribly frustrated because they had no place to take the information. They had neither the funds nor the expertise available to take the existing technology to the farm gate, where it must be taken so that the farmers can use this technology to control and preserve the soils they have. We found that the frustration resulted because the agrologists, the scientists and the members of agricultural organizations were talking amongst themselves. There was no national forum to which their problems could be presented and brought out into the open and presented to the public at large.

The committee found that most farmers were conservationists at heart. They were not purposely destroying the soils that feed this nation and provide food to be exported throughout the world. They want to be conservationists, but at this time and place there is insufficient money coming from the production of food to allow them to be conservationists. In other words, they cannot afford to be conservationists. The cost input into producing those crops is so high that there is insufficient money left at the end of the season for them to conserve the soil. They need every possible dollar they can squeeze out of that soil to make a living.

Why is that so? I suppose that it is because of what we could call a "cheap food policy" in Canada. I do not know what that means, nor have I found anyone who can explain to me what a cheap food policy is. But the result of it is that the consumer in Canada pays a very small amount of his total income on food—it is the second lowest amount in the world. In Canada, approximately 17 per cent of the earned dollar is spent on food. Therefore, the consumer is not paying enough money to the farmer to enable the farmer to be a conservationist, even though he would like to be. When he leaves this earth, he would like to leave the soil a little better than he found it, but he cannot afford to do so.

What else did we find? We found that soil degradation affects all of Canada. There is no province in this country that is not affected drastically by this problem.

What is soil degradation and what areas of degradation are we talking about? We are talking about erosion—erosion of our topsoils, erosion by wind and erosion by water—acidification of the soils, and salinization, or the building up of salts in the soils of western Canada. We are also talking about compaction of the soils because of farming methods. Compaction will result from farming when the soils are too wet, from the removal of fences to form greater acreages of land, and from the use of heavy machinery, which will make it impossible for the root system to break through the crust and grow a proper crop. There are many other forms of soil degradation, such as mining, gravel, sand, land fill, highways, and so on. In addition there is the problem of urban expansion. Where did we find all of these issues? We found them all across Canada, but particularly in the maritime provinces. There, water erosion is so great that millions of acres of land have already been lost, and where there was good farmland and good soil, the soil has been moved off and the bedrock is now at the surface of millions of acres of land in that part of the country. Honourable senators from that part of the country will know what I am talking about. The life span of the soil in the Atlantic provinces will not last longer than 50 years if something is not done very soon to solve this urgent problem.

• (1510)

Most of the soil in Quebec, along the St. Lawrence lowland, is organic. In western Canada we have mineral soil, but in Quebec the soil is basically organic and is being farmed continuously on a monoculture basis. When soil is farmed to that degree, the organic soil becomes very fine and powdery, and in the fall of the year, when the ground is dry, the winds lift the soil and deposit it in the lakes, streams, rivers and oceans, and in the low-lying areas, where it is totally useless. That soil can never again be recaptured and used for productive purposes. If something is not done urgently to take this message into the Province of Quebec, as Senator Le Moine and others are doing, the organic soil that exists in Quebec all along the St. Lawrence lowland will disappear within 20 years.

[Senator Sparrow.]

Hon. Peter Bosa: How can that be stopped?

Senator Sparrow: By different farming practices; but I will speak about that later, when I shall be happy to answer any questions. In Ontario there is the great problem of soil erosion by water. Honourable senators from Ontario will recall that this spring many roads and highways were closed because of wind erosion. The wind took our valuable natural resource and distributed it in the lakes, streams and oceans—and that is happening all over Ontario. Let me refer to the crucial part of Ontario, namely, the Toronto area. If one goes to the top of the CN tower and looks outward, one can see 50 per cent of the number one and number two soils that exist in the whole of Canada. There are seven classes of soil in Canada. Those up to class four are regarded as usable for crop production. The remainder is used for pasture and as submarginal land. Standing on the top of the CN tower one can see 50 per cent of the number one and number two soils in the whole of Canada—not just 50 per cent of those classes of soil but also 50 per cent of production. It is even greater than that because if we consider the climatic conditions of the area and combine that with the best possible soils, we are talking about well over 60 per cent of the number one and number two soils in Canada. One can drive within two hours of Toronto and see the same thing as can be seen from the top of the CN tower. That is our most valuable soil. Land is being eaten up so rapidly by urban expansion—I will re-emphasize this later—that every ten years 3.5 million acres of land—about the size of Prince Edward Island—is utilized for urban expansion.

Western Canada has all of those problems, as well as others that I have mentioned. In the west there is an additional problem, namely, salinization of soil, which quite simply is a build-up of salts. In western Canada 50 per cent of the soil is affected by salt. Salinization of the soil is increasing in western Canada by 10 per cent per year, and is affecting 50 per cent of the soil. If different farming practices are not followed, 50 per cent of that soil will be lost in the next 40 years—50 per cent of our best wheat production land in western Canada. The remainder of the soil which is not affected by salt is affected by wind and water erosion, compaction, urbanization, acidification and the other factors that I have already mentioned.

Because of the topography of British Columbia and the type of rolling land that exists there, the soil in British Columbia has been devastated by water erosion. Millions of acres of land are being lost through water erosion and very little, if anything, is being done about it.

What can we do to deal with this problem? I will try to answer the question asked by the honourable senator a short time ago. I propose to read the recommendations and conclusions contained in the report word for word. That might bore honourable senators a little, but I would like that to appear in the record exactly as it appears in the report. There must be sufficient income directed into the farming community to assist farmers to become conservationists.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Sparrow: We must educate farmers to the fact that they should not limit themselves to single crop culture. We should encourage them to diversify their production by using forage crops and légumes rather than growing just one crop such as potatoes or barley all the time. They should be encouraged to build up a cover crop on the soil that would keep the water from eroding the soil and stop the wind from blowing the soil away. Cover crops are necessary.

At one of the first committee hearings in the maritimes reference was made to doing away with the moldboard plow. It was said that the farming community had to be convinced to dispense with the moldboard plow which had been used for many years. During a break in the proceedings I spoke to someone at the meeting who had in his possession some literature on farming equipment. I inquired about the moldboard plow and he showed me a picture of one. I told him that it was something that had been used in Saskatchewan 30 or 40 years ago. But in the maritimes they are still trying to convince the agriculture community to stop using that type of plow because it does not leave any cover crop on the soil. It flips the soil over and leaves it bare. The land is bare. They are trying to convince these farmers, and I am referring to Ontario as well as the Atlantic provinces, to stop using this equipment. We cannot get this new technology to the farm gate because the general public is not aware that the problem even exists and the farming community cannot afford to make the change. I am not saying that we in the west are so smart, because we have different problems, such as salinization, but we stopped using this type of farming equipment 30 or 40 years ago.

● (1520)

I come now to the conclusions and recommendations of the report. Rather than going through all the detail, I ask that the conclusions and the recommendations be made a part of the record.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of Committees conclusions and recommendations, see Appendix, p. 345)

Senator Sparrow: I would like to go through some of what I consider to be the more important recommendations. Recommendation No. 2 reads:

That a comprehensive federal soil and water conservation policy for Canada be developed and adopted immediately. It must (a) clearly state the Federal Government's intention to make soil conservation a priority in the development of all of its policies, programs or projects;—

What that means is that when a federal, provincial or municipal government takes any action relating to anything, they should consider as a priority the soil. For example, if the Department of Transport intends to build an airport or highways, will it build them on the best farm land in the nation or will it seek another location? If there is going to be urban expansion, will it cover the best farm land available or is there sub-marginal land where it could go? When the departments of Fisheries and Oceans, Environment Canada, Agriculture Canada and so on decide to do something, will they first consider what it will do to the soils of this country? So far this is not a consideration.

Of course, the provincial governments have a very important responsibility. We ask in Recommendation No. 5 that they strengthen and more conscientiously enforce their land use legislation to preserve agricultural lands. In No. 6 we ask:

That the federal government establish Soil and Water Conservation Institutes in Western, Central and Eastern Canada for the purpose of carrying out applied research.

Recommendation No. 14 asks:

That financial incentives be provided to farmers through federal-provincial agreements, appropriate to local needs, to help defray the costs of conservation practices.

Some of the other recommendations are: That agricultural and technical colleges increase their training of agricultural technologists to work in the field, that tax concessions be made to encourage conservation, that a Council on Soil and Water Conservation be established, and so on.

Soil degradation in Canada is costing $1 billion per year of income to the farmers of this country. Erosion in southern Ontario has caused a loss of 30 to 40 per cent in corn yields. Salinization on the prairies has reduced crop yields by 10 to 75 per cent, even after the increased use of fertilizer. I told you earlier that one statement I have already made I would repeat and I shall do that now: Every ten years Canada loses 3.5 million acres of farm land, equivalent to the size of Prince Edward Island, to urban expansion. Ontario loses 26 acres every hour.

What do we hope to accomplish from this study and the release of the report? First, we need more copies of the report, but that is another issue. Of course, it is extremely important that the agronomists and the farming community know that there is a problem, but what is perhaps more important is a national forum in which this subject can be discussed. That national forum is the Senate and its Agriculture Committee. Through this forum we have given this issue national scope and we cannot fail to use this forum on behalf of the agricultural community of this country. It is extremely important that we keep this issue alive. It is also important that consumers and citizens in general should be made to realize that this problem exists. If people are not informed, they will find that in a very few years, 30 or less, Canada may not be self-sufficient in food. If that should come about, the 17 per cent of their dollar they are now spending on food will easily double in a very short time because of the cost of importing products which we presently grow here. So it is extremely important to educate the public to encourage the agriculture community to do something and to encourage politicians, be they municipal, provincial or federal, to do something about this national problem.

Fifteen thousand copies of this report were printed. We have requested the printing of a further 10,000 copies. I have here a folder which holds the requests for copies of the report and indicates how the requests were made, whether by phone or letter, and the number of copies requested. The reason we did this was to get some indication of where the requests were coming from. I can say that they come from all over the country, from schools, universities, agricultural institutes, farm organizations, individual farmers and a multitude of people who are generally concerned about the problem that exists. We have the Club of Rome, an international organization directing its attention to soil conservation. The publisher of the Globe and Mail, who is the president of that organization, has written me asking that we send copies of that report to its membership which is composed of 100 countries. He thought it was such a valuable report that it ought to be sent out to these members.

Canada has gleaned a great deal of information from the soil conservation districts of the United States, and we have received many requests for copies from that country. Organizations from the United States have been very helpful to our agricultural industry, and if we can get a message across and have useful dialogue, it will help. The embassy of Israel has been in contact with us and wants to set up a liaison so that they can inform us on the problems they have faced in Israel and the problems they see in Canada with regard to soil degradation. We must keep the iron hot.

I will not get into the subject in detail, but there is much talk today about the hungry people in Ethiopia and in Africa. These people live on what was once very fertile land which has been destroyed in the past and is being destroyed now by poor farming practices, over-grazing and over-use of land. That is what is happening in Canada today.

I would end by saying that man belongs to the soil; the soil does not belong to man. If we can get this message across to the farmers and to our people, then we can help farmers to realize that as long as they are the stewards of the land, they must use the best farming practices available. Unlike the soil, man is not here for ever. If we can keep it here, the soil belongs to the people of this nation, and not just to this generation but to the generations to follow for thousands of years to come. However, it will not be there if we do not do something about the problems now. I thank honourable senators for their attention, and I hope the motion will be passed and the subject matter referred to the Senate Committee on Agriculture.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, before I adjourn the debate, I would like to pay tribute to the members of the committee and particularly to the chairman, Senator Sparrow, for the tremendous work he has done in helping develop this report and the fantastic work he has done literally from one end of this country to the other. I think this is one of the most interesting and timely reports to come from the Senate in a very long time. I thank him for his very able and dramatic presentation.

On motion of Senator Steuart, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, December 18, 1984 at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 343)

REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FORESTRY ENTITLED: "SOIL AT RISK: CANADA'S ERODING FUTURE"

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

CONCLUSIONS

Having heard and carefully considered the testimony of the witnesses who appeared before it, the Committee concludes that:

1. Soil degradation is a serious problem in all regions of Canada.
2. There is insufficient awareness of the existence and the severity of the problem within all sectors of society.
3. Because there is insufficient awareness of soil degradation, the solution of the problem has not been a priority.
4. Canada risks permanently losing a large portion of its agricultural capability if a major commitment to conserving the soil is not made immediately by all levels of government and by all Canadians.

Therefore, the Committee further concludes that:

5. Soil conservation cannot be dealt with in isolation from related issues such as water quality, land use, wildlife management, fisheries and forestry.
6. Because of the complexity of the issue and the ramifications that policies set at all levels of government have on soil conservation, a valid conservation effort demands policy and program coordination.
7. Existing policies, not necessarily directed at soils, can have the effect of discouraging good soil management.
8. There is a need for further basic research on the causes and effects of soil degradation.
9. There is also an overwhelming need for practical, on-the-ground research to determine (a) the costs of degradation to the farmer and (b) the costs and the benefits of the use of conservation practices on the farm.
10. While there is a great deal of information available about soil conservation, the transfer of this information and the accompanying technology to the farmer is the key to a successful conservation effort.
11. The practical technical information and expertise necessary to adapt conservation practices to individual farms is often unavailable to farmers because existing agricultural extension officers are overburdened, and soil management technicians are few and far between.

12. Farmers are often not able to underwrite the initial costs of some conservation practices without financial incentives or tax concessions.

13. Canadians must become aware that soil degradation has a major environmental impact, a potentially serious impact on consumers and an equally serious impact on the national economy.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Having reached the above conclusions, the Committee has determined that it is time for action. Therefore:

To establish a national commitment the Committee recommends:

1. That, because of its serious economic implications, the matter of soil degradation be added to the agenda of the next meeting of First Ministers, including Territorial government leaders, to demonstrate to the Canadian public the gravity with which all governments view the situation, to consider the recommendations of this report and to take action to implement them.
2. That a comprehensive federal soil and water conservation policy for Canada be developed and adopted immediately. It must (a) clearly state the Federal Government's intention to make soil conservation a priority in the development of all of its policies, programs or projects; and (b) require all departments to coordinate their efforts to make the most efficient use of resources and information.
3. That provincial governments also develop comprehensive soil and water conservation policies.

To begin to resolve policy conflicts, the Committee recommends:

4. That the Canadian Wheat Board modify the quota system to extend (a) full quota entitlement, at the "bonused" level of seeded acreage, to those remnant farmlands considered of marginal value for agriculture; and (b) partial quota entitlement, equivalent to current quota levels for summerfallow, to extensive tracts of unimproved pastureland which form integral parts of farm units.

5. That provincial governments strengthen and more conscientiously enforce their land use legislation to preserve agricultural lands.

To intensify conservation research the Committee recommends:

6. That the Federal Government establish Soil and Water Conservation Institutes in Western, Central and Eastern Canada for the purpose of carrying out applied research.
7. That the Federal Government provide greater funding for soil conservation research through the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council's Strategic Grants Program for Agriculture.
8. That the Federal Government use the Special Fund for Centres of Specialization Program in the Secretary of State as a model for a ten year program to develop regional centres of specialization in soil and water conservation at universities across the country.

To facilitate the transfer of technology the Committee recommends:

9. That the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration (P.F.R.A.) extend its activity into British Columbia, particularly the Peace River District.
10. That all Federal lands, especially Agriculture Canada Experimental Farms and Research Stations, be developed and managed according to good conservation practices and become conservation showcases for the nation.
11. That agricultural and technical colleges increase their training of agricultural technologists to work in the field providing assistance to the individual farmer, thus providing an important link in the transfer of conservation technology.
12. That the Skills Growth Fund of the Department of Employment and Immigration, be modified to include agricultural land-based occupations, specifically the training of soil conservation technicians.
13. That all provincial governments adopt legislation encouraging the establishment of conservation districts or authorities such as those which exist in Manitoba and Ontario.

To provide a more favourable fiscal climate the Committee recommends:

14. That financial incentives be provided to farmers through federal-provincial agreements, appropriate to local needs, to help defray the costs of conservation practices.
15. That accelerated capital cost allowances be permitted on capital expenditures relating to soil conservation, such as conservation tillage equipment, grass waterways, terraces, etc.
16. That land tax assessment notices in all provinces clearly show the basis on which the land is being taxed so that the owner is aware of the worth of the productive capability of various portions of the land.

To increase awareness and to sustain a national conservation effort, the Committee recommends:

17. That the Federal Government declare a National Soil Conservation Week to ensure that soil conservation becomes, and remains, an important national issue.
18. That Provincial Governments commit themselves to the introduction of soil degradation and conservation studies at the primary and secondary school levels through the addition of environmental courses.
19. That the Federal Government sponsor a National Conference on Soil Conservation to promote awareness of soil degradation as a national issue and to foster coordination and cooperation amongst all of those involved.
20. That a Council on Soil and Water Conservation be established: (a) to provide a neutral forum within which the participants can discuss the issues and the actions necessary to conserve Canada's natural resources; (b) to encourage improved coordination and cooperation between the participants; (c) to review methods of dealing with the needs and demands of particular sectors; (d) to aid in the prioritization of research and program demands; and, (e) to gather and disseminate information concerning conservation.

The Committee believes that if these recommendations are acted upon quickly the risk to our soils and to our future can be reduced—the time for action is now!

THE SENATE

Tuesday, December 18, 1984

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-8, to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

BUDGETARY DEFICITS—COMMITTEE STUDY—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, December 19, 1984, I will move that the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the magnitude and the impact of federal budgetary deficits and the associated public debt and that it consider appropriate policies relating to these deficits; that the Committee have power to engage the services of such professional, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the said examination; and that the Committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

UNIVERSALITY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to seek clarification from the Leader of the Government in the Senate on the policy of the government on social programs.

At present there is uncertainty and confusion, and I believe that in addition to the uncertainty and confusion there is also a great deal of fear about the future in the minds of the aged, the unemployed and middle-income Canadians.

To begin the questioning, I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether he will now acknowledge that the government has betrayed its promise made to Canadians during the election campaign on the question of universality of social programs.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): No, honourable senators, I will make no such admission.

Senator MacEachen: The honourable leader has not made it clear whether he is reluctant to make the admission of the reality, or whether no such betrayal has occurred.

May I attempt to elicit some answers from the Leader of the Government? Is it still the policy of the government as stated by the Prime Minister last March that:

We are in favour of universality of social programs, and it shall not be touched.

Is that still the policy of the government—that universality “shall not be touched,” as was stated by the Prime Minister on March 7?

Senator Roblin: As I suppose most honourable senators know, this topic has been the subject of some brisk exchanges in the other place, and the Prime Minister has expressed the policy of the government in that chamber. I do not think it would be realistic of me to attempt to enlarge or expand on his statement made in the other place.

Hon. H. A. Olson: What was that policy, in relation to the question asked?

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I must say that I cannot accept the view of the Leader of the Government that we must go to the House of Commons in order to hear the policy of the government. I understand that the Leader of the Government has already acknowledged that he is prepared to elucidate for his colleagues in the Senate—and, thereby, acknowledge the constitutional role of the Senate—the policies of the government of which he is a member.

So, I ask him the following question: Is it the policy of the government that the principle of universality shall not be touched in any way, as was stated by the Prime Minister? Can he answer yes or no to that?

Senator Roblin: The policy of the government has been expressed by the Prime Minister in the other place. If my honourable friend wishes, I will obtain a copy of the Prime Minister's statement for him so that he can inform himself of it.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, does the Leader of the Government himself know what the policy of the government is? Does he know or does he not? And if he does, will he tell us, because that will save him and the rest of us a great deal of time and will remove some of the uncertainty on this matter of universality.

Senator Roblin: The Prime Minister is the best spokesman with respect to government policy, and I will certainly be glad to get his statement for my honourable friend.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): But he is not in the Senate. You are here for the Senate.

Senator MacEachen: The Leader of the Government has not been able to tell us whether the principle of universality still stands. He has not been able to tell us whether, as stated by the Prime Minister, the principle of universality “shall not be touched.” The Leader of the Government cannot tell us yes or no, so I go on to ask him another question, this time with respect to statements made by the Minister of Finance. I do not intend to truncate the minister's statement at all, or attempt to distort it in any way. The Minister of Finance is reported to have said:

What we are saying is that there are people who don't need it—upper and middle income social programs cannot be afforded today.

Is that also the policy of the government? Is it now the decision of the Government of Canada that social programs applicable to the upper and middle-income Canadians cannot be afforded?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, that same matter has been discussed for two days now—probably a third day—in the other place, and the answers that were given then represent the policy of the government. I shall be glad to get those for my honourable friend.

Senator Olson: You are supposed to explain government policy in this chamber.

Senator Roblin: I don't make policy for the government; I answer questions.

Senator Frith: You are supposed to tell us what the policy is.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government has now again stated that he is unable to tell us whether it is the policy of the government, of which he is a member, that social programs cannot be afforded for upper and middle income Canadians. I find it rather surprising that the Leader of the Government should remain mute and should seek refuge behind the Prime Minister and behind the House of Commons. Surely he has some responsibility to this chamber to tell us what the policy of the government is.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator MacEachen: Is it the policy of the government to protect universality, or is it the policy of the government to remove social benefits from upper and middle income Canadians, thereby distorting and eroding the principle of universality? May I have an answer from the Leader of the Government on these points?

Senator Roblin: These points have all been dealt with in statements made by other members of the government, including the Prime Minister, and I will obtain those statements for my honourable friend.

Senator Olson: Do you know what those statements are?

Senator Roblin: The statements are available in the records of the House of Commons, and I will bring them to this chamber so that honourable senators may be made aware of them.

In Question Period I am not going to enter into a debate with my honourable friend on this question of universality. I will get the information that my honourable friend requests and place it before the chamber.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, if anyone on this side or on the other side of the house were a member of the House of Commons, that person would be entitled to address a question directly to the Prime Minister or any minister. That is a right. Is the honourable leader saying that members of the Senate do not have the right to ask questions of him and do not have the right to get answers? Is that his principle? If that is the case, he is taking us down the road to creating a Senate that will be meaningless. We come here and ask questions and we are referred to House of Commons Hansard.

I would ask the honourable leader to reconsider his position because if he takes that attitude it is one of sheer non-co-operation with his colleagues on this side of the house. He has asked for co-operation, but co-operation is a two-way street.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend must not put words into my mouth. I have never at any time made the least suggestion that members of this chamber are not entitled to ask me any questions they like. I am a member of the government and, therefore—

Senator Olson: We are asking—

Senator Roblin: Perhaps Senator Olson could be quiet for a while. I remember when he was Leader of the Government, and I must confess I learned some of my tricks from him. I have never at any time objected in a serious way to the members of the opposition posing questions to me. The problem is, of course, that as I am a minister without portfolio in the government I cannot answer those questions in the same way as members sitting in the other place can who have particular responsibilities assigned to them. My job is to answer questions when I can, and when I feel that I cannot do so in an adequate way, to take note of the questions asked and to provide answers at the earliest opportunity. That I will certainly continue to do.

● (1410)

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government has not been able to tell us whether the principle of universality still stands. He has not been able to tell us whether, indeed, it is the intention of the government to reduce social benefits for middle-income Canadians, as has been stated by the Minister of Finance.

I would ask him now whether it is part of the current approach of the Government of Canada, through the tax system, to redirect some moneys that are now being gained by upper income Canadians into the hands of those who need the money most. Has a decision been taken by the Government of Canada by which moneys will be taken from upper and middle income Canadians and diverted to those in the lower income brackets? That is a request for information. Is that government policy?

Senator Roblin: The policy of the government, respecting the general area mentioned by my friend, is to have widespread public consultation on these points. I do not rule out from those consultations the point my honourable friend makes.

Of course, we realize that, for a long time in this country, we have had in place a series of programs which are not universal in character but which are related to income. My honourable friend knows as well as I do what they are. So one has to be careful about defining one's terms in dealing with these matters.

It is the position of the government, however, that we will be considering a number of options or alternatives which might be considered in connection with the whole question of social policy in the country. When those consultations are completed, the government will announce its policy.

Senator MacEachen: Am I to take it from the last response of the Leader of the Government that all of these subjects are open? Does he mean to say that all of those subjects are up for consultation and that the Government of Canada has not made up its mind for or against universality, for or against removal of benefits from middle-income Canadians, for or against the redirection of tax moneys from higher income brackets to lower income brackets? Is each of these policy questions still up in the air, open for consultation? Is each of them a question upon which the government has not yet reached any decisions?

Senator Roblin: One must be very careful in answering a question of that kind, because there are certain principles of universality with regard to which the government has clearly indicated it is not considering any changes or it is not offering the area for rediscussion. I am saying that in certain areas—for example, the medicare plan—no changes are presently even under discussion. In other areas, I think it is fair to say that other options will be considered. I think it is appropriate that there should be widespread discussion on these points. I hope that, when the time comes, my honourable friend and his colleagues will make their views known, which they have not done in all cases so far.

Senator MacEachen: The Honourable Leader of the Government has quite correctly stated that his colleagues have excluded medicare from consideration. The statement made by the Minister of Finance on November 8 indicated that child benefits, old age security and unemployment insurance systems will be under review. We know that the government, the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister have already stated that no longer will benefits be available on a universal basis to recipients of child benefits and old age security. In the House of Commons, although it may not have caught up with the Leader of the Government, the principle of universality has been abandoned. It is no longer relevant—at least in the way it used to be.

I want to ask just one simple question: Does this abandonment of universality—this willingness to take away benefits based upon an income standard—now apply to unemployment insurance as well as to child benefits and old age security?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, my honourable friend should not leave the impression in this house that the principle of universality is now to be found in all aspects of child maintenance support. He knows perfectly well that is not the case, that in some aspects of child maintenance support it is incontestable, that it has always been incontestable, and that it will continue to be incontestable. That does not mean that the same principle applies to other aspects of child support. So one has to be clear. One of the great problems in the whole of this discussion is that we have yet to agree on a definition of the word "universality". Does it mean the same thing for everyone, regardless, or does it mean that everyone should be entitled to the same thing subject to the tax regime that follows? So the whole question of universality is one that needs a little definition before I get into a debate on the matter with my honourable friend. But I can tell him that, so far as I am aware, the answer to his question with respect to unemployment insurance is no.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Le Moynes: Honourable senators, it is hard not to believe that the government has quite a few ulterior motives.

Recently, it became apparent that the government had a secret calendar for cutting expenditures and social programs. Could the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate let us know why the government's intentions with respect to social programs were hidden from Canadians, especially since during the election campaign, the future Prime Minister kept promising open government?

[English]

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I do not accept my honourable friend's premise that there is a hidden agenda. I believe the agenda is on the table and that during the next few months, between now and the formulation of the next budget, we shall have plenty of opportunity to discuss that agenda in its entirety.

Senator Frith: It is now, but it wasn't during the election.

Senator Roblin: I do not think that the question, therefore, is apposite.

[Translation]

Senator Le Moynes: I have a supplementary. In his interview last week with the Canadian press, the Minister of Finance let the cat out of the bag when he implied that members of his party had kept quiet about their intentions because they were afraid their words would otherwise be twisted by proponents of the so-called "politics of fear".

Would the Honourable Leader of the Government not agree that the Minister of Finance himself is practising scare politics and that his government should make an effort to allay the concerns of elderly Canadians with respect to the universality of old age pensions?

[English]

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I will be glad to ask the Minister of Finance what kind of answer he can render to my honourable friend's question.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

HEALTH SERVICES—UNIVERSALITY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. Like most Canadians, each day I become more puzzled and worried concerning the fate of those Canadians in need of government assistance. My leader has just pursued a line of questioning, to which he received no answers. I am concerned because during the election campaign the Prime Minister said that universality of social programs was a sacred trust. But after the election he modified that statement by saying, in effect, "Oh, yes, but health services are still a sacred trust."

[Senator Roblin.]

My question to the Leader of the Government arises from something I read in the press during the last few days concerning a so-called secret meeting between the federal and provincial ministers of health. The press report seemed to indicate that the federal minister of health had agreed that the operation of provincial medicare services was under provincial jurisdiction and that therefore he would not interfere. Do I gather from that statement that the "sacred trust" of universality regarding medicare services has now gone by the board? Will the provinces be allowed to do whatever they like, to impose deterrent fees, service charges and so on, thus depriving the poor people throughout the country of what we once thought was a sacred trust, their right to health services?

• (1420)

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators I should make a comment on the first part of my honourable friend's statement in which he seemed to suggest that those in need in Canada might be adversely affected by policies of the government. I want to tell him that quite the reverse is the case. Those in need will receive greater consideration than they received before. That is already apparent in some of the measures this government has proposed to Parliament, and there is no doubt about it. So my honourable friend can rest easy in that respect.

In reference to the press report which my honourable friend has obviously been reading from, in which the Minister of National Health and Welfare made the statement about the meeting several months ago, the minister did not say that he was going to abrogate the laws that we have now—laws which make it clear that deterrent fees and that kind of thing will not be tolerated in respect of the calculation of medicare assistance from the federal government. He made no implication of any kind that this measure was to be disturbed. In fact, he did say that none of the provinces even asked for it to be disturbed. So the question of deterrent fees remains just as clear and as well-balanced in the interests of those at the lower end of the income scale as it has ever been, and my honourable friend need not worry himself in that respect.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I wish I could accept the word of the leader as being factual when it comes to services to the poor people. I shall restrict myself to my home province of New Brunswick and tell the leader that, in fact, the health services that were once provided to all people there, regardless of their ability to pay, have been done away with, and this is being condoned by the present government. It is all right for members of the government to state that we are going to do this and we are going to do that. It seems to me that in this government the Prime Minister does the public relations work while the ministers do the hatchet jobs on the poor people. I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate: Did the minister state what is in the press report as I read it, that he would not intervene in this matter, that provincial ministers would be free to run their medical services as they saw fit? Will the Government of Canada continue to pay 50 per cent of the costs of this program, if universality is not applied to medical services?

Senator Roblin: I regret that my honourable friend does not see fit to accept my words when I speak in this chamber. Sometimes I make an honest mistake, and when I do so I am only too glad to have it pointed out and to retract it. Otherwise, what I say in this chamber is correct. I certainly intend to speak accurately in this chamber, and I think it unusual that my honourable friend should make the statement he has just made. With respect to the question he asked, I can tell him that this government will implement the Canada Health Act just as vigorously and energetically as that act requires. That means that any province wishing to introduce a special charge of the kind my honourable friend spoke of will come under the jurisdiction of that act, which he helped to pass, and will suffer the penalties that are then to be imposed.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, what bothers me is that we have the Leader of the Government in the Senate and the ministers in the other place making statements which do not hold water. In the province of New Brunswick today, one who needs an annual medical examination is not covered by medicare and must pay a minimum of $35. Would the Leader of the Government not agree that in some cases in my province of New Brunswick there are people who cannot afford the $35 and are thereby deprived of medical services which are supposed to be provided on a universal basis under the Canada Health Act?

Senator Roblin: Of course, before dealing with the particular case, I would have to check into it and determine the facts. I can tell my honourable friend that there are a good many health services not covered by the medicare system. He knows that very well. Some provinces include them and other provinces do not. When they decide to extend medicare, for whatever reason, to a service that is not provided as a matter of course under the Medical Care Act, then the province is free to do what it likes. However, medicare services covered by the Medical Care Act are monitored by the federal government, and if the provinces break the rules then they must suffer the consequences.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, the fact of the matter is that annual medical checkups were included in medicare services in New Brunswick up until last year. It is something which is provided for in the Canada Health Act. Under that legislation the federal government pays 50 per cent of the cost of the checkup. Last year the Government of New Brunswick decided to restrict this service. Does that not constitute doing away with the sacred trust of medicare as accepted and passed into legislation by both houses of Parliament?

Senator Roblin: The concept of medicare is governed by the statutes of Canada. The statutes of Canada provide how the act should be administered and who is to administer it. The governing legislation provides for penalties if people do not operate the plan in accordance with the rules. With respect to this legislature, we have to concern ourselves with the laws we pass. The issue with respect to the provinces comes under their constitutional purview. Therefore, I must say to my honourable friend that our responsibility is to make sure that the laws of Canada with respect to medicare are carried out. That is exactly what we intend to do.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government arising out of the questions asked by Senator Thériault. In answer to one of my honourable friend's questions the Leader of the Government in the Senate, wishing to reassure Senator Thériault, said that Senator Thériault need not worry and that, in fact, what the present Minister of National Health and Welfare was saying was that those in need would be even better placed than under the present system. Can the Leader of the Government tell us how that will be determined? Will those in need be determined by being subjected to a means test?

Senator Roblin: When I made that reference I had in mind the plan of the present government to extend pensions to widows between the ages of 60 and 65.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: Although the legislation is not before us and I cannot say how it will be administered, I would not be surprised if it were administered in exactly the same way as the GIS which involves a means test, and which was sponsored by my honourable colleague's administration.

Senator Frith: So the reassurance with respect to the matter of those in need being better placed applies to pensioners' widows, but not to all citizens as referred to by Senator Thériault?

Senator Roblin: It applies not only to widows but to certain veterans.

Senator Frith: But not to all?

Senator Roblin: Why not?

Senator Frith: I am asking if it does.

Senator Roblin: It may very well do so. This is part of the matter under consideration. The thrust of the government is to see that those in need are better taken care of than they are now. I hope we will be able to do that.

Senator Frith: So do we. However, will that be determined by a means test?

Senator Roblin: That will be determined by the policy arrived at after the consultations to which I have referred.

Senator Frith: Is the question of the means test still open?

Senator Roblin: The question of the means test has never been off the table. The administration supported by my honourable friend administered means tests on many occasions and seemed to find it quite satisfactory to do so in certain circumstances. I would not be surprised if they were to do so again.

Senator Frith: We are not talking about the Leader of the Government's honourable friends on this side; we are talking about his honourable associates in the government. That is what we are asking questions about. This is Question Period and I take it the answer to the question concerning the means test as applied to those in need of medical services is on the table and open for consideration and consultation?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend is a very peculiar chap. He has no objection—

Senator Frith: Why are we talking about peculiar chaps? Can you not answer the question?

Senator Roblin: I will tell you why. When my honourable friend and his colleagues ask questions, they give themselves the liberty of covering a great deal of ground. They do not follow the procedure of the House of Commons with respect to Question Period by restricting themselves in the usual way.

● (1430)

Senator Frith: Isn't it too bad that my honourable friend is not in the House of Commons?

Senator Roblin: Then when I reply and, in a very modest way, make a comment about what my honourable friend has said, he finds himself disturbed that I have done so, the implication being that I am to answer "yes" or "no" and that is it. If the answer required is "yes" or "no", I shall say "yes" or "no".

Senator Frith: In fact, that would be fine. However, the fact is that the answer seems to be that I am a peculiar fellow, which may very well be true, and if the question—

Hon. Jack Marshall: Are you ever!

Senator Frith: Senator Marshall, says am I ever! Perhaps some day I may ask the question—although I think it will be out of order: "Does the Leader of the Government think that the Deputy Leader of the Opposition is a peculiar fellow?" That question would give him a clear chance to give a "yes" or "no" answer. I assume he will say yes. However, now I would like to know the answer to the question as to whether or not the question of a means test is on the table and open for consultation. Why is it so difficult to answer that question, and why is it necessary to make ad hominem comments about the person who asks the question?

Senator Roblin: I must say that is a very fair way of looking at it. I shall tell my honourable friend that if I said that he was a peculiar person, I used that adjective in a peculiar sense. I did not mean that I objected to him; I did not feel that he was strange; I did not feel that he was odd;—

Senator Frith: I take no objection; let's get to the question.

Senator Roblin: —I felt that he was loquacious at times, but on the whole, I find him a pretty good chap.

Senator Frith: —and now for an answer to the question.

Senator Roblin: In future, when I am referring to him, instead of calling him a peculiar fellow, I intend to call him a pretty good chap, and I hope that that will make him feel a little better.

As to the question—

Senator Frith: Finally! This will make me feel better.

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Roblin: It may very well be that in respect of certain matters any form of financing arrangement may well be discussed. The public will, of course, be invited to attend and if there are people who wish to raise the question of a means test, no one will stop them.

Senator Frith: So it is open for question? I have a supplementary, but I believe Senator Sinclair was on his feet.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: I intended to deal with a different subject.

Senator Frith: Then, honourable senators, in earlier questioning also by the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, the Leader of the Government did not deal with the questions asked, or felt unable to deal here with the questions asked about whether we could afford the social assistance and social programs that are given to middle-income Canadians.

May I ask him if he could determine for me whether at any time during the election campaign, any intimation was made by his party that, in fact, it was a matter of Conservative Party policy that those middle-income Canadians should understand that the country could no longer afford social programs for them?

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend expects me to answer that question in the affirmative, he must then afford me the privilege of finding out what his party did during the election campaign.

Senator Frith: Why is that? I do not understand that.

Senator Roblin: It is simple: Since I am here to answer questions on behalf of the government, I shall—

Senator Frith: Can't you just tell me what happened first?

Senator Roblin: You are asking me what went on during the election campaign. That means reviving the whole of that debate.

Senator Frith: Fine; do that, but first deal with the question about the Tory campaign—

Senator Roblin: Perhaps we should ask what the Leader of the Opposition in the other place had to say about universality; perhaps we might ask what Don Johnston had to say on the subject. I am not going to answer my honourable friend's question. I only intend to answer questions on matters having to do with the government itself.

Senator Frith: You are not going to answer that question?

Senator Roblin: No, and there will probably be a good many more that I shall not answer.

Senator Frith: It is too embarrassing for you to do so.

Senator Roblin: I shall withstand it, I am sure.

INVESTMENT CANADA

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—TERMINOLOGY

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It arises out of the desire of the government to clarify the position of investment in the country for foreigners. I might point out that the word "clarify" was used in the financial statement of the Honourable Michael Wilson on November 8 last and in the speech made by the Prime Minister at the New York Economic Club one week ago. At that time, the Prime Minister said that his aim was to make it easy for people to invest in Canada.

My question is this: Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell me what is the difference between "significant" benefit and "net" benefit?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am afraid I am not able to oblige my honourable friend.

Senator Sinclair: I would point out to the Leader of the Government that in the old FIRA Act and in the new Investment Canada Bill, when dealing with the factors to be taken into account, the two acts are the same, word for word, except for "significant" benefit and "net" benefit. In order to understand the statute, it is absolutely essential to understand what the difference between those two words is, and I would ask my honourable friend if he would help me in this matter.

Senator Roblin: I think my honourable friend is right in saying that there is that difference between the present statute and the proposed one. When the proposed statute is presented in the Senate, we shall have an opportunity to examine every feature of it, including this one. We shall be able to take the new statute to committee and obtain thorough explanations of the various definitions my honourable friend requests. However, I do not intend to debate that statute now.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Provided it wasn't dealt with in the House of Commons!

Senator Sinclair: I have a supplementary question for the Leader of the Government, if I may. As far as I can see, it is just a matter of straight English and I would hope that the honourable leader could help me since he has had a great deal more experience in this area than I have. Perhaps he could tell me the difference between "significant" and "net" as applied to the noun "benefit"?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend has completely destroyed the credibility of his question by saying that I am more experienced in these matters than he. I have to say that there is probably no one in Canada who is more experienced in these matters than he is, and I am sure that, when these matters come before the committee, he will be able to pose the questions that will satisfy his legitimate request for a definition in this respect. However, it is not a matter for Question Period.

NATIONAL REVENUE

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN CORPORATE TAXES

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government whether or not the government has received a submission from Mr. Albert Cohen of Winnipeg indicating that corporate taxes should be substantially increased?

While he is looking into that matter, I wonder if the Leader of the Government could also find out whether Mr. Cohen was able to obtain an endorsement for his proposal from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Both my honourable friend and I have the privilege of knowing Mr. Cohen and I think we both understand that he is a generous, public-spirited citizen who made a proposal at a meeting of his company in Winnipeg the other day, I believe, that there should be a 2 per cent increase in corporate taxes for three years in order to assist the government with its financial problems. As far as I know, that is the only reference that can be found with respect to Mr. Cohen's suggestion.

I can also confirm what my honourable friend inferred, namely that Mr. Cohen did not obtain support from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce for this idea.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Being another Manitoban, I am wondering whether the Leader of the Government in the Senate would support Mr. Cohen in that suggestion?

Senator Roblin: When government policy with respect to taxation is announced, we can deal with that matter.

ABANDONMENT OF PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I would ask him if it is the intention of the government to honour that sacred promise made to the petroleum industry of Alberta that the present government would abandon the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax? I ask this question in light of the fact that, in the first six months of 1984, the net income to this industry from operations rose 40 per cent to $1.7 billion; the internal cash flow increased by 24 per cent to $4.9 billion in the same period; well-completions are up to 8,800 for 1984 and the metres drilled will total over 10,000. That will equal the record year of 1980 insofar as activity is concerned.

I simply ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate: Is it the intention of the government to abandon the PGRT, as promised to industry by the Prime Minister?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The exact position of the PGRT is at present a matter that is under consideration by the administration. I imagine they are also consulting with others. Therefore, I am not able to make an announcement about the matter at the present time.

Senator Hastings: I was merely asking if it is the intention of the government to fulfill the promise made to the industry in that regard?

Senator Roblin: When I have a decision on that matter to announce, I shall give it to my honourable friend.

● (1440)

THE SENATE

QUESTION PERIOD—GOVERNMENT APPROACH

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate which refers to the ground rules, in a sense, for Question Period.

On Thursday last, when Senator MacEachen was addressing questions to the Leader of the Government concerning the arrangement between Canada and Newfoundland with regard to offshore resources, the Leader of the Government in the Senate referred to the Atlantic Accord, and said that that accord was in the public domain and that Senator MacEachen should take full cognizance of it.

Today we were told by the Leader of the Government in the Senate that statements made by, and deeds done by, the Prime Minister and other current ministers of the Crown prior to the election, or indeed prior to the formation of the government, are irrelevant for our understanding of what the policies of the government now are.

My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is: Is his approach the one that he followed last Thursday, or is his approach the one that he has adopted today?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I think that when I was speaking last Thursday the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate made it perfectly clear that he regarded the Atlantic Accord as irrelevant, because he certainly did not regard that as the basis for government policy.

If I had to decide on this question, I think I would have to say that material that formed part of the election campaign is not material for which I feel I have any particular responsibility here. In fact, when the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate asked me if I would table that accord, I said "No," which indicated my feelings on that matter.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, does this mean that in the view of the Leader of the Government in the Senate things that were said during the election campaign are really of no value in understanding the aims of government policy today?

Senator Roblin: No, I would not say that. I would say that if we were having a debate on the Newfoundland oil proposition, any statement made in respect of that would be fair game for someone to deal with.

During Question Period, when I am supposed to be giving brisk, crisp answers to brisk, crisp questions, it is not—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Any answer will do, for starters.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend receives the kinds of answers he deserves.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate is now taking a position which is really quite out of line with the one that he took last Thursday, when he leaned very heavily on election campaign material. It would be very helpful to all honourable senators if they knew how far back relevance for questions applies. Is material mentioned prior to the election relevant or not?

Senator Roblin: Like my honourable friend, I am allowed to change my mind occasionally. I allow him to change his. I simply answer the questions as best I can. If I am guilty of some inconsistency from time to time, I confess that that is a fault of human nature.

EMPLOYMENT

NANNIES—REMUNERATION

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. My daughter is a working mother with two children and is in the market for a nanny. As we all know, most nannies come from abroad. That is where the federal government gets into the act, and it has laid down rules as to how much one is to pay a nanny.

My daughter advises me that the present rule is that nannies are paid $589 a month, which comes to $7,068 a year, but in fact the going rate for nannies is slightly more than $600 a month.

Is it government policy that when private citizens are paying for nannies the rule is $589 a month, or $7,068 a year, but when the government pays for nannies the rule is $18,000 a year, and if that is government policy, how does that fit in with the government's austerity program?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think what that probably indicates is that the person my honourable friend is referring to as a "government nanny" is not such but is something else.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): She is an interfacer. If you get her to interface, she is something else.

Senator Godfrey: When my daughter obtains a nanny, she will do more than nannies are expected to do.

Senator Roblin: I do not think I will follow that line of questioning any further!

THE SENATE

QUESTION PERIOD—GOVERNMENT APPROACH

Hon. Peter A. Stollery: Honourable senators, my question is supplementary to that asked by Senator Stewart. I wish to clarify the answer. Is the Leader of the Government in the Senate saying that, as the spokesman for the government in the Senate, he has no responsibility for anything that was said during the election campaign—which is one way of trying to understand what the new government is trying to accomplish—and that what was said by the members of the Conservative Party during the election campaign is not relevant and is something that we should not address ourselves to any more?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): If my honourable friend will cast his mind back a little, he will recall an election campaign which was won by his own party—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): And, boy, did we hear about it! For four years we heard about that when you were asking the questions from here.

Senator Roblin: I can tell my honourable friend that he has the wrong election. I want to put him straight; the election I am talking about is the one in which the government campaigned on the policy of no wage and price controls.

Senator Frith: We heard about that one, too.

Senator Roblin: As soon as they got into office, they reversed their policy and brought in wage and price controls.

Senator Frith: I remember that one, too.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: That wasn't a sacred trust.

Senator Frith: We never promised a sacred trust.

Senator Roblin: The present Leader of the Opposition in the Senate and his colleagues entered into a sacred trust with the people of Canada during an election campaign when they said that the increase in gasoline taxes would be less than 18 cents. Well, everybody knows what happened then.

Senator Frith: Did you tell us about that for four years! Wasn't that relevant during Question Period?

Senator Roblin: The Honourable Senator Hastings referred to the tax take under the gasoline regime we have now, and that certainly amounts to more than 18 cents a gallon. So, the whole question is a political one, as my honourable friend knows, and politicians will deal with those matters as best they can. My honourable friends have had their turn; now we have ours.

Senator Stollery: Are honourable senators to understand that, without at all accepting the preamble in the response of the Leader of the Government in the Senate—because those are really arguments that go back quite a few years—you are using that preamble, if it were true, as an excuse to do what you said you were going to do a few minutes ago, which is to not consider what was said during the election campaign as a relevant element of Question Period in the Senate?

Senator Roblin: I did not say it was not a relevant element of Question Period in the Senate. What I said was I would not—

Senator Frith: You definitely did.

Senator Roblin:—produce the information my honourable friend sought.

Senator Frith: No, you didn't.

Senator Roblin: If I didn't say that—

Senator Frith: You said it is relevant during debate but not during Question Period.

Senator Roblin: That is right, and I am not going to give the answer to it on that ground.

Senator Frith: Then the answer to Senator Stollery is, "Yes, he is saying that."

THE ECONOMY

FOREIGN INVESTMENT—COMPETITION

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, my question is slightly different because the Leader of the Government will not have to make any reference to the House of Commons, and neither will the answer be contained in Hansard of the other place.

Under the new policy of the government with respect to Investment Canada, a large company in the pizza-making business wants to move into Winnipeg, which is located in my home province of Manitoba, which is also the home province of the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

My question is: Has the cabinet or a committee of cabinet conducted a study of that move, because that company will bring nothing to Canada except competition for local pizza houses located in Winnipeg?

Has the cabinet or a cabinet committee—and you do not have to give me any details or let any secrets out, but just answer yes or no—conducted a study as to the economic effects that will have on other pizza houses in Winnipeg? If that is allowed to happen, that will mean many people will lose their jobs.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): If my honourable friend is talking about a pizza palace operation, which has already been subjected to the FIRA examination—and which the government has decided on—and I presume he is, from his shaking his head—then I can tell him that each one of those applications at the present time, no matter how large or small, does receive a study involving the economic effects. Therefore, the answer to my honourable friend's question is that that matter was considered in the FIRA examination.

● (1450)

Senator Guay: We had a study pertaining to all of FIRA's applications in the past, but my particular question is: What effect will it have on a similar business in Winnipeg? If the answer is not available today, perhaps one could be obtained. No doubt the outcome will have an effect on those who are already in business in Winnipeg and perhaps more people will be put out of work.

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend probably knows that the investigations made under FIRA are confidential. The people who apply do so under terms and conditions that they are confidential. Therefore, I cannot obtain the information that he requests.

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I point out to the Leader of the Government, who has said that he has no delayed answers to questions, that I have a question on the order paper going back to November 29. It has to do with the elections in Nicaragua, and it has not been answered. I asked another question on December 5 having to do with the green and white papers on defence policy. I understand that since I asked that question the Minister of National Defence has made some statements to his colleagues at a NATO meeting in Brussels. I have not seen the text of his remarks, but I understand that even they are somewhat imprecise as to the exact time schedule for the publication of these papers. In any event, I think that the answer to this question about the papers on defence policy ought to be part of the record of this chamber regardless of wherever else the matter may have been referred to. I would invite the Leader of the Government to provide answers to both these questions when he can do so.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I can tell my honourable friend that I hope to be able to give him the answer to the first question about the elections in Nicaragua, before we rise for the Christmas recess. The other question is bound up with some other activities of the government, so I cannot give him a proper answer. I have not lost track of it, but I am simply unable to provide the information at present.

Senator Hicks: That is fair enough.

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Martha P. Bielish moved the second reading of Bill C-5, to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act.

She said: Honourable senators, it is my pleasure and privilege to move second reading of Bill C-5 which proposes an amendment to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act to increase the permitted borrowing limit of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation to $30 million from the present level of $20 million.

As I am sure honourable senators will recall, a bill similar to this one came before our chamber on Tuesday of last week, the intent of which was to raise the borrowing limit of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation. The situation that gave rise to the necessity to increase the borrowing limit of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation parallels in many ways the situation giving rise to the problem that is facing the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, although the head offices of these two corporations are approximately 5,000 kilometres apart and, of course, different types of products are involved.

If I might briefly review the situation, the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was created in 1969, mainly at the request of the prairie provinces, at a time when there was general concern over the recurrent price weaknesses for freshwater fish.

At that time, with the exception of the Great Lakes, the marketing, processing and exporting of freshwater fish was traditionally carried out by many small firms across central Canada. As most of the freshwater fish production was exported to the United States, this fragmented group of Canadian exporters was usually at a disadvantage when attempting to deal with the large and powerful American importers. This resulted in wide fluctuations in prices during the season which, in turn, created instability and uncertainty among operating firms and the fishermen. It is no exaggeration to say that the fishermen, the majority of whom are native people with no alternative source of income, felt abandoned and exploited.

Establishment of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was based on the philosophy that returns to freshwater fishermen could best be increased through the establishment of a single selling body with the exclusive right to market and trade in fish in the interprovincial and export trade.

Through the corporation, which has its headquarters at Winnipeg, freshwater fish is now being marketed in an orderly manner with none of the fluctuations in earnings experienced by fishermen in earlier years. The corporation is also promoting and expanding in international markets, not only in the United States, which has been the traditional market, but also in European countries.

The corporation handles virtually all freshwater fish produced in Canada outside the Great Lakes, which amounts to about 50 per cent of Canada's total annual production. The area of operations, covering more than 5 million square kilometres, includes northwestern Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Northwest Territories. In those regions, the corporation buys fish either directly from fishermen or through agents, establishes initial prices for fishermen, packages and processes fish and markets them at home and abroad. About 90 per cent of all this fish is exported, and most of that goes to the United States.

I would like to emphasize that the corporation is obliged to operate on a self-sustaining basis. At the beginning of the season it establishes an initial price which, in practice, is a floor price for the operating season. Any additional returns from the market are passed on to the fishermen at the end of this season or when the product is sold from inventory.

• (1500)

When the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was first set up in 1969 the borrowing limit was set at $5 million. This ceiling was raised to $10 million in 1970 and to the current level of $20 million in 1974. Needless to say, since 1974 market prices along with operating costs, cost of fuel, wages, et cetera, have risen steadily. There is now a demonstrated need to adjust the borrowing limit upwards.

In its most recent five-year plan the corporation predicts that its working capital and fixed assets requirement will exceed $20 million in fiscal year 1985-86 and that within a year the requirement will be in the region of $24 million. I feel it significant to point out that the initial payment made by the corporation—that is, the amount of money paid out to the 3,500 fishermen in the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation area at the start of this season based on predicted market prices—has jumped from a total of $9 million in 1974 to more than $20 million in 1983.

In this regard, honourable senators may have noticed from a recent press release issued by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans that the total sales of the corporation in 1983-84 were in excess of $44 million, which I am pleased to say is a record high in sales.

I would like to stress that the corporation draws its working capital through loans from the Minister of Finance. That is the only source of its loans and it cannot exceed the established ceiling.

Another point I would like to stress is that the corporation, under its mandate, is obliged to purchase all of the fish offered to it by the fishermen who operate in the territory for which it has responsibility. It would, indeed, be unfortunate if these hard-working fishermen, operating in many remote areas of Canada, should be forced to suffer as a result of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation's being saddled with insufficient working capital. That situation will not arise if the amendment to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act, now before honourable senators, receives the approval of this chamber. I trust that honourable senators will take that action with a minimum of delay.

On motion of Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

PUBLIC WORKS ACT PUBLIC LANDS GRANTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. David Walker moved the second reading of Bill C-13, to amend the Public Works Act and the Public Lands Grants Act.

He said: Honourable senators, in dealing with this bill I trust that I will be as short as they were in the House of Commons. Bill C-13 was passed through the House of Commons yesterday, in all stages, with no amendment. It was referred to the Committee of the Whole, was still approved of in its present form, and was sent to this chamber.

Honourable senators, Bill C-13 is basically a housekeeping bill which will give the minister authority to do what he has been doing in the past. I do not know how he has done what he has, but now, if this bill is passed, he will have legislation to support his actions. At any rate, the bill covers a minor point. This bill's predecessor, Bill C-91, was pushed aside for matters which were considered to be more important, and I believe that both parties in the House of Commons were responsible for that.

I will describe to honourable senators how small—how almost unimportant these changes are. Clause 1 of the bill seeks to amend section 9 of the Public Works Act by adding the following subsections:

(3) The Minister may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, incur expenditures or perform, or have performed, services or work in relation to

(a) properties belonging to Canada of which he does not have the management, charge or direction; or

(b) properties not belonging to Canada.

(4) No services or work may be performed under subsection (3) in relation to properties not belonging to Canada without the consent of the owner thereof.

One would have expected those provisions to have been in place long ago, but in reality they are being put in place now. This amendment is just as simple as it appears—there is nothing behind it. It is perfectly proper that the owner be consulted and that his consent be obtained.

Clause 2 of the bill adds a new section to the Public Works Act, which reads as follows:

39.1 Notwithstanding anything in this Act or in any other Act, any public work may be leased or otherwise disposed of for a term, under the authority of the Governor in Council, if Her Majesty obtains the right to occupy the whole or part of the public work for the term or a part thereof; and the proceeds of such lease or other disposition shall be accounted for as public moneys.

One would also have expected this amendment to be contained in the original bill, and it is a wonder that it was not.

The third amendment outlined in Bill C-13 has the same effect on the Public Lands Grants Act as the second amendment has on the Public Works Act. It is identical in purport to the clause I have just read.

Honourable senators, those are the amendments contained in this bill. They have been overlooked for a long time. It had often been proposed that such a bill be enacted, but action was not taken until recently. In short, Bill C-13 has been drafted to improve on the current Public Works Act and Public Lands Grants Act.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, one former Minister of Public Works having spoken on this bill, I move the adjournment of the debate in the name of another former Minister of Public Works, Senator LeBlanc.

Senator Walker: Is it possible that he speak today in order to get this matter cleared up?

Senator Frith: No, it is not possible to do that today, honourable senators.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator LeBlanc, debate adjourned.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS INTERPRETATION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Lowell Murray moved second reading of Bill C-10, respecting the interpretation of Canada's international conventions relating to income tax and the acts implementing such conventions.

He said: Honourable senators, while this is the first time that the subject matter of this bill has come to us in the form of legislation, it has been the subject of three Ways and Means motions, the first in June, 1983, the second in April, 1984, and the third last month. Therefore, I believe it fair to say that the provisions of the bill and the need for this legislation are reasonably well known to parliamentarians.

The need for the bill arises from a Supreme Court of Canada decision in the case of the The Queen v. Melford Developments Ltd.. I do not believe it is necessary for me to detain honourable senators at this point with a recitation of the facts of that case. Suffice it to say that the court ruled against the Department of National Revenue in such a way as to upset many of the assumptions under which the department had been operating for some time, and in a way that threatened to introduce some chaos into the administration.

The effect of the Supreme Court ruling is that words and expressions in Canada's international tax conventions, that were not otherwise defined, were to be interpreted according to their meaning under domestic law at the time the particular convention was adopted, and not their meaning at the time the transaction, which gave rise to the tax, took place.

I repeat that the effect of the interpretation would have been somewhat chaotic in the administration of our tax laws, and it certainly upset the previous interpretations of the Department of National Revenue to the effect that the meaning of terms in the tax treaties would evolve with amendments to Canadian legislation. It meant that the same word used in different treaties, signed at different times, could have a different meaning depending upon when the treaty was adopted. It would also mean that tax treaties would be interpreted in accordance with old Canadian tax laws, even though the taxes were being levied under current domestic tax laws.

Let us take, for example, the term "dividend". If one were calculating the tax payable on a dividend paid by a Canadian company to a resident of a country with whom Canada had a tax treaty, one would have to look back to the meaning of the word "dividend" in Canadian law at the time the convention was adopted. In the case of some of the older treaties, it would mean that one would have to look back to the meaning of the term "dividend" in Canadian law some time in the 1940s or the 1950s.

The bill seeks to correct those anomalies, and provides basically that for the purpose of Canadian taxation the terms of a convention are to be given the meaning that they have under the Income Tax Act as amended from time to time. I may say that these provisions apply to words or expressions that are not fully defined in the conventions themselves, or where the convention provides that the meaning of that term is to be determined by reference to Canadian legislation.

The bill also provides that non-residents who carry on business in Canada through a permanent establishment are to determine their business profits in accordance with the rules governing resident taxpayers under the Income Tax Act. This provision addresses a concern arising out of an interpretation of a provision in a number of Canadian tax treaties relating to the deductibility of business expenses.

The concern was and is that the present wording would allow a deduction for expenses, including those that by their nature are not allowed under domestic legislation.

The bill also contains a definition of certain terms that are found in most of Canada's tax conventions. The term "Canada" is defined in a manner consistent with the definition found in the Income Tax Act. It will clarify that "Canada" includes not only the territory of Canada but also the sea bed and subsoil adjacent to the coast of Canada over which Canada has jurisdiction.

The bill also contains definitions of the terms "immovable property" and "real property". Most of Canada's conventions have specific provisions dealing with immovable or real property. This will clarify that the expressions "immovable property" and "real property", when used in such conventions, will include any royalty or profits interest in property that is treated for Canadian tax purposes as a Canadian resource property. These definitions are consistent with those found in the new Canada-United States tax convention.

Finally, the bill provides that its measures will come into force with respect to either payments made after June 23, 1983, or taxation years ending after June 23, 1983. That was the date on which the contents of the bill were first made public in the notice of Ways and Means resolution to which I referred earlier.

The rules of interpretation contained in this bill are consistent with the interpretation given to Canada's double taxation conventions by both Canada and its major treaty partners prior to the Supreme Court decision to which I referred earlier. The measures contained in the bill will result in a consistent interpretation of terms and expressions found in many of Canada's tax conventions—that is, an interpretation that will not vary depending upon the date the convention was entered into. The bill will also obviate the necessity to renegotiate such conventions whenever a change occurs in the meaning to be ascribed to a term under domestic tax law.

Honourable senators, prompt passage of the bill will eliminate the uncertainty which currently exists as the result of the Supreme Court decision with respect to the manner in which tax conventions are to be interpreted. I therefore have no hesitation in urging honourable senators to support the bill and its speedy passage.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I must confess that when I first read the bill, I found it extraordinary that a tax treaty could be amended unilaterally, without the consent of the other party, by amending our Income Tax Act—because that really is what this bill says. However, there are practical difficulties, as was pointed out by Senator Murray, and the major countries do interpret it in this manner. That is, they understand, when entering into a tax treaty, that the definitions can be changed unilaterally. So although it seems rather strange to me that it should be so, that, in effect, is what has been happening all these years. Therefore I can well understand why the Supreme Court of Canada reached such a decision, namely, because it too probably thought it very extraordinary.

One thing that I found rather interesting in the bill—and this is something to which Senator Murray referred—is the definition of “immovable property”. Under clause 5 it says:

(b) the terms “immovable property” and “real property” with respect to such property in Canada are hereby declared to include

(i) any right to explore for or exploit mineral deposits and sources in Canada and other natural resources in Canada, and

(ii) any right to an amount computed by reference to the production (including profit) from, or to the value of production from, mineral deposits and sources in Canada and other natural resources in Canada.

That simply means royalties. I found it interesting because when the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce was studying the national energy policy, the question of the 25 per cent back-in was a major factor that was discussed. I can recall my indignation at the time. I was very much opposed to the 25 per cent back-in. I considered it to be retroactive confiscation. The representatives of some of the oil companies who had appeared before the committee had convinced me of that. However, as a result of evidence given by the Honourable Marc Lalonde and Mr. Joel Bell, I changed my mind. I thought that I had been conned by the oil companies. The position they took was that it had always been completely acceptable to increase the royalties on a property. That was done in connection with the North Sea and other areas. There was no difference between increasing royalties and getting an interest in the property because both, in fact, were an interest in the property.

At that time, I felt the government would probably be politically unwise to use the 25 per cent back-in route when it could use the accepted term, since, in fact, there was no difference in principle.

I am concerned by the announcement by the Prime Minister in New York that we are definitely going to eliminate the 25 per cent back-in, because we do require that revenue. We cannot afford to give a present to the oil companies. I specifically remember the oil companies being asked what they would be prepared to accept in lieu of the 25 per cent back-in, and they would not say. However, I think everyone recognized that it would be acceptable and in accord with general practice to increase royalties.

This bill supports the evidence given before the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce and the contention made by the Honourable Marc Lalonde and Mr. Joel Bell that there is no difference in principle.

Honourable senators, I support this bill and see no necessity for referring it to committee at this time.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On the motion of Senator Murray, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

FOREIGN EXTRATERRITORIAL MEASURES BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz moved the second reading of Bill C-14, to authorize the making of orders relating to the production of records and the giving of information for the purposes of proceedings in foreign tribunals, relating to measures of foreign states or foreign tribunals affecting international trade or commerce and in respect of the recognition and enforcement in Canada of certain foreign judgments obtained in antitrust proceedings.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-14 is intended to stop foreign powers or groups of foreign countries from passing bills or having their courts issue orders which would adversely affect Canadians, Canadian corporations or the Government of Canada contrary to the laws of our country.

The term given to this kind of legislation is “blocking” legislation and is similar to the legislation passed in the last session of the last parliament. I am sure the Deputy Leader of the Opposition will correct me if I am wrong, but I believe that legislation came in the form of Bills C-38 and C-41. Although the bill before us is similar, there is a minor change to include in foreign governments groups of states, the OECD and the like, in the event that there are further organizations or states which would deal as groups.

Honourable senators, Canadians have been faced with the problem of extraterritoriality for some time. In 1947, in the course of an investigation into possible violations of United States antitrust laws, an American grand jury found it needed records relating to the Canadian paper industry. At the grand jury's request, the United States court issued orders—I believe they were subpoenas—in order to obtain documents in the custody of Canadians, the documents being in situ in Canada.

The federal government of the day protested, which resulted in the first piece of blocking legislation by the Government of Ontario in an act referred to as the Business Records Protection Act. That was the first modern defensive mechanism against extraterritoriality and the first piece of legislation of this kind.

The issue of extraterritoriality is by no means peculiar to the bilateral relations of Canada and the United States. In the mid-1970s, we witnessed a U.S. investigation into an alleged international uranium cartel, accompanied by private, that is, non-governmental, damage actions against some of the alleged participants. That drew our attention to the problem of others seeking to obtain documentation and information from this country. In 1981, in the wake of the imposition of martial law in Poland, there was another incident involving the Siberian pipeline sanctions which the United States was attempting to impose upon companies which were nationals of the U.S. with subsidiaries in Canada, with contracts for the supply of goods and services. They were, by their law, imposing sanctions, with which we might not agree, on not only Canadian companies, but on many of our NATO allies.

More and more countries are sensitive to the negative impact extraterritorial measures may have on international trade and investment and particularly on shared western security interests. Blocking statutes, some with provisions similar to those of Bill C-14, have been enacted by Belgium, Denmark, the United Kingdom, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Finland, Norway, Sweden, Australia, New Zealand, the Netherlands, Switzerland and the Philippines.

The motive behind this foreign extraterritorial measures bill before us is not merely to allow Canada to join the several other countries that have enacted similar legislation. Canada's relations with the United States are unique, and the question of extraterritoriality takes on a special character in these relations.

Canadian and U.S. economies are uniquely intertwined. Canada's international competitiveness and economic well-being depend, in large part, on our maintaining and improving our access to U.S. markets. This government is committed to refurbishing our relationship with our closest friend, ally and trading partner. We have embarked on what has been described as "the opening of a new chapter in Canada-United States relations." At the same time as we are attempting to improve relations, we believe that this government is committed to ensure that this relationship is one of equals.

Canada does not take a doctrinaire view of extraterritoriality; nor do we consider that it is necessarily contrary to international law in all cases. As a legal term, "extraterritoriality" may be simply defined: It refers to the exercise of jurisdiction by one country over persons or conduct within the territory of another country. Extraterritoriality is not, of itself, a pejorative term. Although national authority is, indeed, primarily territorial in reach in a world of nation-states, jurisdiction may be exercised on other grounds, such as nationality. Extraterritoriality does become a problem for Canada when another country seeks to apply its laws or policies in a manner that displaces our laws or policies within our own territory. It becomes a problem when another country's laws or courts force Canadian corporations to choose between conflicting national-legal requirements and pay a penalty for whatever choice they may decide to take. For example, this might affect Canadian banks that operate outside the country. They may be subjected to a subpoena to produce bank records when, in fact, the law of the place in which they are operating forbids the disclosure of those records.

● (1530)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): It has happened with the Bank of Nova Scotia.

[Senator Nurgitz]

Senator Nurgitz: I believe there are two cases involving the Bank of Nova Scotia. I am not sure whether it is in their banking operations in the Cayman Islands or the Bahamas, but the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency is attempting to seek bank records. As I will indicate later, this does not take away from diplomatic negotiations in which the Government of Canada can, on behalf of a Canadian corporation, attempt to strike a balance or negotiate a bargain with the inquiring country, jurisdiction or court to obtain information to be helpful to friends and allies.

In any event, in these cases extraterritoriality goes to the heart of Canada's sovereignty and its political, economic independence. It goes beyond the lawyer's question of conflict of laws and beyond a debate centred upon defining internationally accepted rules on the proper limits of a state's authority and jurisdiction. It involves the imposition of one country's political and economic objectives upon Canada and Canadian nationals. It involves the use of economic power and pursuit of domestic and foreign policy imperatives of the country asserting extraterritorial authority. Unilateral legal instruments and doctrines are the chosen tools and legal tools demand a legal response.

I would like briefly to put on record the ways in which extraterritorial initiatives have manifested themselves of late and the efforts being pursued by this government to resolve potential conflicts that may arise. First, judicial doctrine in some countries has evolved in a manner that allows their courts or tribunals to compel the production of evidence or information from Canada or another country, whether for the purpose of enforcing their antitrust legislation or criminal laws or the requirements imposed by regulatory agencies in such fields as banking and securities matters. With regard to U.S. antitrust laws, Canada and the United States, given our intertwined economies, are effectively co-operating under the terms of a memorandum of understanding dealing with notification, consultation and co-operation in antitrust matters. This arrangement, which elaborates the spirit of the 1959 understanding, is referred to as the Fulton-Rogers understanding, and other agreements since. I believe there is one as recent as 1969. They provide a mechanism to ensure bilateral consultation at the earliest stage of any antitrust proceedings so that Canadian interests may be taken into account to the greatest extent possible and so that any problems that may arise can be managed and contained.

With regard to the production of evidence in investigations or enforcement proceedings outside the antitrust field, I am pleased to confirm that Canadian and United States officials are well advanced in discussions on a bilateral treaty on mutual assistance in criminal matters. With a commitment by both countries to use the mechanisms thus made available, the proposed treaty ought to provide a long-term solution to the problems encountered by, for example, Canadian banks as a result of U.S. narcotics enforcement activities to the extent that they relate to the production of evidence located in Canada. The treaty should serve as a model for discussions by both Canada and the United States in our separate dealings with our friends in the Commonwealth Caribbean and with other countries. In the short-term, Canadian and American officials are closely monitoring subpoenas outstanding against Canadian banks, with a view to making use of the limited mutual assistance mechanisms already available. Despite this ever-increasing co-operation, however, conflicts may still arise from time to time as a result of the enforcement of a subpoena with extraterritorial scope in any given case.

The second manifestation of extraterritoriality is the attempt to control Canadian exports to other countries. This attempt may come on the grounds either that the exporting company, although incorporated in Canada, allegedly has U.S. corporate nationality or that the goods being exported or the technology used to produce those goods have a kind of U.S. nationality. As was shown by the Siberian pipeline episode and our earlier experience in trading with China and Cuba, particularly difficult problems arise in the area of export controls for foreign policy objectives.

In the field of strategic exports, such problems are avoided because controls are based on national security considerations and are co-ordinated on an international basis. Canada, along with most of its NATO partners as well as Japan, participates in the international arrangement known as the Co-ordinating Committee, or COCOM. Accordingly, through our Export and Import Permits Act, multilaterally-agreed controls are maintained on the shipment of military and strategic goods and technologies to prescribed destinations. Our bilateral arrangements with the United States for defence development and defence production sharing, in fact, predate the COCOM system, and enable the vast majority of goods of United States origin to be exported to Canada without any necessity for an export licence. In exchange for this general exempting, Canada ensures that our laws control the re-export from Canada goods of United States origin.

Canada is an equal partner in North American defence. The generally unrestricted flow of goods and technology between Canada and the United States has served to ensure that Canada has been in a position to make a more effective contribution to the North American defence industrial base. It has also ensured the inflow of goods and technology to Canadian companies so important to their being able to compete in international markets. Both through COCOM and through our bilateral arrangements, Canada has shown itself committed to protecting fully North American and NATO security interests. Nonetheless, the imposition of extraterritorial controls by other countries, for foreign policy motives that we may not share, may cause problems from time to time.

Such are the current issues and the solutions being sought in the field of extraterritoriality. They emphasize our commitment to work closely with the United States and other countries to avoid or minimize conflict whenever possible. This government has made no secret of its determination to restore a spirit of goodwill and true partnership in our dealings with the United States. I am pleased that we have been reasonably successful of late in managing the issue of extraterritoriality through ongoing consultations and working arrangements on antitrust matters, on criminal investigations and on export control administration and enforcement.

Honourable senators, you may ask, "Why this kind of legislation?" Co-operation and consultation remain our preferred routes. There will be occasions, however, when such co-operation and consultation will be best assured only if Canada has the statutory authority to block unilateral measures of extraterritoriality. The United States, while wishing to minimize conflicts with Canada and other friendly countries, reserves the right to continue the extraterritorial enforcement of its laws and policies as it deems necessary. This means that there is a risk that Canadian corporations may be compelled to make decisions on the basis of United States law rather than Canadian law in certain situations. This particular act will enable the Canadian government to deal effectively with such situations defensively and as a last resort, when co-operation and consultation fail to resolve the policy differences involved.

Both the United Kingdom and Australia have legislation which contains provisions similar to those found in Bill C-14. In fact, Australia passed legislation in 1976 and 1979 dealing with the prohibition of the production of evidence to foreign courts and the prevention of enforcement of foreign antitrust judgments. Only recently, in March 1984, the Australian Parliament, with all-party agreement, enacted the Foreign Proceedings (Excess of Jurisdiction) Act. The 1984 Australian legislation consolidated and refined previously existing provisions contained in their Foreign Proceedings (Prohibition of Certain Evidence) Act of 1976 and a previous act of 1979. A new element in this new Australian act is the possibility of "recovery back," the equivalent of clause 9 in Bill C-14. The Australian Parliament also added new provisions enabling the attorney general of that country to make orders in appropriate cases to prohibit compliance in Australia with actions or decisions of foreign governments or judgments of foreign courts. In substance, this provision is similar to clause 5 of Bill C-14.

● (1540)

The United Kingdom has had its Protection of Trading Interests Act in place since 1980. It has made only sporadic use of this legislation but has found it useful in extreme situations such as the Siberian pipeline episode. It may perhaps even be said that the type of legislation embodied in Bill C-14 has a preventive effect, in that it signals to the outside world the concern of the Government of Canada with problems arising from extraterritorial application of foreign law. Other countries, such as New Zealand and France, have enacted more limited legislation of this type, primarily relating to the prevention of production of evidence from their territories to foreign courts. With the enactment of this legislation, Canada would therefore join a growing number of countries that have considered it necessary to equip themselves with a legislative basis to take countermeasures against instances of the extraterritorial application of foreign law.

As a last resort, the legislation would be of assistance to Canadian citizens or companies in situations where there is an unresolved conflict between Canadian law or policy and the law of a foreign state. For instance, the approach of the United States judiciary to conflicting legal requirements involves a balancing by United States courts of the interests of the United States government and the interests of the foreign jurisdiction in which the conduct at issue takes place. Where the foreign jurisdiction has a legal apparatus enabling it to issue an order preventing compliance with United States law, the current American jurisprudence is that it will, in general, recognize this as a legitimate defence, which is known as "foreign government compulsion". Where, however, the government of the foreign jurisdiction merely states that as a matter of policy it wishes its citizens to disregard extraterritorial orders, then courts in the United States generally consider that the element of compulsion in United States law overrides such policy directive issued by the foreign government concerned. Unlike countries such as Australia and the United Kingdom, Canada does not have at present an effective legal apparatus to meet the challenge which United States court decisions have posed.

On the basis of the experience with problems which have arisen from time to time, the bill sets out a framework for Canadian governmental responses to foreign governmental measures, or decisions by foreign courts with unacceptable extraterritorial scope. Domestic laws would not be affected until such time as the Attorney General of Canada issued specific orders triggering the use of the legislation. The threshold determination for the exercise of powers under the bill would be the opinion of the government that the foreign measures or the foreign court decisions are likely to affect adversely Canada's international trade or otherwise adversely affect Canadian sovereignty. Thus, the bill is clearly designed to protect national sovereignty in exceptional cases, after diplomatic efforts have been exhausted and irreconcilable policy differences remain. It is in some respects like a last resort situation.

As I have said, the bill corresponds in substance to provisions contained in the Australian and United Kingdom legislation and provides for mechanisms in three different areas. These provisions were drafted on the basis of experience with past problems.

Clause 3, which would permit the Attorney General to block the production of documents and related evidence to a foreign court, relates to problems that have arisen in the past from foreign subpoenas with extraterritorial scope in the area of foreign antitrust litigation and also in foreign criminal proceedings. In future, there may be a need to have this provision available against extraterritorial subpoenas in other areas of law. That is why this provision has been written in broad, general terms and may be invoked whenever documents are sought by a foreign tribunal.

Clause 5 would permit the Attorney General of Canada to issue orders to companies in Canada not to comply with foreign extraterritorial measures. It would authorize the government to respond in situations where a foreign government attempted to regulate the conduct of Canadian companies in Canada, for instance, by imposing export requirements on Canadian companies which are foreign owned or foreign controlled.

Clause 8 deals specifically with foreign antitrust judgments. The possibility to issue non-enforcement orders is limited to antitrust judgments because, in the view of the government, any interference with the enforcement of foreign judgments in Canada by the government should be as limited as possible. However, because of the extraterritorial scope, or potential extraterritorial scope, of foreign competition law, it was considered necessary to have a provision such as this included in the bill. Clause 8 would permit the Attorney General to issue orders preventing the enforcement or recognition of foreign antitrust judgments in Canadian courts, where the foreign court has exercised unacceptable extraterritorial jurisdiction. The order could relate to either the full amount of the foreign antitrust judgment, or to part of it.

If the Attorney General has issued a blocking order with respect to the full amount of the foreign antitrust judgment and the Canadian party in question has satisfied the foreign judgment, then the Canadian party, pursuant to clause 9, can recover from the foreign party in a Canadian court the amount paid abroad. Where the Attorney General has blocked the enforcement of only part of the foreign judgment, then only that blocked portion can be recovered in Canadian courts.

The legislation, when invoked, is designed to ensure the preservation of Canadian authority in Canadian territory. It is intended to be a shield, not a sword. In response to measures that purport to extend foreign law to Canadian nationals in Canada, orders under the legislation would make clear the Canadian national interest challenged by such overreaching measures and would provide a basis for protecting that national interest. By blocking the production of documents to foreign tribunals, or preventing compliance with foreign measures, or refusing the recognition and enforcement of foreign antitrust judgments, the legislation should allow the conflicts of sovereign interests to be resolved intergovernmentally, through co-operation and consultation, rather than in a unilateral fashion by foreign courts or governments. I believe that enactment of this legislation would give the government the mechanisms to react swiftly and effectively against foreign measures with unacceptable extraterritorial scope. The legislation would give the government maximum flexibility so that an appropriate response can be decided upon by the government, depending upon the circumstances of each case.

By responding to legal instruments with legal tools, the proposed Foreign Extraterritorial Measures Act will give Canada a legislative basis for dealing with unacceptable claims of extraterritorial jurisdiction by other countries. It will enable Canada to respond on the basis of parity to assertions by other countries that their legislation can dictate conduct by a Canadian company in Canada.

Honourable senators, on Thursday last in the other place the bill before us passed the second and third reading stages with unanimous consent of the members of that place, as I have indicated, with one minor exception relating to the definition of a foreign state. That provision will now include organizations of states. The bill before us is identical to its forerunners, Bills C-38 and C-41.

Finally, I would like to comment on what the Honourable Robert Kaplan said last Thursday in speaking for the Liberal opposition. I am sure all honourable senators have had the opportunity to read his comments in Hansard. He indicated he thought it was an appropriate time for this legislation to be brought forward because there appears to be a lull in the antitrust litigation which is very often at a higher level of activity. Because of that lull in that kind of activity, it is believed that this is a more appropriate time to proceed with this bill.

• (1550)

Honourable senators, I recommend passage of Bill C-14.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I wonder whether Senator Nurgitz would attempt to obtain an answer to a question on my behalf. On the other hand, after listening to his exposé, perhaps he has the answer at hand.

The United States Supreme Court rule, as he has explained it, distinguishes between a, to them, foreign state that has a policy against compulsion as opposed to a foreign state that has a law. If I understand this bill correctly, it provides for the issue of an order by the Attorney General, which the United States Supreme Court might very well interpret as a matter of policy. In other words, it is not an automatic provision of a, to them, foreign state that such records shall not be produced, but rather it is a decision of the Attorney General, which could be considered a policy decision. That, in turn, might drop the matter into the other basket.

Perhaps Senator Nurgitz could obtain an answer to that question for me by tomorrow, since the answer could easily be that it is precisely where the Attorney General can make an order that it falls into the compulsory basket.

Senator Nurgitz: I shall be delighted to attempt to obtain an answer to Senator Frith's question.

Senator Frith: Do you understand my question?

Senator Nurgitz: Yes, I do understand your question. Having said that, I feel badly if I have misled my "peculiar friend".

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Oh no, you can't say that.

Senator Nurgitz: He is not peculiar any more?

Senator Roblin: Perhaps, after a fashion.

Senator Nurgitz: My curious friend, then. I may have indicated that it was the United States Supreme Court. I am not entirely satisfied that it is. Having been briefed in the matter, my understanding is that United States Federal Courts—and not necessarily the Supreme Court—have indicated that, where there is no blocking legislation in what is, to them, a foreign jurisdiction, they will then perform the balancing act. They will put it on their scale and tell you where it tips. However, there is a legal "out". For example, where a subpoena is issued to what is, to them, a foreign corporation and blocking legislation exists and is enforced, it is my understanding that that is a legal "out" to the foreign corporation.

Having said that, I shall attempt to obtain a clear answer for my honourable friend.

Senator Frith: The problem is that blocking legislation can be of two kinds. It might be an automatic block that simply says "Under no circumstances shall you do it," or it might be blocking legislation that provides for a discretion in the Attorney General to make the order. What we need to know is exactly how the United States rule reads. Does it read that, where there is a discretion, it is still considered blocking legislation?

Senator Nurgitz: I shall undertake to try and obtain an answer to that question.

Hon. Joan Neiman: I wonder whether Senator Nurgitz would permit another question? I have listened carefully to the analysis and explanation he has given of the bill, and there is a point on which I wish to ask a question. It seems to me that subclause (c) of clause 3(1) covers a situation that is somewhat different from situations covered in other clauses of the bill. Almost all of the other clauses seem to deal with situations where the information or data, or the person against whom an order may be directed, or the tribunal, is in Canada.

Subclause (c) of clause 3 does, in fact, deal with a person who is a Canadian citizen or a resident of Canada, but then it talks about a foreign tribunal. I can visualize a situation where, for example, a Canadian citizen resident in Washington has been summoned or ordered to produce certain documents before a tribunal in Washington which would be, as is stated in this subclause, a foreign tribunal. In those circumstances, two situations could arise. The Canadian Attorney General could issue an order prohibiting this person from producing such documents, and possibly the United States government or the judiciary in some order would require him to do so. Is he then in contempt of the order of that foreign tribunal, and is that order enforceable?

On the other hand, in the same set of circumstances, if the person who is a citizen of Canada, resident in the United States, refuses to comply with an order of the Canadian Attorney General, is he in contempt of our court here and secondly, what enforceability provisions might there be in that event?

I have been unable to find the enforcement mechanism in this particular section, although it may be there, Senator Nurgitz.

Senator Nurgitz: In response to Senator Neiman's question, as I understand it, it is a negative type of enforcement. In other words, it permits a person to disobey an order. Therefore, where the Canadian citizen or resident in Washington who was subpoenaed, for example, to give evidence, on a matter that involved, in the opinion of the Canadian government, national security, a blocking order could be given. In that event, this person could then refuse to give the evidence required under that subpoena.

For example, using the facts in the Bank of Nova Scotia case, there was the worry of the United States saying: "We demand, under the subpoena, to know the information that is in your bank records.", and the Bank of Nova Scotia saying in reply, "Indeed, we would love to show you our bank records but we are under enforcement of, for instance, Bahamian law under which we hold out to all the people who come to bank here that we shall not tell anyone what our bank records contain." As I attempted to explain to Senator Frith, instead of having the United States courts balancing which of those two interests was the most important, my understanding of the jurisprudence is that, if it comes from a country that has blocking legislation provisions—as we hope soon to have—then the American subpoena would not be enforced.

I have undertaken to try to obtain a better answer to Senator Frith's question. At the same time, I shall also attempt to obtain a better answer to Senator Neiman's question.

On motion of Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Orville H. Phillips, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), moved second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, in moving second reading of Bill C-8, to amend the statute law relating to petroleum and gas revenue tax, I would like to outline the measures involved in this legislation and comment briefly on its clauses in the order in which they appear.

Honourable senators, the bill before us amends the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act to implement a new measure announced by the Minister of Finance in his recent economic statement, as well as measures introduced in May 1982 as an up-date to the former government's National Energy Program and the April 1983 budget. The new measure I am referring to is the doubling of the annual tax credit against the PGRT liability on production revenues of corporations to $500,000 effective January 1, 1985. This increase in the credit ensures that the small producers which have been exploring intensively in the Western Basin will, for the most part, be exempt from the PGRT.

● (1600)

The annual tax credit, initially limited to $250,000, and effective on June 1, 1982, is available to a corporation to offset its PGRT in respect of production revenues. Only one such credit is available for each group of associated corporations. This bill includes special rules to define "associated corporations" in order to prevent an unwarranted multiplication of the credit.

The bill also implements several relieving measures introduced in the National Energy Program update of May, 1982, aimed at reducing the burden of the National Energy Program during a time when the oil and gas industry was suffering from the weakening of gas export markets in the United States, the reduction in world oil prices, and high interest rates. Many corporations made investments and acquisitions before those economic setbacks occurred, and had to curtail their activities as a result. The PGRT initiatives included in the update as a response to this, and which are effected by this bill, were a one-year reduction in the basic PGRT rate, and a $250,000 annual corporate tax credit.

The April 1983 budget included further measures to reduce the tax burden on the petroleum industry. Special PGRT relief was granted to enhanced oil recovery projects to enable those projects to proceed despite the bleak economic environment. Specifically, a new deduction under the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act was introduced for eligible capital expenditures incurred on or after January 1, 1983, to be applied against petroleum and gas revenue from eligible enhanced oil recovery projects. The effect of the deduction is that participants in enhanced oil recovery projects are allowed to earn back their capital investments before becoming subject to PGRT on the project's revenue.

The major measures contained in this bill will appear in the act as follows: The new subsection 82(8) of the act provides for a deduction of enhanced oil recovery capital expenditures from production revenue earned from the project pool on or after January 1, 1983; section 84 of the act is amended to reduce the basic Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax rate on production and royalty income of Division I and Division II taxpayers from 16 per cent to 14.67 per cent for the period June 1, 1982 to May 31, 1983; section 84.1 is added to implement the annual corporate tax credit of up to $250,000 for the period from June 1, 1982 to December 31, 1984 and of up to $500,000 for the period commencing on January 1, 1985.

This bill also contains technical amendments which substantially simplify compliance for those persons with production royalties. The amendments to section 99 of the act transfer these royalties to Division II of the act, which is based on a withholding tax system. The effect of the amendment is that taxpayers who receive only royalty income are not required to file annual tax returns. After December 31, 1983, the tax on production royalties is withheld at a rate of 12 per cent, which recognizes the 25 per cent resource allowance that these taxpayers would otherwise be entitled to if the royalties were still being taxed under Division I.

Honourable senators, having reviewed the basic measures included in the bill, I will briefly outline the clauses of this bill.

Clause 1 provides technical amendments to clarify several definitions in the act and introduces consequential amendments proposed by clause 6.

Clause 2 provides rules for determining the deduction relating to expenditures of unprescribed enhanced oil recovery projects. This clause also removes production royalties from Division I of the act after December 31, 1983.

Clause 3 contains amendments consequential to those implemented in clause 2 concerning the eligible capital deduction for prescribed enhanced oil recovery projects.

[Senator Nurgitz.]

Clause 4 amendments are consequential to those in clause 2 which remove production royalties from Division I of the act.

Clause 5 implements for Division I taxpayers a reduced PGRT rate of 14.67 per cent from June 1, 1982 to May 31, 1983.

Clause 5 also provides for a carry-forward of a corporation's exploration and development expense tax credit on an amalgamation or winding-up.

Clause 6 implements an annual $250,000 tax credit for corporations with Division I production revenue and provides for an increase in the annual tax credit to $500,000 in respect of revenues earned on or after January 1, 1985.

Clauses 7 and 8 contain consequential amendments to those proposed in clause 6, and other technical amendments.

Clauses 9 and 10 deal with certain administrative measures under the act.

Clause 11 implements, under Division II, a withholding tax rate of 12 per cent for production royalties effective January 1, 1984, and a reduced basic rate of PGRT of 14.67 per cent for one year beginning June 1, 1982.

The remaining clauses contain consequential amendments.

I am certain honourable senators are already familiar with most of these measures, as they have been public for some time, and I commend this bill to honourable senators on second reading.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Olson, debate adjourned.

ONTARIO AND MANITOBA COURTS AMENDMENT BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Jacques Flynn moved that Bill C-3, to amend various Acts as a consequence of the reconstitution of the courts in Ontario and Manitoba, be read a second time.

He said: Honourable senators, the title of Bill C-3, an Act to amend various Acts as a consequence of the reconstitution of the courts in Ontario and Manitoba, clearly indicates the government's purpose in bringing this legislation before Parliament.

Upon reading the bill you will find that it contains only three clauses, and these refer to a series of amendments to federal acts. Fifteen acts will be amended by the operative provisions of this bill. To understand the legislation and what it purports to do, we should recall the provisions of the British North America Act, which in section 91, sub-section 27, empowers Parliament to legislate in the matter of criminal law, except the constitution of courts of criminal jurisdiction, but including the procedure in criminal matters. Furthermore, we have section 96, which gives the Governor General the power to appoint judges of superior, district and county courts in each province, and considering this federal authority, we must also consider section 92, sub-section 14, which empowers provincial legislatures to legislate in matters concerning the administration of justice in each province, including the Constitution, maintenance and organization of provincial courts, both of civil and of criminal jurisdiction, and including procedure in civil matters in those courts.

As the title indicates, we are acting pursuant to amendments adopted by the legislatures of Ontario and Manitoba to modify certain aspects of the courts in those provinces. As a result of these amendments, it will be necessary to amend several federal acts which contain references, for instance, to judges of the County Court of Manitoba, which was abolished as a result of the consolidation of certain courts with superior courts, or to provisions of Ontario legislation that have been repealed and, with them, the titles of certain officials.

This bill is a purely technical one. It does not involve any principle or problems of a political nature. It is simply a way to adjust federal acts so that they take into account amendments made by the provinces. We could of course refer this bill to the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, if any of the senators so desire. However, this would be a rather futile and perhaps boring exercise. I think we could adopt this bill on second reading, without prolonging debate, and proceed with third reading at the first opportunity.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, there is no reason to delay the passage of this bill.

As Senator Flynn explained, the bill simply concerns legislation originated by the legislators of Manitoba and Ontario, acting in accordance with their authority over matters concerning the organization of their courts. County court judges have now become district court judges, and so forth. There are several other changes, which were explained in detail by Senator Flynn.

In other words, the aim of this bill is to achieve a concordance of this legislation with the pertinent federal legislation.

As far as referring the bill to committee is concerned, the only reason for doing so would be to make a more thorough and very detailed study of the legislation to ensure that every single technical change is there. However, that is not, I feel, the work of our committee, since if there are any discrepancies, these can always be corrected by legislation containing the requisite amendments and changes.

Honourable senators, I forgot to mention that one of the other reasons for encouraging swift passage of this bill is the fact that if we adopt this legislation, we can start the new year with all the provincial changes incorporated in the pertinent federal legislation.

That is why I intend to recommend to my colleagues on this side of the house that they support this bill on second and third reading.

Bill read the second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Flynn, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

FIRST REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the first report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, which was presented on December 13, 1984.

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, report adopted.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY CANADIAN RELATIONS WITH COUNTRIES OF THE MIDDLE EAST AND NORTH AFRICA

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Macquarrie, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hicks:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs be authorized to continue its examination and report on Canadian relations with countries of the Middle East and North Africa;

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination and consideration of such legislation and other matters as may be referred to it, at such rates of remuneration and reimbursement as the Committee may determine, and to compensate witnesses by reimbursement of travelling and living expenses, if required, in such amount as the Committee may determine;

That the Committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate; and

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject during the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the Committee.—(Honourable Senator Grafstein).

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, this is the first inquiry on foreign policy by the Senate since the passage of our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In the post-charter era, as the new government moves towards its own comprehensive foreign policy review, the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs in its examination of foreign policy respecting North Africa and Middle East countries has a unique opportunity to illuminate Canada's foreign policy in this turbulent, ever-changing and troubled part of the globe—this region that is known to some as the birthplace and to others as the cauldron of our western civilization.

What are the ends of Canadian foreign policy and what are our means, limited and imperfect as they may be, and what should be our coherent strategy, our tactics and our diplomacy in this electronic age? At times in the past, executive action in the foreign policy area has seemed to me, at least, rather quixotic, where our reason did not match either our means or the limits of our natural interests. Our reach may have outstripped our means.

● (1620)

The Greek philosopher Platon urged man to grasp and never let go of, as he said, "the sacred golden cord of reason".

When desire disagrees with the judgment of reason, there is a disease of the soul. When the soul is opposed to knowledge or opinion or reason—which are her natural laws—that I call folly.

These are the words from a book entitled The March of Folly, written by Barbara Tuchman. In that book, Barbara Tuchman, in what is a quite brilliant analysis of history, pointed out the recurring pursuit of government policies that were contrary to the nation's interests. She went on to quote the poet Samuel Coleridge, who said, "If men could learn from history, what lessons it might teach us." But, Samuel Coleridge lamented:

But passion and party blind our eyes and the light which experience gives us is a lantern on the stern which shines only on the waves behind us.

Barbara Tuchman wrote that, while this poetic image is beautiful, the passage is misleading, for the light on the waves we have passed through should enable us to gauge the nature of the waves ahead.

It is my hope, honourable senators, that we in the Senate can establish a bipartisan foreign policy that floodlights the future, reflects our Constitution and its values, reflects the turbulent economic conditions swirling in the international market-place with which we as a nation must now compete, and understands that these conditions have wrought a new reality for Canada.

What is this reality? Canada has fostered a unique international government model. We have achieved, through our federal system, unity in diversity by democratic discussion. Our federal system and our Charter have propelled us now to reach farther beyond narrow provincialism and narrow regionalism, into a compelling search for a wider sense of Canadian loyalty. Just as we search for a dynamic Canadian foreign policy, so must we reach beyond narrow, nationalistic ideology towards a larger sense of internationalism. Indeed, we must be cautious not to ignite narrow, nationalistic, collective organizing instruments at the expense of international standards that diminish and erode individual human rights.

Our experience in Canada is instructive. In Canada, we have a tradition—a careful, thorough, thoughtful tradition—whereby we seek by broad domestic consensus through democratic institutions in a federal system, to build careful steps towards self-government for ourselves as a majority and for the minorities that live within our geographic regions. What we ask for ourselves and what we have done for ourselves should be a guide to others in the world. We may not meet our goals of fostering peace and prosperity for people in other areas by legitimizing the use of violence that clothes itself in human rights and then disrobes these rights in the washrooms of an ideology that says: "What is good for us is not good for others," or if what we demand for ourselves we deny to others.

We must be "fair," some people say. We must be "even-handed." We look at these ideas and say that there must be a symmetry in foreign policy. This, honourable senators, is to my mind a "fearful" symmetry which, in the name of "fairness" and "even-handedness," treats democracies as being equal to authoritarian régimes. By these arguments we debase the coinage of democracy.

Henry Kissinger has said, at the other extreme of this idea about the nature of foreign policy, that we should develop foreign policy in the same way that we develop treatment for lunatics in an asylum. Whether or not we adopt his measure is another matter, but sometimes, when lunatics act like lunatics, we must act accordingly.

How can we then ignite wider loyalties to universal standards that assert the welfare of individuals that transcends geographic boundaries? How can we legitimate narrow, ideological, organizing, determinative theories that sacrifice individual human rights on the altar of intolerance for others?

Foreign policy, in my view, must reflect our commercial interests while, at the same time, reflect the broader principles of internationalism that have been personified by the works of Lester Pearson and emulated by Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

The act of creativity on our part is how to enhance our nation's commercial interests while moving towards international standards of human conduct.

Four key elements have personified our foreign policy: the first three are peace, prosperity and people. Equally, the fourth element is how to limit raw power and transplant it for the rule of law.

How do we overrule the historian Thucydides' theory that declared that "the strong do what they can and the weak suffer what they must?" Canada has promoted the rule of law and universal standards in international conduct—a rule of law, however, not distorted by the tyranny of authoritarian majorities. We have tried to enhance our minorities in Canada without a double standard of our own.

In my own recent meetings in England and Europe with bureaucrats and politicians, I can report that there was a deep and abiding respect for Canada in world affairs. We are respected because our former Prime Minister, Pierre Trudeau, has left an indelible impression in his promotion of peace, prosperity and people without resort to force or the use of naked power. And Lester Pearson is still fondly remembered as a driving force in establishing these universal standards.

As we examine our foreign policy in this troubled region, we must ask ourselves many questions. How can our commercial or trade policy be congruent with adherence to universal standards of respect for individual rights in all countries of the region? Should we match incentives for expansion of our commercial interests with parallel incentives for progress with respect to human rights by all the nations of this region? Does our foreign aid hinder or help the growth of democratic institutions? Does our foreign aid hinder or help the expansion of democratic institutions within the countries that exist in this region? What is our proper role in examining political structures that fail to recognize democratic human rights? Have our policies contributed to the vicious cycle that restricts human rights to an ever-downward spiral, or have our policies helped to construct a virtuous cycle that rises, where the ends and means of our foreign policy can meet? What responsibility do we have to evaluate Canadian corporate conduct in these foreign countries? To what extent can we foster international scholarship in Canada through foreign aid to enhance our commercial policies so that we can succeed in these countries? What proper steps can be taken by democratic societies through our foreign policy to quarantine and suffocate the state-supported terrorism that has originated and so recently proliferated in this region? To what extent should we aid or deprive public and governmental organizations to which Canada or Canadians belong that diminish respect for the democratic ideal?

The central question, for me, is this: What tests of tolerance for minorities can we demand as a price for our respect and reciprocal trade arrangements and aid?

The late President Kennedy put it well when speaking to the United Nations on September 25, 1961. He said that authoritarian countries should be measured very carefully—very carefully—where governments are supported by troops instead of by free institutions, where systems know only one party and one belief which suppresses free debate, free elections, free newspapers, free books and free trade unions and which builds a wall to keep truth a stranger and its own citizens prisoners. He was arguing that one should apply the principle of free choice to those who advocate free choice for others. I might add that he would have argued, as well, that there should be suffrage not only for men but for women in these depressed countries.

Honourable senators, as we embark upon this very important inquiry, we should not make assertions of interests and rights for others without the assumption of responsibilities for ourselves. Assertions are cheap. None in this chamber is anxious to adopt double standards for ourselves or for others. We should lose our moral edge if we were to engage in hyperbole or criticize others for conduct in which we, ourselves, engage or which we support, directly or indirectly, through our trade arrangements. Let us not be the authors of a tale of two standards. Let us seek to expand our commercial interests while enhancing our human rights. We must ask ourselves whether or not we have an interest in "trade" but "no truck" with countries with which we deal. Can we separate ourselves, with considerations of trade policy on the one hand and human rights policy on the other? We must satisfy ourselves, as we approach this inquiry, that we do not freeze the status quo with countries with which we deal, if that status quo diminishes human rights and respect for individual codes of conduct. Particularly, we must be wary that we do not lend currency to synthetic international ideas, where new definitions are drowned in ideology which suppresses human rights in the name of national prosperity or security. Real tolerance for minorities and enhancement of self-government by thoughtful and careful steps is in the great Canadian tradition. These are traditions which we should seek to export with patience and care, in this post-Charter foreign policy era, to all countries in this troubled region. Honourable senators, as we approach the season of peace, we should surely pledge ourselves to redouble our efforts towards peace for all.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to advise honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Macquarrie speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Your Honour, that is not quite true, because Senator Macquarrie did not speak when he moved the motion.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, for the purpose of this ruling, I believe it was agreed that if an honourable senator simply moves a motion, he will be regarded as having made a speech.

Senator Hicks: In that case, may I be permitted a few remarks before Senator Macquarrie closes the debate?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): You will have to ask for consent.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Hicks: Honourable senators, I have listened with great interest to Senator Grafstein's interesting philosophical discourse on Canada's foreign policy and relations with various other countries, both democratic and totalitarian. I am sure that his views will be acceptable to every member of this chamber. But I am sure he would agree with me that his observations are substantially more far-ranging than the subject on which the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs is now being asked to continue its study, namely, Canada's relations with countries of the Middle East and North Africa. The motion now before us will have the effect of enabling the committee to be reconstituted to look at the work that the committee did during the previous Parliament and, if thought proper, to add to that work, or to conclude the committee's report, either before or after hearing further witnesses or receiving additional evidence.

I have spoken with the chairman of the committee by long distance telephone. Senator van Roggen unfortunately is ill and will not be with us until after we resume in January. He agrees with my views and was most anxious that this motion should be passed, in order that an organization meeting might be held before the Christmas recess so that we can make arrangements with the Parliamentary Secretariat for the continuation of the work of the committee and the preparation of certain documents for consideration by the committee when we resume in January.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Senator Grafstein.]

Senator Macquarrie: Honourable senators, it is an anomalous responsibility to be told that my injection has the effect of closing the mouths of all of my colleagues. As I recall, I entered this debate under section 31, and I see that I have now been pushed over to section 29. However, I wish to say how much I enjoyed listening to Senator Grafstein and how much I appreciate the fact that he has joined the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. Of all of the committees, that is the committee in which I have had the greatest interest since I came to the Senate five years ago. I am in the position of being the acting chairman. It is a job that I very much dislike because it implies that when I am presiding as acting chairman, our efficient and highly regarded chairman, Senator van Roggen, is not with us. However, like Senator Hicks, I am delighted with the chairman's progress. I note that despite his illness he has taken a tremendous interest in the work of the committee. He telephones perhaps more often than his doctor would wish. He gets a grade A for being a good parliamentarian, but I am not sure what that does to his rating as a good patient. Reports on his health are excellent, and it is hoped that when the committee again looks at its report, Senator van Roggen, who has made such a contribution to it, will be in the presiding chair.

I enjoyed very much the remarks of Senator Grafstein. He referred to the great poet Coleridge and almost tempted me to quote an even greater poet, Robert Burns, who, of course, is the great exemplar not only of world peace but also of world brotherhood, which is even greater, stronger and more meaningful than a state of peace. We have had so much excellent legislation and heard so many great speeches that I am even going to forgo quoting Burns.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Macquarrie: There is one other item which I would like honourable senators to take note of, particularly the members of the committee, lest they think, God forbid, that in some way I have been remiss. On Thursday we shall be honoured to have with us Nobel Laureate Bishop Tutu who will be meeting with honourable senators and members of Parliament at 11.30 a.m., in Room 574. There was a precedent during the last Parliament, and also the preceding Parliament, that such distinguished visitors were, in a sense, sponsored by the two committees, namely, our own committee and the Commons Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. The chairman of the Commons committee, a most excellent man, has informed all members of both houses of the forthcoming meeting and I believe it will be a wonderful opportunity for us to hear this distinguished man of peace and champion of human rights. I repeat that the meeting will be held in Room 574 of the building on Wellington Street.

Motion agreed to.

THE CABINET

ACCESS TO INFORMATION—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Davey calling the attention of the Senate to the Government's preoccupation with secrecy.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I ask that this Order stand in the name of Senator Stollery.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO REVIEW ALL ASPECTS OF NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

Hon. Earl A. Hastings, pursuant to notice of Thursday, December 13, 1984, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to review all aspects of the National Energy Program, including its effects on energy development in Canada;

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject and the work accomplished during the Second Session of the Thirty-second Parliament be referred to the Committee;

That the Committee be authorized to meet during an adjournment of the Senate;

That the Committee have power to adjourn from place to place within Canada for the purposes of this review; and

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be required for the above-mentioned purpose.

He said: Honourable senators, I shall be brief in my explanation of this motion. In essence, it is exactly the same motion that granted the committee authority during the last Parliament to inquire into the National Energy Program. During the course of its proceedings, the committee heard from approximately 17 witnesses, representing government, industry and other organizations. As a result, I believe the committee elicited a good deal of valuable information that has no doubt contributed greatly to the consideration that is now being given to an energy policy in this country.

● (1640)

We concluded our work after having examined government officials, both industry organizations and other private organizations. We had intended to continue seeking further information from the private sector and from the provincial governments. Honourable senators, if this motion is agreed to, we propose to hear from about 18 suppliers, other witnesses and any provincial government which may wish to appear before us.

We realize full well that we may be overtaken by events as the universe unfolds, but, nevertheless, we think it important to finish our work and conclude it as quickly as possible, thereby, we hope, making a contribution to the deliberations of those concerned.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, December 19, 1984

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.
Prayers.

AGING

JUSTICE FOR THE ELDERLY—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Friday next, December 21, 1984, I will call the attention of the Senate to justice for the elderly.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL POLICIES

GOVERNMENT STATEMENTS

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, with leave, later this day I will call the attention of the Senate to the following matter:

Across this great land there is a growing concern and, in certain places, fear arising from the contradictory statements of the government with regard to economic and social policies.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): No.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You do not want to have a debate on this matter? You do not want to have an emergency debate on this? You are refusing our request to have an emergency debate on this matter?

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Tomorrow afternoon.

Senator Frith: Leave is not given today?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Friday.

Senator Frith: We do not need leave to have this matter called on Friday.

Senator Roblin: I suggest that the matter be dealt with in the usual way in this chamber—that is, by giving notice, and the debate will follow in due course.

Senator Frith: Notice is, then, for tomorrow.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Notices of Inquiries have to be in writing, senator.

Senator Frith: He has it in writing.

Senator Sinclair: I do not, but may I give it in writing to my honourable friend later?

Senator Frith: We can revert to Notices of Inquiries.

Senator Doody: You will have to request that we revert to Notices of Inquiries, but you will have to seek leave, and then we will see what happens.

OFFICIAL REPORT

SENATOR FRITH—CORRECTION OF STATEMENT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before Question Period is called I wish to correct a mistake I made yesterday. I was wrong on a matter of order.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Frith: Yesterday, when Senator Macquarrie wanted to speak on his motion, the question was whether, by moving the motion, he had in fact spoken on the motion and, therefore, would only have his normal right of reply.

We made the point that there is precedent for the principle that if one moves a motion that is considered the speech and one cannot speak later, except on one's right of reply. That principle is found in Beauchesne, Fifth Edition, citation 305(4). However, it seems to me, as Senator Macquarrie pointed out, that we have changed that general principle because in our rules we specifically provide that:

A senator who moves an order of the day or seconds a motion, but does not speak to it at that time, may address the Senate on the subject at any subsequent period of the debate.

And he still has his right of reply under rule 29, so I was wrong about that. If I interpret Beauchesne and our rules correctly, then there is no inconsistency between rule 29, which gives the right of final reply, and rule 31, which gives a senator who does not want to speak on a motion when he moves it, the opportunity to do so later, in addition to his right of reply.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

UNIVERSALITY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Honourable senators on this side have been very distressed as we have tried to piece together the comments made by ministers of the government as reported in the newspapers and in the other place. It appears to us that the government is abandoning the principle of universality upon which Canadians, especially those who live in need, have come to depend. As the Leader of the Government knows, we do not like this at all, and we especially do not like it at Christmas time. If the government is going to persist in what appears to be coming, I should like to know whether you intend to redistribute from those who are so wealthy to those who are in need through increasing the guaranteed income supplement. Will that be the message that you will use for people who are of advanced years?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, first, I should probably deal with the preamble to the question about universality and let my honourable friend know that it will not be touched. There will be no change in the principle of universality. Those people who are now eligible for cheques will continue to receive them under the same terms and conditions as they receive them now. On that part of the question I think my honourable friend can accept that as a statement of the policy of the government.

With respect to what happens to the GIS, I believe that that is a matter which will have to be dealt with when we examine the other aspects of the social assistance policy within the country because there are a number of programs which probably could benefit by receiving more support, and this may indeed be one of them. But I cannot make an announcement on that at the present time.

Senator Marsden: I should like to ask a supplementary question. There has to be some mechanism by which it is taxed back. What method are you going to use to redistribute wealth? I should like to know whether the government intends to use the existing programs—the GIS and old age pension—or whether you are planning to introduce new programs for retired Canadians.

Senator Roblin: The programs that we have at the present time will be maintained. It is quite possible that new programs will be developed, but that will be the outcome of the discussions which are now taking place.

Senator Marsden: I have a further supplementary question. Will the government have one of its programs implemented, as promised, that of equal pay for men and women—which, of course, would be the greatest redistribution that this country has ever seen?

Senator Roblin: Probably the government's position goes beyond equal pay to men and women for equal work—which is one of the ways of describing it—to work of equal value. That is a matter that is receiving the attention of the government right now.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I should like to follow up on my colleague's question relating to universality. Yesterday, in the other place the Prime Minister said:

We plan to examine the possibility of using the tax system to introduce a greater notion of fairness for those in our society who need help without doing violence to the principle of universality.

I think that those on this side would say that that is a contradiction of terms. If you are manipulating the tax system, you are violating the principle of universality.

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he could tell us who the needy are who are going to benefit from this new notion of fairness. Are they just below the average family income level of $35,000 a year, as suggested by the Minister of Finance, or are they just below the $26,000 level that was suggested by the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

• (1410)

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I think my honourable friend's question requires some elaboration because it is not accurate to leave the impression, which she left with me, that we do not at the present time use the tax system when dealing with social welfare problems. Let me illustrate what I have to say by reference to the support we give children.

The Family Allowance, which is a universal plan—the universality of which is not in any way in doubt or threatened—provides, for people whose income is less than $10,000 a year, in the case of a family with two children, $359. For a family in the same circumstances whose income is $30,000 a year, the amount is $235. For a family with an income in the range of $45,000, the figure is $197. The allowance is progressive with respect to need, and the determination of the amount is arrived at through the taxation system. There is nothing new in that concept. It is a question of examining it.

Let me illustrate the reverse situation as it applies to the child tax exemption. A family with an income of $10,000 and two children receives nothing. If the income is $30,000, the exemption is $246; and for those in the $45,000 bracket, the amount is $320. Therefore, because the amount of the child tax exemption is assessed through the tax system, it is highly regressive—the value of the exemption rises with the income of the family concerned. The family with the low income receives no concession; whereas, as the income rises, the value of the concession increases.

One has to ask oneself whether that is the proper way of proceeding or whether it should be reorganized so that the family in the $10,000 range does receive something. That is the kind of question the government is considering.

Honourable senators, I should also like to illustrate the child tax credit, which is another vehicle the government utilizes in supporting children. In the $10,000 bracket or less, the value of the credit is $343; in the $30,000 bracket it is $303; and in the $45,000 bracket it is zero. I give that example because I want to be fair by covering the three classes of support for children.

The significant point about the last category I mentioned is the fact that it is means-tested. There is a ceiling, and if you go over the ceiling, you receive nothing. The break-even point is $26,300 at which figure you receive the full amount of the concession, but, as your income rises to $41,000, it is eliminated so that at that level you receive nothing. Honourable senators can see the type of problem with which the government is faced.

I think it would be helpful if honourable senators were to consider the nature of the problem—I hesitate to say—rather than trying to score political points, because I know, if I were to suggest such a concept, it would produce a furor of anxiety and objection on the other side. Perhaps I had better not make that suggestion. In dealing with the questions of equity and universality, these are some factors that must be taken into consideration.

When the whole field has been examined, particularly with respect to family allowances, the child tax exemption and the child tax credit, I am most confident that, when conclusions are reached, those in the $10,000 bracket will find themselves substantially better off than they are today. I believe that will meet with the will and the pleasure of the people of this country.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government in the Senate for reviewing the programs now in place. However, I would point out that we are familiar with those figures.

The problem arises from the confusion and the contradictions in public forums concerning programs yet to come. We are concerned as to how the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance could expose this volatile issue in public debate without, at the same time, bringing forward a clear definition of what they consider to be the border line in cases of need.

My question is: Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us whether the discussion paper on the family benefits and old age security—which was initially expected to be available prior to the end of the year—will be available before we adjourn, or is the new date somewhere near the end of January, as has been suggested?

Senator Roblin: I understand my honourable friend's dilemma, but I am doing my best to provide her with the information she needs in order to come to a balanced judgment on the matter.

With respect to the discussion paper that will emerge, that will be made available in due course. I am not able to give an exact date as to when it will be presented. It will not be long. I can assure my honourable friend of that. I should not be surprised—although I am not stating it as a fact—if the essence of the question she raises as to what is an appropriate system of deciding need were to occupy a good deal of the public interest and attention when those papers are discussed.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I was interested in the government leader's remarks with respect to the Income Tax Act and this matter of social programs. The Minister of Finance has stated—and that statement has been repeated here, if I have followed the discussion correctly—that the Income Tax Act will be used. My question is: How will it be used?

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Roblin: I must tell my honourable friend that the Income Tax Act is now being used. He can take it for granted that its use will be continued, for the time being. It is quite probable that, at a later date, some new arrangements will be made, but my honourable friend will be informed of those when the decisions have been made. They certainly have not been made now.

Senator Sinclair: Do I take it from the reply of the government leader that the same method will be used for any changes that are made to recover payments under the social programs?

Senator Roblin: My answer is: not necessarily.

Senator Sinclair: In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance has stated that the tax system will be used, surely the government leader can tell us what the minister meant when he made that statement?

Senator Roblin: In due course the Minister of Finance will be answering the question posed by my honourable friend.

Senator Sinclair: Am I to take it that the government has made these announcements to the public of Canada without knowing how the income tax system will be used?

Senator Roblin: I think that my honourable friend can take it for granted that the principle of using the income tax in dealing with these matters of social allowances will indeed continue to be used. But to say that the government does not know what mode it intends to follow is not, I think, a consequence of the question, for the simple reason that the government has made it clear that it intends to hold widespread discussions with all players in the game—the provincial governments, those who represent the unemployed or the poverty associations in the country and a good many others who have a right to be heard. Any decision that is to be made will be made after those matters have received a thorough public airing. On the basis of what it hears, the government will decide the policy that it intends to recommend.

Senator Sinclair: I have another supplementary question if I may, honourable senators. The difficulty I have is this: if the government is going to tax back something that is given, that can be done progressively or it can be done absolutely. I will put the question: Is it going to be done progressively or is it going to be done absolutely?

Senator Roblin: I think that the tendency of the government would be to stick to the progressive system as being one well designed for Canadian circumstances, but I give no flat undertaking because the matter is yet to be resolved.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, not having the same inhibitions with respect to political questions that my friend has shown for the first time today, I ask whether he can explain to us why all of these plans—which, admittedly, were plans in the mind of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance during the last election—were not made known to the people? The Minister of Finance has said, "We had the plans but we did not want to say all this because we were afraid of what the people might think of it." Why did his party not tell the people what it planned to do? Or was it—to quote from the same article from which my honourable friend was quoting—“Sentence first—Verdict Afterwards”?

● (1420)

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, if I am to get into a political discussion about the last election, I am surely going to ask my honourable friend to explain what his own leader was saying and thinking. His leader was saying that he was going to reduce expenditures by billions of dollars—billions—and when asked how he was going to do that, he was extraordinarily vague. So I believe this is a condition that my honourable friend must accept as applying to both parties in the election.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: This is a different Liberal Party.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: You will have to ask Crosbie.

Senator Roblin: Ask whom?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): The Honourable John.

Senator Roblin: I don't quite get that comment. Why would we ask Crosbie?

Senator Doody: It is too obtuse for me.

Senator Roblin: The plain fact is that I believe the statements made by the Progressive Conservative Party during the election were just as valid as those made by the Liberal Party.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, for once, and I suspect unwittingly, the Leader of the Government has come right to the point. As he has pointed out, the difference was that the leader of the Liberal Party came clean with the people of Canada and said “Yes, we have to consider some of these things”. But we now know, by the admission of the Minister of Finance, that the Progressive Conservative Party had all of these plans but did not come clean, but, as I say, treacherously suppressed its plans until it came to power. That is the difference.

Senator Roblin: I could say that the leader of the Liberal Party in the last election treacherously did suppress the plans of his party—

Senator Frith: We did not.

Senator Roblin: —to reduce $13 billion from expenditures. He did not say how it was going to be done. He was asked how it was going to be done, and he replied “I am not going to get into the particulars at this particular time”. That is what he said. For all that the public knew, he treacherously concealed the fact that he was going to take it off Old Age Security, or some other pension of that kind. My honourable friend is on a bad wicket. He had better get off it.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, he is on a good wicket. There is a big difference between telling the people what you are going to do, but adding that you do not have all of the details, and your position which is one of saying “We have all of the details but we are not going to tell the people about it”. That is the difference. It is the exact opposite.

Senator Roblin: That is my honourable friend's interpretation. But I turn the thing around and tell him it is exactly what he was doing.

Senator Frith: That is not accurate.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

HEALTH SERVICES—UNIVERSALITY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I wish I could say that I feel much easier today about the subject matter on which I asked a question yesterday. I understood the Leader of the Government to say today that the Progressive Conservative Party had come back to its pre-election position and that universality was again a sacred trust. I hope that is true.

My question arises from a press release issued yesterday by the Canadian Health Coalition concerning medicare and expressing concern at what is going on in Canada today with regard to medicare and medical services. I quote the following:

Mr. Epp has agreed with provincial health ministers that the federal government will adopt a non-interference policy with reference to Canada's medicare system. It appears that Mr. Epp has forgotten that the Canada Health Act outlines the program criteria the provinces must follow if they are to receive federal funding for their medicare programs.

My question is: Does that mean that the federal government will not interfere if some provinces decide not to follow the program criteria of non-profit administration, universality, accessibility, comprehensiveness and portability?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I have to give my honourable friend the same answer I gave yesterday. The relationship between the provinces and the federal government is a constitutional one, as he is aware, and this particular field of activity is basically a provincial one under the Constitution, a fact which must be kept in mind. However, after taking that into account, it is true that Parliament has, from time to time, passed laws and regulations with respect to the way in which medicare is to be administered. The federal government will see to it that the law is implemented and the regulations observed. I think we can all agree that that is the correct stand.

I want to say something else to my honourable friend because he disturbed me yesterday with his reference to a charge of $35 for medical examinations.

Senator Thériault: An annual medical check-up.

Senator Roblin: I want an opportunity to look into that matter. It is new to me and I know nothing about it. It is an interesting point, and I shall find out what I can.

Senator Thériault: I am glad the Leader of the Government is going to look into this matter. As far as I know, this charge applies in New Brunswick, but it may apply in other provinces. I received a call from a lady who had called her doctor for an annual check-up, to which the doctor had replied that the medicare system in New Brunswick had been changed and an annual check-up would cost her $35.

Why are Canadians and I concerned about what is going on in social programs today? It can probably be best explained—and I think I mentioned it yesterday—by what I read in a press report, which stated that shortly after the Progressive Conservatives took office the new Minister of National Health and Welfare held a secret meeting in Ottawa with the provincial Ministers of Health at which they agreed to certain things.

An Hon. Senator: Shame!

Senator Thériault: I suppose we will always have secrecy in government, but, for the life of me, when a federal minister is meeting with his counterparts in the provinces to make decisions which may affect the health services and health per se of the people of Canada, I do not understand why these meetings should be held in secret, with the media and representatives of the people in the Parliament of Canada and of the legislatures of the provinces excluded.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I think you have to recognize that there are a great many meetings held between the federal and provincial levels of government which are not public in the sense that the doors are open and the press invited inside. In many respects these are negotiating meetings, and it is quite clear that it would be impractical to abandon the principles of confidentiality while decisions are being hammered out. After they are hammered out, it is a different thing. In respect of the particular meeting and the particular press report which my honourable friend spoke of, I must say that I did not read the article in the way he did. He read it as a secret meeting. If I recall correctly what I read is that it was a meeting that was not widely reported. Those are two different things.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Was it a senatorial meeting?

Hon. Hazen Argue: The press was asleep.

Senator Roblin: Who said that?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): The press was nodding off.

Senator Roblin: This is a gathering whose proceedings are not frequently reported, although I notice by reading the press that some honourable senators on the opposition benches are getting a little more press than they are accustomed to. One of these days I shall have to read those press reports to them, and find out which ones they agree with.

However, with respect to my honourable friend's question, matters of the kind he has raised which affect the health of people ought, ultimately, be part of the public domain. I shall ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether there is anything in those meetings which should be reported in the sense that my honourable friend seeks information on changes that affect the health system of the people.

Senator Thériault: While the Leader of the Government in the Senate is seeking that information, perhaps he could also ask other ministers or the Prime Minister whether there have been many meetings between federal ministers and their provincial counterparts held in secret or, at least, not widely reported since September 17.

Senator Roblin: I do not think I can accept that question.

• (1430)

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Croll:—we in the Liberal Party protested against the use of a means test. I was a member of a committee of the other place in 1952 from which emanated the concept of universality. I must say there are not too many around here today who were there at that time. The Prime Minister now says that his government is thinking of imposing a tax on those who earn incomes above $30,000 or $45,000. My question for the Leader of the Government is: Is that not bringing in the means test through the back door?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I have to tell my honourable friend that the principle of income testing is not a new principle in Canadian welfare policy. The guaranteed income supplement is based on a means test, or, as I prefer to call it, an income test. Indeed, some of the family support programs I adverted to earlier today are related to an income testing system. As well, there may be other social payments of various kinds that are income tested. Thus, the concept is not new, and I think my honourable friend would agree with me in that respect. The particular programs he is concerned with, namely, medicare, old age security and family allowance, are not means tested, and they will not be means tested.

Senator Croll: The Prime Minister did not mention any other tests; his statement was to the effect that there will be no means test. The Leader of the Government seems to be referring to a different sort of test but is not calling it a means test.

Senator Roblin: I am simply trying to explain to my honourable friend my understanding of the situation. First of all, I defer to him. He has been around here a long time and his record is equalled by none, I suggest, in the field of social policy.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: I am glad to pay that tribute to him. I am doing my best to explain the situation as I see it and I hope I have it right.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I should like to seek some information and guidance from the Leader of the Government in the Senate by way of a question. My question flows from a question asked yesterday by Senator Le Moyne with respect to a hidden agenda. The government leader replied very indignantly, in these words:

I do not accept my honourable friend's premise that there is a hidden agenda. I believe the agenda is on the table and that during the next few months, between now and the formulation of the next budget, we shall have plenty of opportunity to discuss that agenda in its entirety.

I am trying to do my duty as a senator by participating as best I can in this place. Therefore, my question to the Leader of the Government is: Where is the agenda? I would like to see it. In the alternative, could the government leader enlighten me with respect to what is on this agenda?

Senator Roblin: I think I have already answered that question. When Senator Fairbairn raised her point with me it dealt with the same matter. I can give my honourable friend the same answer I gave Senator Fairbairn, and that is that there will be discussion papers made available by the government before very long which will become the basis for wider discussion of all the issues involved. These papers will not set out policy; they will set out facts and several alternatives which might be considered. That is the material which will be before the Senate.

NATIONAL REVENUE

ABANDONMENT OF PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a supplementary question on a matter I raised yesterday during Question Period. Yesterday I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate if the government was giving consideration to relief under the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act. Am I to understand that on the one hand the government is considering penalizing the poor by withdrawing support under social programs, and, on the other hand, is granting relief and support to the oil industry?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): The answer is no, we are not giving any consideration to reducing the support given to the poor. It is quite the opposite. We are giving consideration to ways and means of improving it.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

UNIVERSALITY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, in response to Senator Fairbairn's earlier question, the Leader of the Government in the Senate outlined four existing programs for support of families and children in this country. Am I to understand that each one of those programs is likely to be changed?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): No, honourable senators.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: I wonder whether the Leader of the Government in the Senate would give us a definition of the word "poor".

Senator Roblin: It certainly does not include my honourable friend, I'll say that.

Senator Sinclair: Nor does it include the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You are even now; keep going.

Senator Sinclair: Now would you answer my question?

Hon. Hazen Argue: The rest of us are poor.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I do not think I should attempt to answer my honourable friend's question. He and I may have different ideas as to what the definition of "poor" is. It does not really matter what either of us thinks. When these matters are being discussed in the manner which I have been outlining this afternoon, the question of levels of income and qualifications for support will undoubtedly be high on the agenda. At that time, my honourable friend can offer his definition of "poor".

Senator Sinclair: I have a supplementary question, if I may. I did not use the word "poor". It was the government leader who used it, and my question then is: Before the government made its announcements, was there any definition of "poor" given to you in order that you could tell the people of Canada what that definition is?

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, at the present time we are not in the business of telling people in Canada what "poor" is. We shall be having a discussion with the people of Canada to see if we can arrive at some consensus as to what is the proper level of support from the public funds. I suggest it would certainly have to be an improvement over what we have now.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, on that point, as Senator Sinclair said, the Leader of the Government in the Senate did use the word "poor". I am sure it is not a matter of trying to pin him down to a specific figure, but when he himself used the word "poor" while telling us in the Senate that it would be better for them, that, in fact, more money would go to the poor, I ask him if he had any benchmark in his head when he used that word. Did he even have any idea of roughly how he would define "poor"?

Senator Roblin: I think you could say that the poor are certainly those who are defined as poor under the legislation sponsored by the party of my honourable friend. We know that those are poor. That is the kind of person I was talking about when I discussed those whose level of support should be increased.

Senator Frith: What legislation is that?

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend can look at the regulations of the departments with respect to "poor". If he wishes to ask a question about the regulations in use in the country, I shall do my best to find them for him.

Senator Frith: The point also is that you are using that word "poor" in a political sense. The point is that the definition in those regulations is not a definition of "poor"; it is a definition of these various income levels. That is why I am asking my honourable friend what he means by that level. Is he merely using it for political purposes, and has no idea at all what he means?

Senator Roblin: I have told my honourable friend that I am dealing with the income levels that are presently in force in the country.

Senator Frith: But you don't know what they are?

Senator Roblin: I can certainly find out from the regulations—

Senator Frith: You used the term.

Senator Roblin: Certainly I did, and I shall use it again. I shall also use the terms "rich" and "middle-income", et cetera, because they are all part of the debate and, in due course, they will all be defined.

Senator Frith: You do not know what it means, then?

Senator Roblin: Certainly I do.

OLD AGE SECURITY

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I see that he is in an expansive mood today and seems more prepared to tangle with us on this side. I hope that attitude continues.

In response to the first question by Senator Marsden, I thought I heard the Leader of the Government say that, with respect to the guaranteed income supplement, cheques would continue to go out and that there would be no change in the terms and conditions under which the recipients receive those cheques. That was my understanding. I want now to ask him whether he can give the same assurance with respect to the recipients of old age security?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Yes, I can, honourable senators.

INDIAN ACT

STATUS OF WOMEN—REMOVAL OF DISCRIMINATORY PROVISIONS

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether the matter of discrimination against Indian women, as it now exists in the Indian Act, was on the agenda of the federal-provincial discussions on amendments to the Canada Act, as that relates to the aboriginal peoples.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will have to check with my colleagues to be certain of the reply, but I believe that the meetings that have taken place over the past few days have had to do with the entrenchment of certain native rights in the Constitution dealing with, if I may use the phrase, the functions of their nationhood, and so forth.

It is perfectly clear to me that the question my honourable friend raises is included in that mix of issues. Whether it was specifically discussed during those meetings, I cannot say, but I will attempt to find that out.

Senator Haidasz: Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate inform this house what the government's official and definitive policy is on discrimination against women and the desirability of amending the Indian Act?

Senator Roblin: If my honourable friend will reflect upon the clauses of the Speech from the Throne, he will find that that issue is covered.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In light of the slowing of the economic recovery in the United States, based on reports from there over the past few days, and also the slowing of the economic recovery in Canada, would the government consider deferring any further cuts that produce job losses until the Minister of Finance tables some economic evidence as to the status of the recovery and gives us an economic cost-benefit analysis on the loss of those jobs and the impact of those cuts that might, in these circumstances, further undermine consumer confidence and destroy the economic recovery we had several months ago?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not accept the premise of my honourable friend's question that what the government has done is going to destroy the economic activity in the country. I just do not believe that to be the case. It will take time, of course, to see these measures develop, and I am hopeful that in the long run they will prove to be better than what took place before.

One has to recognize that in this area, and in the area of unemployment in particular, quick fixes are not likely. We had been travelling along a certain path, and as a result of that journey things have not improved, so it behooves us to try something else, and that is what we are now doing.

Senator Grafstein: In the Ottawa Citizen, an article written by Don McGillivray supports the thesis that I have suggested and contradicts the thesis that the Leader of the Government has suggested. He states:

These policies—

Referring to the policies of cutting jobs:

—at a time when 1.4 million Canadians are already unemployed, are creating the "fear factor" that the government's own polls are discovering. When people think they may lose the jobs they have, they cut back on buying and save their money.

Mr. McGillivray further states:

In other words the government's economic strategy is deeply flawed. Instead of creating confidence among the majority of Canadians, it is creating insecurity.

That insecurity will reflect back into the business sector, undercutting the confidence the Tories hope to build there.

I ask the Leader of the Government again if he would implore the Minister of Finance, in light of the growing insecurity and the fear factor which has been provoked by these cuts, to defer these cuts until such time as we have before us a clear economic cost-benefit analysis of the impact these cuts have on Canada's economic recovery.

Senator Roblin: I have had the pleasure, honourable senators, of knowing Mr. Don McGillivray for many years, and I regard him as a very interesting and provocative writer. If I were to judge his economic views I would say that, in my opinion, he recommends to us that we relax our concern about the deficit and spend a little more money. I must be awfully careful here, because I would not want to do Mr. McGillivray an injustice, but I think that that is the tenor of his views.

It simply happens that there are many economists in the country and most of them hold different views. In fact, it is hard to get more than one or two of them to agree on anything, so I really cannot found the policy of the government on Mr. McGillivray's opinions; neither can it be founded on the opinion of the honourable senator.

WAGE AND PRICE CONTROLS

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and it arises out of an assertion he made yesterday during Question Period, which assertion is to be found on page 355 of Senate Debates, in the first column. He is reported to have said:

I can tell my honourable friend that he has the wrong election. I want to put him straight; the election I am talking about is the one in which the government campaigned on the policy of no wage and price controls.

After an interjection by Senator Frith, the leader went on to say:

As soon as they got into office, they reversed their policy and brought in wage and price controls.

This matter has been raised on a number of occasions, and I wonder whether the gentleman is fully aware of what happened, because I understand that at the time of that election campaign he was in private business and might not have followed the election campaign very closely.

What happened was that the honourable gentleman's party—

Some Hon. Senators: Question!

Senator Bosa: The question is: Is the leader aware that his party proposed wage and price controls in order to bring inflation under control? The Liberal Party said that wage and price controls at that time were not the proper device to bring inflation under control, because inflation was created through the importation of oil from the Shah of Iran and other OPEC countries.

A year and a half later—not as the leader stated yesterday, “As soon as they got into office, they reversed their policy”—

when some Canadians were raising the price of commodities, such as steel from $180 a tonne to $600 a tonne over a period of five or six weeks—

Hon. Jacques Flynn: That's a speech.

Senator Bosa: —and electricians in Oshawa were demanding a raise—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I am anxious to hear your question.

Senator Bosa: —of 95 per cent in their salaries, the Liberal government brought in wage and price controls, and they were in a different form than those proposed by the Conservative Party.

An Hon. Senator: Who wrote your speech?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): That was a great speech.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Those were brief explanatory remarks.

Senator Bosa: Is the leader aware of that?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Some senator asked my honourable friend who wrote his speech, but I am here to bear witness, on his behalf, that nobody wrote his speech, because only my honourable friend could have introduced the question in the interesting and provocative way he has.

All I have to say is that the Conservative Party campaigned on wage and price controls and got the pants licked off them. My honourable friend's party campaigned against wage and price controls and were elected, and after they were elected they adopted the Tory policy. It is too bad they had not done so sooner.

Senator Bosa: It was a year and a half later that the Liberal government adopted wage and price controls.

Senator Flynn: You still have that on your conscience.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

UNIVERSALITY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Opposition if I heard him right—

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): The Leader of the Opposition is over there.

Senator Gigantès: I beg your pardon. May I ask the Leader of the Government, who performs his duties with great lightness of foot, if I may say so, whether I heard him correctly when he said that the general income supplement and the OAS will not be tampered with, will not be reduced?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think that my honourable friend has it right.

Senator Doody: Another first.

Senator Gigantès: If that is the case, and regardless of the income of the people who now receive the old age supplement—

Senator Doody: You are still eligible.

Senator Gigantès: —regardless of income, then why should it be considered non-discriminatory to cut benefits other people receive on the basis of income, as the Leader of the Government suggested earlier?

To be more specific, there are 2,019,000 families and unattached individuals with incomes over $40,000. Of those, 46 per cent, or 934,800 families, have children and they receive allowances, or some sort of tax benefit, for those children. If those benefits are cut from them, regardless of income, will they not be discriminated against when people who have no children will not receive similar cuts in their take-home pay after taxes?

● (1450)

Senator Roblin: My honourable friend is suggesting a new theory of taxation and I am sure that we will be glad to take it into account one of these days.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Watch out!

Senator Gigantès: I thank the Leader of the Government for his broad-mindedness. While he is at it, I wonder if he would consider reading a book by Robert Kuttner entitled: "The Economic Illusion, False Choices Between Prosperity and Social Justice."

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Read it yourself.

Senator Gigantès: Is the Leader of the Government aware of the fact that the countries that have been the most generous with social services are those that have done best economically, and those that have been most stingy with social services are those that have done worst economically?

Senator Roblin: I wonder if my honourable friend addressed the same question to his colleagues when they were part of the government.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Order! Order!

I think that Senator Gigantès should give other senators an opportunity to ask questions. I now recognize Senator Fairbairn but I will give Senator Gigantès an opportunity to ask his supplementaries later.

Senator Gigantès: You will give me that opportunity later?

Senator Flynn: We want a rest.

Senator Gigantès: May I ask a question about Your Honour's decision?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Go ahead.

Senator Gigantès: I thought the number of supplementary questions a senator could ask was unlimited.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Gigantès: If I am wrong, please say so and I will accept your decision.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I should like to make a comment on that point. This chamber operates on the basis of self-discipline and on the basis of self-policing. We do not have a policeman in the Chair, as they do in the House of Commons, to direct what we shall do, but the genius of our system is contained in the words "self-control" and "self-policing."

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): So far we agree with you.

Senator Roblin: If we do not exercise some self-discipline ourselves, then we have only ourselves to blame when we get into unpleasant situations. I ask honourable senators to keep that fact in mind. In the House of Commons one is not allowed to ask supplementary questions indefinitely. One asks one question as a rule but here the rule is much more lax. I think that honourable senators have to exercise a certain degree of self-discipline in the operation of that privilege.

Senator Frith: What does that mean?

Senator Gigantès: Would the Leader of the Government please define what he means by an unpleasant situation? We are talking politely. He just said that we should restrict our questions so as not to create an unpleasant situation. What is the unpleasant situation to which he is referring?

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. Under our rules, when two senators rise it is up to the Speaker to decide to whom he gives the floor. In this case he gave the floor to Senator Fairbairn. Elementary politeness would require Senator Gigantès to sit down.

Senator Frith: However, on that same point of order, what Senator Flynn says is quite right, that if two senators rise at the same time the Speaker is expected to choose the senator he recognizes, but that has nothing to do with self-discipline or anything else he said. If another senator rises at the same time, the Speaker usually allows the first senator recognized to continue with supplementary questions. If he does not, that is his decision, but, in any event, that has nothing to do with Senator Gigantès' right to go on with a supplementary question.

Senator Flynn: I do not agree with that. When the Speaker recognizes a senator, others who have risen at the same time have to sit down. Senator Gigantès refused to sit down.

Senator Frith: No, he did not.

Senator Flynn: Senator Gigantès was insisting that he should have the floor, despite the fact that the Speaker had recognized Senator Fairbairn. When one senator is speaking another one has to remain seated.

Senator Frith: Let us get this straight. What in fact happened was that before that was resolved or before Senator Gigantès did anything, the Leader of the Government rose and gave us a chat about how Question Period should operate. Now the question is that if the Speaker knows—and it is entirely within his discretion—that the senator who had been speaking wants to go on with supplementary questions, it is up to the Speaker to decide whether or not he should. In any event, the said first senator can rise and continue with his supplementaries after, if he wishes.

Senator Flynn: Yes, but that is not the case.

Senator Frith: In any event, it is up to the Speaker.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I do not want to police Question Period. I think that every senator should have an opportunity to put his questions. If a senator asks three or four supplementaries, I believe that I have the right to recognize another senator who rises at the same time. I cannot recognize Senator Gigantès for ten supplementaries. In any event, honourable senators are the masters of the rules; I am your humble servant.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I think we should try to straighten this matter out now. It seems to me that if a senator is asking questions in Question Period and wants to proceed with supplementary questions, I know that—and I have seen Your Honour do this—when another senator rises Your Honour may recognize the other senator, but realizing that the first senator wanted to ask a supplementary you will let the first senator continue with the supplementary. I submit, with respect, that that is the best way to proceed and it is possible that Your Honour did not notice that Senator Gigantès wanted to go on with his supplementaries, in which case it is quite understandable. But, normally, as I have observed, Your Honour has always said, “I am sorry. Proceed with your supplementary.” Of course, we will abide by Your Honour’s ruling as to whether or not you want Senator Gigantès to ask his supplementaries after Senator Fairbairn.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, as I understand the practice in the Senate, when a senator asks a question and has the floor, it is assumed and agreed that that senator has the right to ask a supplementary question, a further supplementary question, and even a further supplementary question—and without limit. That is our practice. As the Leader of the Government said, it is a self-disciplinary process. I have not seen a Speaker interfere with a senator who already has the floor and continues with his supplementaries. I think it is a question of the judgment of the individual senator, and I feel it would be a mistake if we agreed that the Speaker at some point should not allow a senator to continue with his supplementary questions and would recognize another senator. I have been here for many years and, in my opinion, Senator Gigantès has the right to continue his supplementary questions.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: I do not agree with Senator Argue because the only rule on that point states that when two senators rise at the same time, it is up to the Speaker to decide who is recognized. If the Speaker allows someone like Senator Gigantès to behave the way he is now behaving, it could result in a closure on the rest of the Senate. Senator Gigantès could monopolize Question Period, and that is why the Speaker can intervene, especially when many senators have been trying to be recognized by the Speaker. That is the only rule that we have, except for self-discipline as indicated by the Leader of the Government.

Senator Gigantès: I rise on a point of privilege, Your Honour. Senator Flynn, who gave me valued advice on good manners, has said that if one allowed a senator to behave the way I behaved then the consequences for the Senate would be dire. I should like Senator Flynn, with your permission, Your Honour, to explain what I did this afternoon that he considers puts the decorum for the proper functioning of the Senate in any state of jeopardy.

Senator Flynn: I will say it to Senator Gigantès in private.

Senator Gigantès: Your Honour, the criticism was made in public and I would like my question to Senator Flynn answered, and I should also like the Leader of the Government to explain to me what he meant by the words “an unpleasant situation.” When somebody makes a remark in public and an explanation is asked for that remark, I do not think that he should give his explanation in private. It is on record that Senator Flynn said that I behaved badly. I think it is my right to hear what I did this afternoon which he considers bad behaviour.

Senator Flynn: I do not think Senator Gigantès can put a question to me, but he can raise a question of privilege. My point of order was on the fact that he stood when the Speaker recognized Senator Fairbairn and Senator Gigantès did not take his seat. He tried to impose his will on the Speaker.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

• (1500)

Senator Gigantès: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that at no time did it pass through my mind to impose my will on you. I always accept your ruling.

The reason I did not hear you recognize Senator Fairbairn was that, at the time, honourable senators on the government side were making so much noise that it was impossible to hear.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I accept the reasons given by Senator Gigantès, and as a reward, I will allow him another supplementary.

Senator Gigantès: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Honourable senators, I would like to continue along the same lines as my previous questions.

It seems to me that we are dealing with the premise that cutbacks generate unemployment and loss of income. I would like to ask the Leader of the Government whether he agrees with the following: If a Canadian who is employed and earns about $20,000 is suddenly laid off as a result of government cutbacks, he stops paying $2,200 in income tax and starts drawing $8,900 in unemployment insurance benefits and is therefore a net burden on the state. Furthermore, this is not only a loss of revenue for the state, it also means a $10,000 increase in the deficit. The same individual has $12,000 less to spend, multiplied by two and a half which means $30,000 that does not go into the pockets of entrepreneurs every time government cutbacks put one Canadian out of work. Would the Leader of the Government care to comment on these economic principles?

[English]

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I believe my honourable friend wants me to enter into debate with him on questions of social and economic policy during Question Period. I decline to do so.

Hon. H. A. Olson: I do not blame you.

Senator Frith: Not necessarily for the reasons one may think.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I should like to revert to the question of old age pensions and the remarks made by the Leader of the Government that old age pensions will continue to be received by Canadians under the same terms and conditions that they are currently received.

If that is the case, can we now disregard the comments made last week by the Minister of Finance when he said upper- and middle-income social programs cannot be afforded today?

Senator Roblin: I think my honourable friend will have to take my statement at its face value. I believe it to be correct.

INDIAN ACT

STATUS OF WOMEN—REMOVAL OF DISCRIMINATORY PROVISIONS

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, pursuing my previous question, I should like to ask a supplementary on the subject of discrimination against Indian women as it presently exists in the Indian Act, which deprives them of not only housing and the use of land on reservations but also access to health, welfare, education privileges and royalty benefits.

During the federal-provincial conference on aboriginal rights, Indian women met with the Minister of Justice. The minister has apparently clouded this issue of discrimination by saying that this matter is one of Indian rights and not a matter of gender equality.

Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate clarify, this afternoon if possible, this distinction and the confusion which arose during the meeting between Indian women of Canada and the Minister of Justice?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe my honourable friend is referring to a problem that is of some considerable standing.

As I recall, during the last session of Parliament, the Senate was responsible for rejecting the bill in connection with the rights of Indian women on the very grounds my honourable friend mentions, and that is that there was not agreement as to whether the cultural rights or the legal rights should have preference in this matter. This is not a new question. In fact, the Senate was seized of the issue and decided not to proceed with the bill, so, obviously, we did not have clear vision of the matter.

[Senator Gigantès.]

To answer my honourable friend's question, I believe my original answer to his first question applies also to this one.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

OVERSEAS DISTRIBUTION OF SUMMARY OF GLOBE AND MAIL ITEMS

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate who, no doubt, is aware that, starting last Monday, the Department of External Affairs is sending a daily summary of the Globe and Mail over telex machines to its embassies and consulates around the world. Summaries are collected on a computer in Ottawa from InfoGlobe, the Globe and Mail's on-line data base, and from there the news is dispatched over telex lines to about 120 foreign posts.

I have a series of questions: Why is the summary taken from the Globe and Mail? Why is it not taken from the Toronto Sun, which is equally friendly to the government party? Why is it not taken from the Toronto Star? Why not Senator Roblin's own Winnipeg Free Press?

I am certainly on record as being extremely critical of the Globe and Mail's election coverage. It seems to me that the Globe and Mail and the Conservative Party have now gone much further—they have gone to City Hall. Am I to assume that the Globe and Mail is now the official house organ of the Progressive Conservative Party?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): My honourable friend can make any assumptions he likes; I am not in charge of them.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: I think they are in charge of you.

Senator Roblin: I doubt that; I am capable of making my own assumptions which are just as interesting as the one my honourable friend is making. However, in my present situation, it is not my responsibility to make assumptions; it is to try to answer questions.

I would anticipate my honourable friend by saying that, if he wants to know why the Toronto Star is not included in the selection of newspapers to be telexed to embassies abroad, I will try to find out what the answer is.

Senator Davey: Honourable senators, I am not only interested in why the Toronto Star, the Toronto Sun and, indeed, the Winnipeg Free Press are not included; I should like to know why, specifically, the Globe and Mail was chosen.

As a supplementary question, I am informed that what is telexed is the first two paragraphs of front-page stories and editorials. Since the first two paragraphs of most Globe and Mail editorials do not come to any point, I should like to know why they are being sent.

Honourable senators, I am not being flippant. My question is a serious one. I should like to know if the Globe and Mail has become the official house organ of the Conservative Party.

I should also like to know how much this service is costing the taxpayers of Canada.

As I understand it, the distribution of newspapers from across the country is a service which has been provided to ministers, deputy ministers and diplomats for some years. Is this service being replaced?

Honourable senators, I know there is a love affair with the Globe and Mail, but I think these are important questions which deserve Senator Roblin's attention.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I do not have the Globe and Mail quite as much in the forefront of my mind as does my honourable friend. I will attempt to find out the answers to some of his questions.

While travelling abroad, I have had the opportunity to peruse the information sent to our embassies previously, and I must say the service was deplorable. It was most difficult to make any good use of the information that was sent. I am not at all surprised that someone is trying to improve on that.

However, if my honourable friend wants to find out what this service costs; why the Globe and Mail was selected; and why the first two paragraphs are referred to, I will do my best to satisfy his curiosity.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government on the same subject. I would like to ask him whether a review of the French-speaking press is sent to our various posts abroad as well as reviews of the English-speaking dailies?

[English]

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I shall have to take the question as notice, but I do not think it should be, by any means, assumed that the information from the Globe and Mail is all that is sent to our embassies. I am fairly certain in saying that that is not the case, and that the embassies receive a great deal of information—although, in my opinion, it has been hard to make much good use of it—from a wide variety of press instruments besides the Globe and Mail. I know from my experience that such material includes material from the francophone press of the country.

● (1510)

I think I can tell my honourable friend, without too much risk of being mistaken, that material from the francophone press is included in the circulation of our news to our embassies abroad, and that English-language print media other than the Globe and Mail are also represented.

Senator De Bané: Honourable senators, I am happy to realize that the Leader of the Government in the Senate has implied that a Canadian who relied only upon the Globe and Mail to be informed would be very badly misinformed.

An Hon. Senator: Either in English or in French!

Senator Roblin: I think that anyone who admits to not reading the Winnipeg Free Press is in deep trouble.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You will get coverage on that comment.

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

DIRECTOR GENERAL OF COMMUNICATIONS—TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate about a report circulated in the press and which was available here in Ottawa today to the effect that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Honourable Patricia Carney, has caused the removal of a public servant from her position in that department. I refer to Ann Jamieson, who was Director General of Communications in that department.

I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether these reports of the removal of Miss Jamieson are true. If they are true, was she removed for cause? If for cause, what cause? Can the Leader of the Government provide us with an answer tomorrow?

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have to take my friend's question as notice. I will undertake to convey his inquiry to the minister concerned. I think it unlikely that I will be able to reply by tomorrow.

Senator Austin: I would like to point out to the Leader of the Government that the newspaper reports raise a matter which must be of some seriousness and concern for the minister in question. Public servants are not discharged by ministers, and the attribution of such an action to Miss Carney must be a matter of immediate moment and one on which the Leader of the Government can inform himself quickly.

Senator Roblin: I think that one finds, on reading the press, that often it does not get the whole story, and if it does, it does not get the whole story right.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Even the Globe and Mail!

Senator Roblin: Even the Globe and Mail, and I am not saying that by way of criticism, because it is in the nature of humanity that these things happen.

I would not be surprised, if separation has taken place, to find that it has taken place in conformity with the proper procedures which govern such a matter.

My first answer to my honourable friend, however, will stand.

Senator Austin: I think, if I may say so, that the matter is of such specific concern to the minister that I would think she would want to remove any possibility of a misunderstanding regarding her behaviour and would want to do so immediately.

Senator Roblin: I will convey my honourable friend's concern.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: You seem to be very worried for her.

REQUESTS FOR ANSWERS

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Before Orders of the Day are called, may I appeal to the government leader with respect to questions I asked on December 6? Senator Roblin accepted them as written questions and undertook to provide me with delayed answers. In the spirit of goodwill that prevails at this time, might I appeal to him for a reply by tomorrow? I think my questions could be answered by making a phone call to the minister's office. I would be grateful if he were to expedite a reply to those questions.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I think it only courteous of me to reply to my honourable friend. I think that if one were to examine our record of returning answers to questions and if one were to compare it to what we have been used to, one would find we stand up very well. I even have some delayed replies to present this afternoon, if we ever get to that stage in our proceedings. But I will undertake to have a look at my honourable friend's question and see whether there is any possibility of obliging him.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in that same spirit and since tomorrow is our last day before the Christmas break, can we expect an effort to clean up most of this season's questions by the end of tomorrow's sitting? That would indeed be an attempt to improve the record which the Leader of the Government is apparently already proud of.

Senator Roblin: I think we already have improved on the record. That was not very hard to do. I see the Honourable Senator Olson shaking his head. I may be wrong; I am making no categorical statement. I am only saying to my honourable friend that we do the best we can, whether it is Christmas, Easter, the summer or Thanksgiving.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government would take note of the written questions that have been put on the order paper, particularly my question, which would be of interest to all honourable senators. It has to do with pensions. Perhaps Senator Flynn might wish to take a look at it.

Senator Roblin: I try to deal with all questions in a fair and equal manner so that no favouritism is shown.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): What a very reasonable and generous person!

Senator Roblin: I am reasonable—after all, we have been here an hour and a half on Question Period, and that is pretty good going. I am looking forward to tomorrow. I think my colleagues might be in even better form then. We will see what they have to say at that time.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT

RESEARCH SCIENTISTS—TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on November 28, 1984, by the Honourable Joseph-Philippe Guay regarding environment and research scientists. I ask that it be taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

[Senator Hastings.]

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

The (10) positions terminated were positions of Research Scientists or related to research program management.

There is no evidence to date of any staff member seeking employment outside Canada.

There is room for being optimistic that all staff will find employment in other closely related activities in the Public Service of Canada.

Environment Canada is taking all necessary steps to ensure that alternative employment is offered to surplus staff.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—ABSENCE OF CANADIAN OBSERVERS FROM ELECTION

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Next, I have a delayed answer in response to a question raised on November 29, 1984, by the Honourable Henry Hicks regarding Nicaragua and the absence of Canadian observers from elections. Since it is rather lengthy, I ask that it be taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

The Secretary of State for External Affairs was aware, before the decision was made not to send electoral observers, that Nicaragua maintains an Embassy in Ottawa. Officials of the Department of External Affairs have discussed the electoral process in Nicaragua with Embassy officials frequently as well as with Nicaraguan visitors to Canada.

However, the best method for gathering in-depth information on the electoral process has been through discussion with Nicaraguans directly involved in the development of the electoral process. The Canadian Embassy in San José, Costa Rica, has followed the process from its inception particularly through contacts with the Supreme Electoral Council.

Various officials from the Department of External Affairs, during visits to Managua over the past six months, took the opportunity to discuss the development of the electoral process.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs did not confer with the USA Administration before or during the decision-making process. Neither was he pressured by the Government of any other country on this issue.

THE ENVIRONMENT

POLLUTION—NIAGARA RIVER AND GREAT LAKES

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this delayed answer is in response to a question raised on December 5, 1984 by the Honourable Stanley Haidasz regarding review by the new government of the cancellation of the proposed toxicological centre for Guelph. This answer is also lengthy and I ask that it be taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

At this time, the Government does not intend a review of the decision to cancel the federal contribution for establishment of the Canadian Centre for Toxicology. The government's overall goal is to control the federal deficit. Cuts had to be made, because it was impossible for the federal government to continue to pay, in present circumstances, for all the activities which it would like to undertake, no matter how worthwhile.

Despite expenditure reductions, the issue of toxic chemicals remains a priority of Environment Canada, and the total government effort on toxic chemicals is not being compromised by current cuts. Activities are being rationalized to use more effectively, existing resources and expertise; the end result will be a coherent, well-focussed federal toxic chemicals program.

As recommended in the 1982 Treasury Board study of federal toxic chemicals program, an interdepartmental committee on toxic chemicals has been created to ensure a co-ordinated and effective deployment of effort in this area. The interdepartmental committee, established on April 1, 1984, under the Chairmanship of Environment Canada, has, to date, met twice, on May 30, 1984 and on October 24, 1984. That Committee is addressing the important questions of pesticides, dioxins and drinking water quality under the leadership of the federal departments of Environment, Agriculture, National Health and Welfare and Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

With regard to research in toxicology, toxicology centres already exist in Saskatoon, Montreal, and at Laval University. These and the network of toxicology expertise across Canada can be used to achieve federal government goals, while still containing expenditures.

MANITOBA

WINNIPEG—FUTURE OF ST. PAUL'S COLLEGE SITE BUILDING

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): I have another delayed answer in response to a question raised on December 11, 1984 by the Honourable Douglas D. Everett regarding Winnipeg and the future of the St. Paul's College site building. I ask that it be taken as read.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

The future use of the Building will be determined through further consultations with the province of Manitoba and representatives of the private sector. The estimated cost of the building is $32 million dollars.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before we begin Orders of the Day, we anticipated that we would ask for leave to revert to Notices of Inquiries. May we do so now?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I think not, honourable senators. Such requests with respect to matters of housekeeping are certainly permissible. This, however, is a more complicated matter and requires greater scrutiny. I think we will go through the prescribed procedures.

Senator Frith: I was not asking for anything but the prescribed procedures. Does this mean that even due Notices of Inquiries will not be permitted?

Senator Doody: They can be dealt with tomorrow.

Senator Frith: Well, that is worth noting.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): We will file that away.

Hon. Duff Roblin (Leader of the Government): Just like the closure you imposed on us. You started the game.

Senator Frith: It is a long road with no turns in it.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, rather than putting it forward as a matter to which I bring the attention of the Senate, might I, at this time, put it as a question directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate?

Hon. Jacques Flynn: No.

Senator Sinclair: I may not do that either?

Senator Roblin: No, I think we have gone past Question Period. If my honourable friend wishes to ask the question tomorrow, I will do my best to answer it for him.

Senator Sinclair: Would the government leader accept now that, should I ask for leave to draw the attention of the Senate to the matter tomorrow, leave will be granted?

Senator Flynn: Tomorrow is another day.

Senator Doody: Make your request tomorrow.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Seek and ye shall find.

Senator Frith: Oh! We are building up some useful quotes here.

Senator Roblin: You are the closure boys over there.

Senator MacEachen: Do you want any bills through before Christmas? We can adjourn, you know—

Senator Roblin: Do it.

Senator MacEachen:—without your consent.

Senator Roblin: Do it.

Senator MacEachen: We might very well do it, at the right time. We need some co-operation from you people.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS INTERPRETATION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Lowell Murray moved the third reading of Bill C-10, respecting the interpretation of Canada's international conventions relating to income tax and the Acts implementing such conventions.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Bielish, seconded by the Honourable Senator Marshall, for the second reading of the Bill C-5, intitled: "An Act to amend the Freshwater Fish Marketing Act".—(Honourable Senator Molgat).

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, first I wish to thank Senator Bielish for her thorough explanation yesterday of the proposals contained in this bill. The bill is straightforward. It provides, in a reasonable way, for an increase in the borrowing power of the corporation, and the indications are that within a year the corporation will have reached the point where it will, in fact, need that increase.

The bill is not a new one. In fact, it is rather interesting that it was introduced in the other place in April 1983, by the then Minister of Fisheries who is now a member of the Senate. I refer to the Honourable Pierre De Bané. It is also interesting to note that we have another previous Minister of Fisheries in the Senate in the person of the Honourable Roméo LeBlanc. So we are certainly not short of experts in this particular field, and I welcome both gentlemen as my colleagues in this chamber.

The corporation itself—and Senator Bielish touched on some of its history—is of particular importance to Manitoba. The impetus for creating the corporation in the first instance was largely Manitoban, and I regret that my colleague, the Leader of the Government, is not in his seat at the moment, because he was much involved in this whole affair from the beginning. At that time he was premier of the province and I sat across from him, as I do now, but then as leader of the opposition. We had some extensive debates on the question of the fishery in Manitoba.

I recognize that by overall Canadian standards the freshwater fishery of the prairie provinces is not, by comparison, of particularly great importance. Certainly the fishery on both the east and west coasts, in terms of employment, total catch, and value, far outstrip the freshwater fishery in the prairie region. However, the freshwater fishery is extremely important in those regions where it exists, and is particularly important to much of our native population, because in many instances it is their main source of revenue. Therefore, the handling of that fishery, the way it is operated, is extremely important.

Certainly in times past there were great difficulties. Hence the McIvor commission was established, which recommended the creation of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, based largely on the same principles as the Canadian Wheat Board and operated in the same way.

I recognize that it has not been satisfactory to everyone. I know that at the time it was established there was, in my opinion, some unfairness in dealing with the operators who had previously been engaged in the business. I refer to the fish packers, and so on, who were, in effect, dispossessed at that time with no compensation. That resulted in some lengthy court battles and, as a result of court decisions, payments have been made; but, in my opinion, the matter was not handled in the way that it should have been.

There appears to be, however, a serious problem now arising regarding the future of the corporation. When I read the debate that took place on this subject in the other place, I am concerned about what we might expect. I would be interested to know the government's intentions, because we have the minister in the other place, in the course of his speech on second reading, recommending that the bill be passed. His comments concerning the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation were completely complimentary. However, there was only one other speaker from the government side, namely, Mr. Nickerson, the member for the Western Arctic. I regret that our rules prevent me from quoting from Hansard, because it makes most interesting reading. Mr. Nickerson said there were only two reasons why he was voting for the bill. The first was that he is a loyal party supporter—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): He is a gentleman.

Senator Molgat:—and if his minister introduces something, he will vote for it. That was his first reason. His second reason was, "The minister told me he would break my arm if I didn't support him".

Senator Doody: He is a gentleman on that score too.

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Molgat: Those may be two very valid reasons for supporting the bill, but he goes on and declares that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation is a monstrosity. He then said, "Of course, during the election campaign it was a solemn promise of the Conservative Party". I know that after listening to my honourable friend, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, that the solemn promises made by the Progressive Conservative Party during the election do not mean a damn.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Molgat: However, Mr. Nickerson stated in the House of Commons that it was a solemn promise that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation would be completely changed and its monopoly powers removed, and that was going to happen. Therefore, I am somewhat concerned to see the minister saying, "Yes, pass the bill, the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation is doing well", and then the only other spokesman for the government saying, "Damn it, cut it out, it's terrible".

I did some further reading of Hansard of the other place—the issue of Thursday, November 8. I highly commend it to honourable senators. We find another member quoting another Progressive Conservative member in a previous debate, going back, I believe, possibly one or two years earlier. Incidentally, that member is now a cabinet minister.

An Hon. Senator: No!

Senator Molgat: Therefore, he is a man of influence within Progressive Conservative Party circles and presumably will have a great deal to say about what is going to happen to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board. The member is the Honourable Thomas Siddon, who declared in another debate that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was a communistic affair. That was his declaration, and he was all in favour of doing away with it.

Therefore, I ask: What is the government's intention? The government is asking us to pass this bill now. I intend to support it because I think the corporation requires the money. However, the spokesmen in the other place are saying that the corporation will be done away with completely, that it is a Conservative promise. I think we require more answers. I suggest that our Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee undertake a study of the freshwater fish industry.

● (1530)

I repeat, this industry is an important one in the areas where it functions. It is a critical fishery for the people who are engaged in the industry, and we simply do not wish to find ourselves six months from now with a government decision that it is going to be phased out. Certainly there are problems in the fishery. I know that my colleagues, Senator Adams and Senator Watt, have expressed concerns in the past on how the board functions in the Eastern Arctic, the only region where the Arctic char is found. There are some concerns as to whether it is functioning in the best interests of the fishermen there. I know that concerns have been expressed in my province of Manitoba regarding the whole question of rough fish and whether the corporation has put enough emphasis on the whole process of the disposal of these rough fish and the seeking of new markets. So there are a number of areas which require investigation. Therefore, I recommend that we pass the bill at this point to allow the corporation the funding it requires, and that the Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee do a special study of the freshwater fish industry in the regions where the board operates.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Either that or throw the Tory Government out, I don't know which.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I shall not intervene at great length in this debate, basically because I support the bill and since the Freshwater Fish Corporation is expected to buy the fish presented to it by the fishermen, if there is a market—and I know the efforts they have gone to to find markets—the ceiling for borrowing is too low. That being said, I support enthusiastically Senator Molgat's proposal, because the role of these crown corporations—and I shall repeat to some extent what I said about the Saltfish Corporation—is not entirely understood, particularly by people who write articles from downtown Toronto, be it in the Globe and Mail or the Toronto Star, or from downtown Montreal.

When I consider the isolated communities this crown corporation serves, and one only need look at the map of Canada from Prince Rupert in the west to Labrador in the east—this entire area above the fiftieth parallel is really a fishery spread over isolated communities—I am afraid that it is not the fishery which is referred to in some of the pious statements made by the editorial board of the Globe and Mail. In fact, the creation of this corporation with the concurrence of four provinces and the territories, with governments of different political stripe, indicates to what extent it is trying to respond to a need. The problem lies with the current legislation of the federal government and the provincial governments, because they did not adopt their own child. Some provinces have afforded themselves—indeed, this is reflected in the comments of Senator Molgat—an ambivalent attitude where they are for the corporation but they are also for those who do not really need it because they happen to live close to heavily populated centres. I suspect that the malaise that is reflected in the Winnipeg area reflects the very essence of this problem. One need only look at the record of this crown corporation to resist the temptation to get involved in a holy crusade against crown corporations as representing inevitable sin. The reality is that those who are benefiting from this corporation do not have a voice to defend them and, perhaps, it is for that reason that I felt a need to intervene. There is also the fact that in this case the provincial governments tend to see the Freshwater Fish Corporation as a social agency which was supposed to deal with certain problems, particularly those of the northern prairie areas, and other problems which had nothing to do with fish but with the absence of other sources of income. Considering the difficulties of transportation these fishermen face, the difficulties of marketing and the extraordinary problems of a limited resource—and it is a limited resource in the northern prairies—I think the record of this corporation is one in which all governments, provincial and federal, can justifiably take pride.

I was looking at the percentages of return on the fish dollar to the fishermen and I was quite surprised, as, I am sure, will be my friends from Newfoundland, that, in fact, the two crown corporations have been returning a larger percentage of the dollar they collect from the marketplace to the fishermen than most private commercial enterprises have succeeded in doing. Sometimes we speak of these institutions in abstract terms. I would like to single out a number of people who took the corporation in a time of crisis and restored it to a position of confidence. In particular I am thinking of Fernand Doucet and Peter Moss, a businessman from Winnipeg who took time from his own business to work for the fishermen of the area. By having fishermen participate on the board, these gentlemen established a precedent that even automobile companies are imitating today. I hope that we will have an occasion to discuss the issue of fish marketing. As long as Canadian fishermen are dependent on the present structure and as long as there are these vague theological arguments about re-organizing the marketplace in terms of the return to Canadian fishermen, I think we will see a disorganized fishery which, unhappily, has already lasted too long. I hope we have a chance to go into these issues again.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: Honourable senators, the last thing I thought I would do today would be to embroil myself in this debate. I was a member of the Government of Saskatchewan when we signed the agreement to join the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board. We were coerced into it and, for the most part, it has been a disaster for the fishermen of Northern Saskatchewan. The board has operated like most government operated marketing boards in that the law of supply and demand is ignored. Most of the fishermen are Indians and they have been baffled ever since this system was established. I shall support this bill but I hope that we do as Senator Molgat suggested and refer the matter to the Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry Committee for study. Certainly, the board has not been an unqualified success and I am not even sure whether it has been to any extent a success. Perhaps the committee should be allowed to determine whether the board should be reorganized or whether the industry should revert to the way it was, with the free market system and the laws of supply and demand, which had an influence on whether or not the fishermen would fish. They then changed the whole thing and we wanted to pull out of it. In fact, three or four times the Government of Saskatchewan has wanted to pull out of it; however, they have not done so to date. I would like the whole matter studied to see whether or not it has been a success or a dismal failure. A great many fishermen seem to think it has been the latter. Therefore, I would like to see the matter studied further.

● (1540)

Hon. Willie Adams: Honourable senators, I would like to make a comment or two with respect to this subject since Senator Molgat mentioned me in his speech. We do not have that many different kinds of fish in the Northwest Territories. We do have the Arctic char with which everyone is familiar.

Approximately five or six years ago I was a member of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. That was before I was appointed to the Senate. At that time I was especially concerned about the export of Arctic char from the Territories down to the market in the south. The market consisted largely of large supermarkets, mainly Safeway, and some restaurants. It seemed that some people were concerned that there was a monopoly with respect to the Arctic char in terms of its being shipped from the north to the south. The Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation seemed to have control over the fishermen in the community, especially those in some of the co-operatives. I would like to see this bill referred to a committee of the Senate so that the committee might consider this issue. Perhaps the committee could discuss the problems with respect to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, especially in reference to Arctic char. People concerned with the transportation of the fish to the southern market could perhaps make their points of view known. Transportation is a costly venture when shipping from the north. At this point in time, the market is controlled via Winnipeg. Anyone who wishes to buy the product can buy from Montreal, Ottawa or Toronto, yet everything is controlled by Winnipeg.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words on this subject as well. So far, everyone who has spoken on second reading of Bill C-5 has suggested that it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry.

Senator Molgat indicated that the senator from the western Arctic made some statements with respect to the subject which are out of the ordinary. I can only say this shows the freedom in the Progressive Conservative Party with respect to anybody saying what they think they should say, since they come from different parts of the country. This is the second debate we have had in the past week which has dealt with the fisheries. Even as far back as seven years ago I felt more attention should be paid to the fishery on a national basis. In that respect we now have the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry.

I am always able to agree with Senator LeBlanc. In fact, I used to agree with him when I was in the opposition in the other place.

The problem with respect to marketing has always been a serious one. Indeed, I intend to introduce a motion tomorrow dealing with this subject. In fact, I have it here before me. I wanted to check it with the deputy leader before introducing it to see if it covered everything. I have also discussed it with Senator LeBlanc and Senator De Bané in order to see how they feel about it. I wanted to make sure it covers the problems we feel exist in the fishery. If I were given leave to revert to motions I could probably introduce it now. However, I will read it and introduce it tomorrow as planned.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): We could give leave to revert. We do not do it that way; that is not the way we play the game.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): This is the magnanimity we have been hoping to see since we came in here.

Senator Marshall: If I may introduce it now, I will do so.

Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday, January 22, 1985, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to examine and report upon all aspects of the marketing of fish in Canada and all implications thereof;

That the Committee have power to travel from place to place in Canada; and

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel, technical and clerical and other personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, could I be permitted now to introduce a motion since we have reverted—

Senator Doody: Perhaps we could wait until we have finished the debate on second reading.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, we have listened to the opposition, and as chairman of the committee I am authorized to introduce the motion which I have. I am sure—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Order, please. We will have to finish second reading of the bill before us. Once that is done, if you wish to introduce your motion you will have to ask for permission to do so.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, I will allow the sponsor of the bill to sum up.

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, one of the first acts of the Clark government in 1979 was to put an end to the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation. They started the process by consulting the different players involved. They told them of their intention to put an end to the organization. It took a long time for the Clark government to realize there was near unanimity on the part of the three players concerned to maintain the organization. I am referring to the provincial governments, the processing sector and the fishermen. The reason is very simple to understand. The distance between the different lakes in the western provinces is great. The same is true with respect to the Territories. These lakes are far from markets which are, essentially, the United States and, more particularly, New York. Having one organization for the processing and marketing of these fish seems to those who established the corporation as being the most cost effective way of harvesting and selling the product. One does not have to be an expert to realize that any other setup would increase the costs to all concerned. This is the reason why the Conservative government headed by Mr. Clark in 1979 reversed its position and did not put an end to the corporation.

Study after study has shown that except for very few companies in Canada most of the hundreds of processing companies are too small to have an orderly and systematic marketing approach. They do not harvest for market. If we speak about the Freshwater Fish Market Corporation we realize that the fishermen of Ontario have not joined the organization. We will also realize that the organization is not a price-maker on the New York market but, rather, a price-taker. Only when the fishermen who deal with freshwater fish join together will they realize that they have some clout in the market.

• (1550)

There is nobody today in Canada who disputes the decision taken by the Bennett government in the 1930s when they established the Canadian Wheat Board.

Hon. D. G. Steuart: I know a few.

Senator De Bané: I also know a few, Senator Steuart, but you who are from Saskatchewan are a lot more knowledgeable than I am. Surely you would agree with me that over 90 per cent of our wheat farmers in the west today do not dispute the usefulness of the Wheat Board.

Senator Steuart: I wouldn't put it quite that high.

Senator De Bané: The individual farmer does not have the knowledge of the market that the Canadian Wheat Board has. Secondly, it would be difficult to achieve on an individual basis the orderly marketing that the Wheat Board can achieve. The Wheat Board today sells to approximately 95 countries around the world. The Canadian Wheat Board has a name, has a grade system and when the Wheat Board says to any one of those 95 countries, "We are selling such and such a wheat at such and such a price," it is taken seriously. This is the reason why very few wheat farmers among the thousands operating today would dispute the wheat board system. A system, might I add, that belongs to and is financed 100 per cent by the wheat farmers themselves.

It is a pity that such a system has not been established for fresh water fishermen. The Ontario fishermen have not joined and, very often, their selling tactics have had a depressing effect on the prices in New York, to the detriment of the fisherman who participates, along with the three levels of government, in the Freshwater Fish Corporation. Let us remind ourselves of whom we are talking here. Most of the fishermen are Indians and are amongst the poorest Canadians. If they did not have that organization to help them reduce their costs by concentrating the processing in a few plants and by doing the marketing, backed by the guarantee of the Government of Canada, I am absolutely confident that they would not have achieved the results that they have achieved. It was, therefore, not surprising to me that my predecessor as Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Honourable James McGrath, after having done some in-depth polling of the participants, came to the same conclusion. I am also very happy that Senator Marshall has suggested that a selected group of senators focus on the issue of marketing of fish in Canada.

Very little of the fish harvested in Canada is consumed in Canada. Most of it is sold abroad and our major competitors do have very powerful marketing organizations. In my opinion, it is time that the hundreds of small producers in Canada, if they so wish, have the same instruments at their disposal as Canadians in other renewable resource areas, namely the milk producers, the egg producers, the wheat farmers et cetera. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Martha P. Bielish: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Bielish speaks now, her speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Bielish: Honourable senators, as sponsor of this bill, I would like to thank all of the senators who contributed to the debate, and particularly the two former ministers of fisheries who furnished a great deal of information with respect to the subject under debate.

I am also pleased to be part of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry. I think that this bill has generated sufficient interest for this committee to undertake a very worthwhile study.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL POLICIES

GOVERNMENT STATEMENTS—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Inquiries:

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, December 20, I shall call the attention of the Senate to the growing concern, even in some cases fear, arising from the contradictory government statements on economic and social policy.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE TO STUDY FISH MARKETING IN CANADA

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday, January 22, 1985, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to examine and report upon all aspects of the marketing of fish in Canada, and all implications thereof;

That the Committee have power to travel from place to place in Canada; and

That the Committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Lowell Murray, Chairman, Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a) moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit while the Senate is sitting today and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might impose upon the prevailing good humour in the chamber to make a plea on behalf of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for permission to sit while the Senate is sitting today. I might say, by way of explanation, that the committee had been scheduled to sit today when the Senate rises. It appears that there is still a fair amount of business on the order paper of the Senate, and the committee would be obliged to commence its meeting rather late this afternoon as a consequence.

We have several witnesses waiting to be heard by the committee, and at least one or two honourable senators have indicated that they have travel arrangements for late this afternoon or early evening which would prevent them attending a meeting of the committee if that meeting were delayed much longer.

I would therefore ask that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be given permission to sit today while the Senate is sitting.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN EXTRATERRITORIAL MEASURES BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, seconded by the Honourable Senator Murray, for the second reading of the Bill C-14, intituled: "An Act to authorize the making of orders relating to the production of records and the giving of information for the purposes of proceedings in foreign tribunals, relating to measures of foreign states or foreign tribunals affecting international trade or commerce and in respect of the recognition and enforcement in Canada of certain foreign judgments obtained in antitrust proceedings".—(Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.).

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I certainly do not intend to oppose this bill. The bill has been under consideration for a long period of time. It was prepared by the former government and introduced in the House of Commons and is intended to deal with one aspect of the broad question of extraterritoriality. It is that concept upon which I should like to make some comments this afternoon.

I believe that the introduction of Bill C-14 by the current government introduces a note of realism into the management of our affairs with the United States. It is clear that the government acknowledges, even indirectly through this bill, that it requires more than expressions of friendship and statements of amiability—it requires more than those—to protect Canadian interests when the United States moves, as it does, to exercise jurisdiction over Canadian corporations and Canadian individuals. So, that note of realism is welcome, and is embodied in this legislation and will help Canadian citizens and corporations to run their own economic affairs.

The origin of this problem, of course, is not in Canada; it originates principally in the United States with attempts to apply its laws and policies to Canadian citizens and Canadian corporations, sometimes in order to displace Canadian law, sometimes to oppose Canadian law, and sometimes to regulate conduct where there is no existing Canadian law.

Senator Nurgitz, who introduced the bill, said the term “extraterritoriality” was not necessarily a pejorative term. I believe that in international law it is not a pejorative term, though United States authorities, in their discussions with Canadian officials and ministers, often prefer to use the expression “conflicting jurisdiction”, or “conflicting requirements.”

I should say that during a number of discussions I held with Mr. Shultz the question of extraterritoriality was a principal subject of discussion, and various efforts were made to manage the abuse of “extraterritoriality” through bi-lateral arrangements, such as those referred to by the honourable senator in antitrust matters, and in criminal law enforcement. These are quite useful devices in areas where there is agreement between the two governments with respect to policy objectives. It is obviously necessary to continue in these and other fields, co-operative efforts with the United States to secure the resolution of difficulties.

It is interesting to cite a number of cases illustrating how the jurisdiction of the United States does reach into Canada. Senator Nurgitz referred to the Bank of Nova Scotia case, which is a classic case in its own right; he also referred to the Siberian pipeline situation, which I should like to comment more upon later. Those are two cases which hit directly on the subject of extraterritoriality.

A year or so ago I was made aware of a Canadian firm located in Winnipeg which was visited by a United States customs official who told that firm that it was in violation of United States export and licensing requirements. There was no disposition on the part of the United States official to go through Canadian channels—at least not through diplomatic channels; he felt that it was strictly a relationship between the United States government and the Canadian firm. Subsequent to the visit, the Canadian firm was subpoenaed through its United States office to provide its records over a five-year period. It was extraordinary that that could occur.

In another case which was reported—not a related case—in the Globe and Mail a Canadian company instructed its purchasers that, with respect to possible re-export of purchases, the company resident in Canada and operating in Canada, and purchasers of its products would be subject to United States re-export controls. These are not cases in the mist of time; they are contemporary cases. It is no wonder that Canadians became highly incensed and indignant at the thought that American officials should feel a right to direct the affairs of Canadian citizens and Canadian corporations, even if in some cases the Canadian firms were subsidiaries of parent companies located in the United States. No wonder that action was taken and no wonder that the bill was passed quickly in the House of Commons. I think this serves as an occasion for both houses to remind our friends and neighbours in the United States that this is a serious question for Canadians, and that it requires not only legal responses, such as is being provided for through this bill, but also political responses, because the United States does use its doctrine of extraterritoriality to enforce, for example, its foreign policy.

The Siberian pipeline case is a clear example of that. Following the invocation of martial law in Poland, the President of the United States imposed sanctions by regulation under the Export Administration Act. In the first case, those sanctions required U.S. firms to obtain government licences for sales to the Soviet Union of equipment or technology for the transmission or refining of oil and natural gas. As I said, that was the first stage, and that took place in December, 1981.

In June, 1982, the regulations were amended to prohibit foreign subsidiaries of U.S. firms from selling the same equipment and technology, and to prohibit overseas firms from selling to the Soviet Union those products made under U.S. licence.

That was a very far-reaching step taken by the United States. No wonder that political leaders in Europe were shaken, possibly for the first time, at the prospect of the United States having the capacity to exercise such influence on firms located in their countries with a view of implementing the foreign policy of the United States.

● (1610)

As we know, at that time east-west economic relations were a matter of deep concern to the President of the United States and, undoubtedly, the purpose of these regulations and sanctions was to disadvantage the Soviet Union. Of course, there was an outcry in Europe. It caused great sourness within the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and it was at a meeting in Canada of NATO foreign ministers that Mr. Shultz took the first steps to broaden the discussion of east-west economic relations and to elicit from his colleagues an agreement that there would not be trade in strategic goods with the Soviet Union, and that each country would be very careful that trade which would be to the strategic advantage of the Soviet Union, would not take place.

It was as a result of that particular astute and skillful effort on the part of the United States Foreign Secretary that, subsequently, the President of the United States revoked the regulations as they applied to Europe and to Canada and restored a degree of harmony on the question of east-west economic relations among the North Atlantic Treaty Organization allies.

Honourable senators, this is a rather significant issue for all of us. It has been an issue for Canada for a long time. It is now more of an issue for Europeans and, certainly, it was the Siberian pipeline case which brought the matter home forcibly to the United Kingdom. That led to a number of efforts to resolve the question of extraterritoriality to which I shall refer later.

In his statement, the sponsoring senator made an interesting comment when he said, "The United States, while wishing to minimize conflicts with Canada and other countries, reserves the right to continue the extraterritorial enforcement of its laws and policies as it deems necessary." That is the policy of the United States, and no one can be satisfied with that policy.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Except the Americans.

Senator MacEachen: Of course, except the United States. Certainly, Canada cannot be satisfied with that attitude of the United States. This bill does not remove that attitude; it does not close off the numerous ways in which the United States, through its economic power and political influence, can exercise its will in other countries. Senator Nurgitz is right: The United States reserves the right to continue the extraterritorial enforcement of its laws and policies as it deems necessary. That means that Canada, as do other countries, has to be on the alert; to conduct a continuing dialogue with the United States; and to impress upon them the political consequences of a continued policy of extraterritorial reach.

Honourable senators, the United States has not in any way withdrawn from this policy; in fact, it seems to believe that extraterritoriality is inherent in international relations; and that where, among friendly countries, there are conflicts, they ought to be solved by notification, consultation and, indeed, by the adoption of common policies. Of course, when the words "common policies" are used with respect to relations between Canada and the United States, it would probably mean the adoption by Canada of United States policies which, for us, at this time, maybe contrary to our national interest; our sovereignty; our pride in our own country; and to our ability as a country to run our own show.

Honourable senators, since I am not a lawyer, I hesitate, in the presence of so many distinguished lawyers in this chamber, to raise legal questions, but I want to engage the attention of those lawyers who might be able to pursue this question further. The United States has used legal tools, such as the Export Administration Act, and its administration, to attain its political and economic objectives. It has not faced up to the question that, in the view of many—including Canada—the exercise of extraterritorial jurisdiction is contrary to international law. That is the view of the Minister of Justice. I do not say, as the senator said so carefully, it is contrary to international law in all cases. For example, Canada, I understand, would reserve the right to collect taxes from a Canadian national in another country, which is an expression of extraterritorial jurisdiction. However, in the advice I consistently received as a minister, international law itself constituted a challenge to the exercise of extraterritorial jurisdiction by the United States.

I understand that, because of these difficulties, the United States has sought to avoid discussion of the legal principles involved. Indeed, I am told that the United States Supreme Court has refused to entertain cases where the principle of extraterritoriality is to be examined.

Honourable senators, what do we do in the face of that? We continue to do what we are doing in this bill; we continue to have political discussions with the United States; and we continue to raise the legal concepts involved in this particular matter.

Honourable senators, in the Committee of Investment and Multinational Enterprise of the OECD, an effort was underway to undertake a study of the underlying legal concepts in the question of extraterritoriality by the ministers of the OECD. I believe that is a good idea, because it obligates the United States and other countries with extraterritorial reach to examine, with other countries, in a multilateral forum, the concepts involved.

When I began to review this matter, I was tempted to ask my colleagues to agree to a motion to have this bill referred to committee so that we could ask some of these questions. I do not insist on that. I believe that Senator Nurgitz will be prepared to provide me with information on a number of points that I should like to raise. The first is: What is the situation now at the OECD? Are we pressing, as a country, to have the underlying concepts examined, and, indeed, possibly to have some guidelines established through the OECD and through the vehicle of the Committee on Investment and Multinational Enterprises?

● (1620)

I am told, as I said earlier, that the United States government is not enthusiastic about addressing the legal aspects of extraterritoriality. I understand that an institution which is quite powerful in this field is the American Law Institute and that it has produced, and does produce, from time to time what is called a Restatement of U.S. Foreign Relations Law. I understand that it is about the single most authoritative institution in the United States where those ideas can be pushed. I am told that in the Cayman and Bahamian case, affecting the Bank of Nova Scotia, the lawyers of the government relied upon the work of the American Law Institute and its restatement of U.S. foreign relations law in building up the case. At one time it was suggested that the Canadian government, through the Department of External Affairs, make a submission on this question to the American Law Institute. I do not know what has happened to that, whether it has been carried forward, or whether it might be regarded as an intrusion into a discussion of American law. I want to know whether that has been followed up and what we say about it.

Finally, honourable senators, there is the question of the Export Administration Act. I believe that Senator Nurgitz placed proper emphasis on exports and export controls. We all know of the debate that was held in the United States Congress and Senate to have a renewal of the Export Administration Act. As I understand it, they have not yet renewed the act because of the recent U.S. presidential election, and because of disagreements between the two legislative branches. But we do know that the proposals for renewal that were before the United States legislative authorities earlier in the year, were a matter of great concern to the Canadian government. At that time I made a short statement, which I propose to read, because it synthesizes the reasons for the concern. The statement said:

Proposals for the renewal of the current Export Administration Act would reassert U.S. authority to control the export activities of foreign subsidiaries, of U.S. multinational enterprises and nationals residing abroad, as persons subject to U.S. jurisdiction.

These proposals also assert the authority to control the export or re-export of U.S. origin goods and technology, even if in the possession of foreign licencees or others who are not subject to U.S. jurisdiction.

In addition, the Senate bill contains a provision to enforce national security controls in an extraterritorial manner through import controls.

I believe we must keep our eye on that. I should like to know whether we are still watching this through the government and whether I am correct in saying that it has not yet been passed. Certainly the issue will be raised, because, as Senator Nurgitz has said, the United States reserves the right to continue the extraterritorial enforcement of its laws and policies as it deems necessary. That was certainly reflected earlier this year in the provisions of the Export Administration Act.

My purpose in speaking to this bill is to support it, because it will provide us with additional tools to protect our own economic interest, to protect our sovereignty, to accept our responsibilities as a sovereign nation. But I wished also to raise the general question of extraterritoriality within the context of Canada-U.S. relations. As I lay these facts on the table, it is not my intention in any way to sour the discussions between Canada and the United States. Quite the contrary. I have said these things directly to American authorities on behalf of Canada, and we have to continue to say to them both as friends and partners, that we have real concerns about the reach which they aspire to have on the activities and conduct in our country. We can do a lot through bilateral discussions, through persuasion and through convincing our American friends that this is something that we dislike very much and that we want to have resolved over time, so that this important irritant—and it has been an important irritant; it has cropped up again and again—this important cause of difficulty between our two countries can be permanently removed through the exercise of the statesmanship which we now expect from the new government.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): You won't be disappointed.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I wish to inform honourable senators that if Senator Nurgitz speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I was going to say that I had two compelling reasons for closing the debate, neither of which had to do with my strong party affiliation or my arms. One reason is to provide answers to questions raised yesterday by honourable senators. In addition, Senator MacEachen today raised additional questions concerning the OECD, the American Law Institute—as to whether the Canadian government has made any submissions to the institute on the question of extraterritoriality—the current status in the United States of the Export Administration Act, and Canadian monitoring of the situation. I shall be unable to be present in the chamber tomorrow, but I will undertake to have answers provided for the Leader of the Opposition to the questions he has raised. They appear to be valid questions.

In reply to the question raised yesterday by Senator Neiman as to whether a Canadian citizen resident in the United States may be subject to a section 3 order, the assumption appears to be that the person has documents under his or her control, the production of which to a U.S. court has been prohibited by the Attorney General of Canada. That means that our Attorney General has triggered the blocking mechanism.

The two situations that may be envisaged by the question are, first, that of a Canadian citizen living, say, in Washington who may have control over documents located in Canada. That is easy to foresee. An order of the Attorney General addressed to the Canadian citizen prohibiting production of the documents to a U.S. court will generally be a good defence under U.S. law against a subpoena issued in the United States. I regret that I am dealing with this question first because the answer to Senator Frith's question may have been of some help. The information provided me is that it is deemed by U.S. courts to be the "foreign government compulsion" defence. I will refer to that again later in answer to Senator Frith's question.

The second situation would arise if a Canadian citizen living in Washington had control over documents located in the United States. Could a section 3 order affect documents located in the United States? I believe that was the question raised by Senator Neiman.

I will respond by saying that subsection 3(1) of Bill C-14 requires as a triggering event the determination by the Attorney General that Canadian sovereignty has been infringed or is likely to be infringed by orders of a foreign court requiring the production of that evidence. This means that subclause 3(1) would be invoked in cases in which the foreign court exercises unacceptable extraterritorial jurisdiction. This will normally be the case when a U.S. court orders the production of documents located in Canada through a subpoena with extraterritorial scope, for example, a subpoena served on a U.S. branch of a Canadian bank for documents held in Canada, say, in the head office in Toronto. It would not ordinarily be considered an unacceptable exercise of jurisdiction for a U.S. court to order a U.S. resident to produce documents located in the U.S.A., and it is difficult to imagine many circumstances where the Attorney General would issue an order affecting a U.S. citizen.

• (1630)

However, by its terms, paragraph 3(1)(a) might potentially affect documents located outside Canada under the control of Canadian citizens or residents. It must be remembered that the object of paragraph 3(1)(a) is the prevention of the production of documents affected by a clause 3 order to a foreign court. We then get into the question of documents of which the originals are here in Canada with copies in the United States.

In any event, personal jurisdiction over the Canadian citizen or resident would have to be established, that is, the person would have to be in Canada before a prosecution could be commenced. These are the penalty provisions for failing to obey the order of the Attorney General. For any prosecution under Bill C-14 the consent of the Attorney General would be required pursuant to subclause 7(3). As indicated above, the circumstances would be rare where the Attorney General would consider it necessary to use such a broad power.

Honourable senators, I would like to deal with a question raised by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition in which he asked whether orders pursuant to Bill C-14 would be characterized as statements of policy, particularly since the Attorney General of Canada would exercise discretionary powers in triggering a blocking order. It was suggested that such characterization might have consequences in U.S. law, in that the order of the Attorney General might not provide a good defence in a U.S. court for non-compliance with that court's order.

I have in my hand the decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the second circuit in the case of United States vs. First National City Bank. It is a rather lengthy decision and I know that Senator Frith will enjoy reading it. The case does not deal with a Canadian matter but rather with a subpoena issued to the First National City Bank for the production of documents in connection with an antitrust investigation against one of its German customers. The subpoena issued in the U.S.A. related to documents located both in the U.S.A. and in Germany. As far as the documents located in Germany were concerned, the First National City Bank pleaded as a defence for non-production its potential civil liability to its customers under principles of German banking law. The court did not accept this as a good enough defence. This is a 1968 decision and was before the time the Federal Republic of Germany had blocking legislation in place. The court engaged in a balancing of the interests of the U.S.A. and the Federal Republic of Germany and said the interests of the United States were greater. Notwithstanding that, the principle of the triggering mechanism is a discretionary one and still holds true.

At this point I would like to quote the principle as stated in the American Law Institute's publication entitled "Restatement of the Law, Foreign Relations Law of the United States" which reads as follows:

The defence of foreign government compulsion is in general available only when the other state's requirements are embodied in binding laws or regulations subject to penal or other severe sanction: it is not available when the second state's orders are given in the form of guidance, informal communications, or the like.

Senator Frith: This bill does contain sanctions?

Senator Nurgitz: Yes, that is right. The bill contains sanctions and provisions for severe penalties. In answer to my honourable friend, this is the type of legislation which would provide for effective refusal.

Senator Frith: The Attorney General's order is discretionary but once he makes it the sanctions are there.

Senator Nurgitz: That is right, the sanctions apply.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Would the sponsor of the bill agree that Bill C-14 will now provide the power to exercise extraterritoriality?

Senator Nurgitz: I think that necessarily follows.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, before we deal with third reading, I take it Senator Nurgitz will try to obtain answers from officials to some of the questions posed. I wish to make it clear that we on this side of the house do not intend to block third reading of Bill C-14. Will someone try to supply the answers during the debate on third reading?

Senator Nurgitz: Yes.

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody, for the second reading of the Bill C-8, intituled: "An Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act".—(Honourable Senator Olson, P.C.).

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have read very carefully what Senator Phillips had to say with respect to Bill C-8. It is a bill the provisions of which have been introduced before with one difference. In fact, the provisions of Bill C-8 have been applicable in many cases for some months, and in some cases for many years. Thus, it is appropriate that we pass the bill. I think I speak for all members of my party when I say that we intend to support the bill for immediate passage, if that is the proper terminology.

However, there are one or two disturbing aspects to Bill C-8.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): You have thrown a long, slow curve.

Senator Olson: I can tell that Senator Doody already has a guilty conscience with respect to what they may be. I am referring to the fact that, generally, the oil industry feels betrayed by the Conservative government because of the way it is handling the petroleum and gas revenue tax, particularly now that the government has had an opportunity to deal with it, in comparison to what was promised during the election campaign.

The other disturbing factor with respect to this bill is that during the past few days when any questions have been raised and explanations sought from the Leader of the Government in the Senate with respect to this measure, his answer has consistently been, "What did you promise?" as if that were an answer to the question. We have to conclude that the Leader of the Government and his colleagues for whom he speaks are saying that what they promised during the election campaign is merely irrelevant. They seem to be saying that it does not matter now that they are in office.

● (1640)

The present Minister of Justice indicated a number of times that there were many things they were not going to reveal during the election campaign, but which they would reveal only after they were in office.

I see a former Minister of Justice shaking his head indicating that he agrees with those kinds of tactics.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I was just remembering what the Right Honourable John Turner said about cuts in the budget.

Senator Olson: Even yesterday, when the Leader of the Government in the Senate was replying to a question posed by Senator Hastings, he had this to say:

The exact position of the PGRT is at present a matter that is under consideration by the administration.

Honourable senators, he went on to state:

I imagine they are also consulting with others. Therefore, I am not able to make an announcement about the matter at the present time.

Honourable senators, we do not expect the government to make an announcement at this time; it made an announcement after it held its meeting in Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, as to what it was going to do with the PGRT as soon as it took office.

I know that the new government did not take over until September 17. We expected that the new government would take a few weeks to prepare legislation before it was brought before Parliament; that is normal. But a great deal of time has now passed, and the government has brought a bill before Parliament that does not contain any of the promises made in relation to that particular tax. Therefore, when we talk about betrayal, there is a great deal of validity in our assertions. Apparently this government does not think that it has to honour what it said prior to September 4. The Leader of the Government in the Senate verifies that day after day.

I hope that the government will restrain itself from taking that attitude, because there is another day coming. The people of Canada, and I think the people in the oil industry in particular—and I happen to be acquainted with some of them—believed that the Progressive Conservative Party was going to amend the NEP, and do various other things that would be of great advantage to them and would expand that industry to meet Canada's needs, and indeed, increase employment. Promises like that were the thrust of what the Progressive Conservative Party had to say in Alberta.

Senator Phillips really ought to explain—and I hope he has as good an explanation as he had about what is contained in the bill—why all of those undertakings are missing from this bill, since they have had the opportunity to bring them forward.

One of the standard replies is: "Wait until we have had consultations." That is what the Leader of the Government in the Senate says every five minutes during Question Period. So, I suppose the government will undertake consultations between now and the time of the next budget, but it is clear to me that the government was not confused and did not require further consultations when it made its announcement following the great western meeting held in Prince Albert. I believe the Leader of the Government in the Senate was there, as were several provincial premiers who have a keen interest in this matter.

Honourable senators, as I said, I am not going to hold up this bill because it is essentially the same as a bill that was introduced in the previous Parliament, but I think that this will be the last time Canadians, and particularly those engaged in the oil and gas industry, will tolerate this kind of betrayal—that is the word I choose to use, but one can use any term one wishes—in departing from the promises which were made prior to September 4.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Phillips speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I thank Senator Olson for his remarks. I found it rather strange that in the short space of time since the election he went from one who was a critic of the oil companies to one acting as their spokesman.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): When was he critical?

Senator Phillips: I would not be surprised—

Senator Frith: You must have meant the other Senator Olson.

Senator Phillips: —if in the New Year we find him acting as the spokesman for the CPR.

Senator Frith: You must have meant Senator Molson.

Senator Doody: Senator Molson is not here to protect himself.

Senator Frith: No, it could not have been Senator Molson.

Senator Phillips: The Honourable Senator Olson is greatly concerned about why the bill is being proceeded with at this time. The reason for introducing this bill goes back to the budget of 1983, and I am sure he does not want to be reminded of that budget, because there are many things in that budget he would like to forget.

The bill also legalizes certain changes that the previous government made, changes that were necessary because of the economic conditions at that time. Let's face it, I am sure the honourable senator really was not concerned about the oil companies at that time, but was concerned about the economy. I wish he had been more successful in that, but I will give him credit for trying.

He also expressed concern about the National Energy Policy. Well, the world will not end with this bill. There is a new year coming and a new energy policy coming. I am sure he will be delighted with both.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Phillips, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

[Translation]

PROHIBITED DEGREES OF MARRIAGE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Jacques Flynn moved that Bill S-2, to consolidate and amend the laws prohibiting marriage between related persons, be read the second time.

He said: Honourable senators, I shall be brief.

The purpose of this bill is to enable the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs to continue its study on marriage impediments. Honourable senators will recall that during the last session, with the concurrence of the House of Commons, we passed seven or eight private bills exempting individuals from the public general law relating to marriage impediments: a nephew who wanted to marry his aunt, an aunt who wanted to marry her nephew, and so forth. Every time, we approved the bills without really making any distinction between each case. I am referring especially to cases involving consanguinity.

At the time the bills were being considered, the question arose whether this practice should cease and whether we should not adopt a general law to cover all cases eligible for exemption. Last year, Senator Stanbury proposed a bill similar to the one I am presenting today, so that the committee was able to undertake a very interesting study, which it was unable to complete, on present-day impediments to marriage, and to consider whether recommendations in the form of a text for a general law could be made to the Senate and the government.

The chairman of the committee, Senator Neiman, did excellent work in this respect. The committee is prepared to continue this work, not necessarily in order to have the bill adopted in the Senate but to consider the principle of the bill and any amendments it might wish to recommend. It would be the answer to the problems we had during the last session in the specific cases we were asked to deal with.

I do not think it would serve any purpose to go into the details of the bill, because, once again, we are interested in considering the subject matter, not necessarily the principle, of this legislation.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I agree.

Senator Flynn: Actually, the bill suggests restricting impediments by reason of consanguinity in the direct or collateral line to the case of sister and brother or half-sister and half-brother. That is the minimum rule we find in most religions. We would have to see how this would be accepted by society and by religions concerned by the issue.

I think that is all I can usefully say at this time. If the Senate approves the second reading stage of this bill, for the reasons I mentioned earlier, the committee would then be able to prepare for continuing its work when we come back in January.

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I would impose on your patience for just a few moments in the hope that this bill might receive second reading today and be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

As Senator Flynn has said, that committee studied the predecessor to this bill, Bill S-13, for several months in the last session of Parliament when we heard a number of most interesting and rather provocative arguments made, both in person and in writing. These submissions have raised questions which we did not anticipate ourselves at the time we arranged for the introduction of Bill S-13 in the previous session.

One of the most interesting questions—and probably the one that is going to cause a great deal of further concern and study—is the question of adoptive relationships. As a result of some arguments already put before us, the bill was changed to remove the reference to adoptive relationships. That is not to say, however, that the committee may not again recommend that this phrase be introduced in the same or in some other fashion. We are now conscious of the fact that adoptive relationships pose a special problem.

The committee is now prepared to hear further comments and recommendations from persons and organizations who have already made submissions as well as from others such as the Children's Aid, individuals, and some geneticists who would still like to appear before us. I believe the study will be worthwhile and, we hope, in due course, to be able to bring some recommendations as to what we think the present law with respect to prohibited degrees should be forwarded to the Senate. Therefore, honourable senators, I do support this bill now, but recommend that it be sent to committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Flynn, bill referred to Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

BUDGETARY DEFICITS—COMMITTEE STUDY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Saurel), pursuant to notice of Tuesday, December 18, 1984, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the magnitude and the impact of federal budgetary deficits and the associated public debt and that it consider appropriate policies relating to these deficits;

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such professional, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the said examination; and

That the Committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Explain, please?

Senator Leblanc: Honourable senators, I would like to explain briefly why we have agreed to consider the subject mentioned in my notice.

The committee has met twice, and I want to thank you honourable senators for attending.

We have a number of items to consider this year and in the years to come, and at the meeting last Thursday, the senators present decided to deal with the item I mentioned, namely, budgetary deficits and the cumulative public debt.

To give you an idea, very briefly, of the scope of this project, the purpose of this study is to determine whether we are correct in our concern about the extent of our budgetary deficits and the public debt. In the affirmative, we could suggest a series of measures to remedy this problem. The study will include an analysis of the issue as perceived by various parties concerned: citizens, small and large business, financial institutions, universities, economic research centers, federal and provincial governments, international organizations, and so forth.

A study of this kind could also review the economic objectives to be attained by means of a budgetary deficit, to find out whether the objectives are attained and to examine other means of doing so. In turn, a number of other related subjects and problems could be considered, such as the connection between exchange rates and interest rates. Some of these questions were broached in a document produced by Senator Kenny when various projects were being considered.

In undertaking the study, the committee will be following through on the brief comments it made on the same theme when examining the 1983-84 Estimates.

On motion of Senator Kelly, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.
